The owner of the barge sued the pilot in a cty. ct., & was nonsuited on the ground that the ct. had not Admty. jurisdiction:—*Held: the nonsuit was wrong, the case not being one which the Admty. The latter has no jurisdiction to entertain an action against a pilot for damage to a ship arising from a collision caused by his negligence or want of skill, & the City of London Ct. cannot entertain such an action upon its Admty. side.—R. v. 1727. — Ship in dock.]—A collision occurred in a dock connected with the Thames by channels provided with gates & locks. An action was brought in a cty. ct. having Admty. jurisdiction in respect of damages arising out of the collision. On an application for a prohibition:—*Held: (1) the claim was within Admty. Ct. 1732. — Collision with gas buoy.]—A s.s. ran into a gas buoy & injured it. The owners of the gas buoy sued the shipowners, bringing their action in the cty. ct. in Admty. The cty. ct. judge dismissed the action, holding that he had no jurisdiction to try the case:—Held: the cty. ct. had no jurisdiction to try the case as the word "collision" in Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 3 (3), only referred to collisions between ships.—THE UPCERNE, [1912] P. 160; 81 L. J. P. 110; 107 L. T. 860; 28 T. L. R. 370; 12 Asp. M. L. C. 281.

1733. — Damage under £50.]—Cty. Cts. Admty. 1734. Damage to goods—Passengers' luggage.]—Passengers' luggage carried on board a ship is not "goods" within Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (c. 51), & the Act does not confer jurisdiction to try a claim arising out of a loss of such luggage on a cty. ct. having Admty. jurisdiction.—R. v. 1735. Necessaries—Proof of facts ousting jurisdiction—Before judgment.]—A ship being in the port of B., which was not the port to which she belonged, a suit was instituted in the cty. ct. for necessities supplied to her at B., & the ship was arrested the same day, & judgment given for the amount claimed. Afterwards the owner, who was abroad, but was a British subject domiciled in England, applied to the judge of the cty. ct. to stay proceedings, & this was refused. A motion was then made for a prohibition:—Held: in order to deprive the Admty. Ct. of the jurisdiction given to it under Admty. Ct. Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 5, & Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 3 (2), it must be shown to the ct. before it pronounced judgment that the owner was domiciled in England.—EX p. MICHAEL (1872), L. R. 7 Q. B. 658; 41 L. J. Q. 1736. — Restraining Admiralty proceedings abroad—Judge acting in bankruptcy.]—Where a judge of a cty. ct. acting under Bkcy. Ct. abroad a claim of lien on a ship (part of bkpt.'s estate) for necessities supplied abroad on orders of the master after the filing of the petition, & to direct an issue to try the matter in his ct., the ct. refused to grant a prohibition, holding that the cty. ct. had by its decision given itself jurisdiction, subject only to appeal.

The ship was a British ship, & at the time of the institution of the suit her owners were domiciled in England:—Held: the cty. ct. had no jurisdiction, as Cty. Cts. Admty. 1740. Salvage—Alternative limits of jurisdiction.]—A cty. ct. having Admty. jurisdiction under Cty. Cts. Admty. 1741. — Value for purposes of jurisdiction—Burden of proof.]—The words in M. S. Act Amendment Act, 1862 (c. 63), s. 49, determining the jurisdiction of the ct. by the value of the property saved, mean the value of the property when first brought into safety by the salvors, and not its value at any subsequent period. 1744. — Remuneration agreed.]—A plaint & summons were issued in a cty. ct. by plffs. against deft. to answer to a claim, particulars of which were annexed; the particulars being "plffs. claim £250 amount agreed to be paid by deft. to them for getting deft.'s schooner off the shore, & taking the schooner & cargo into a place of safety, the whole value of the schooner, cargo, etc., not exceeding £1,000." Deft. sought to prohibit the cty. ct. judge from proceeding with the complaint on the ground that he had no jurisdiction, as it was not a salvage claim, but an action of debt for an agreed sum above £50, & also on the ground that the proceeding ought not to have been by plaint in the cty. ct., the jurisdiction being given to the judge & not to the ct. It was not denied that the value of the property saved was under £1,000, nor that there had been salvage services:—Held: (1) the fact of there having been a sum agreed did not oust the jurisdiction of the cty. ct. judge; (2) the proceedings were proper in form.—BEADNELL (BEARDNELL) v. BEESON (1868), L. R. 3 Q. B. 439; 9 B. & S. 315; 37 L. J. Q. B. 171; 18 L. T. 401; 16 W. R. 1008; 3 Mar. L. C. 78. S. C. No. 1758, post.

1745. — Distribution.—Where a sum of money under £300 has been paid for salvage services rendered, a cty. ct. having Admty. jurisdiction has jurisdiction, in an action for distribution in case of dispute between the salvors, to apportion such sum among them, although such sum has been recovered by agreement with the owners of the salvaged property, & without action brought in the cty. cts.—THE GLANNIBANTA, No. 1740, ante.

1746. — Enforcement of bond—Jurisdiction doubtful—Leave to proceed.—As it is a matter of doubt whether the cty. cts. having Admty. jurisdiction have power to enforce salvage bonds given to receivers of wreck under M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 468, the Admty. Ct. will, on the application of a salvor in respect of whose services such a bond has been given, grant leave to proceed in the *High Ct. under Cty. Cts. 1747. — Concurrent jurisdiction.—A ship had been in distress off Yarmouth, & was saved by a vessel of that port, & a dispute arose as to salvage, £190 being asked & £150 offered. The salvor went to the cty. ct. under Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868, & the owner of the ship saved went to the JJ. under M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 460. At 12.10 on Thursday, the attorney for the salvor got a writ out of the cty. ct. & at 12.20 the writ was filed. Immediately afterwards he went to the office of the clerk of the JJ. at Yarmouth & found an application had been made to them by the attorney of the owner of the ship saved to hear the case, but it had not been exhibited to the JJ., so that they had not yet undertaken the case. The application was exhibited to them, & they assumed jurisdiction to hear the case, & in spite of a protest on the part of the other side, they proceeded to hear it, & intimated their intention to determine it upon an affidavit of the facts. On motion by the salvor for a prohibition to restrain the magistrates from proceeding to decide the case, on the ground that before the application to them the cty. ct. had jurisdiction, the ct. granted a rule nisi.—THE ANN TAYLOR (1875), *39 J. 1748. — Amount paid to shipowner—Action by master.—Where the master's share of a salvage award is received by the shipowner, the action brought by the master to recover it is a common law action for money had & received; & it should not be brought on the Admty. side of the cty. ct.—THE GLOXNIA (1901), 18 T. L. R. 227.

1749. Wages—Balance claimed—Previous proceedings.—A claim for seamen's wages, which involved a question of the master's right to disarclaimant, had been adjudicated upon by a magistrate under Merchant Seamen Act, 1844 (c. 112), s. 15. Claimant did not draw up or serve the magistrate's order:—Held: a judge of a cty. ct. was right in refusing to try an action of debt for the balance of wages brought in respect of the same matter.—R. v. POLLOCK (1852), Cox, M. & H. 585; 18 L. T. O. S. 272; 16 J. P. Jo. 116.

1750. — Payable under special contract.—A contract that a master mariner shall take a share of a fishing adventure & bear a share of certain disbursements is a contract of wages by the general law maritime, independent of M. S. Acts Amendment Act, 1873 (c. 85), s. 8; & jurisdiction over such a contract is conferred on cty. cts. having Admty. jurisdiction by Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 3.

1751. — Services rendered in port.—A ship having arrived in the port of London, which was her destination, her crew, including the mate, were paid off. The mate, after being so paid off & without signing any fresh articles for the outward voyage, remained on board by direction of the owner for the purpose of superintending the discharge of the inward cargo & the loading of a fresh cargo for the outward voyage. After the inward cargo had been discharged & a portion of the outward cargo had been shipped on board, the ship was taken into dock for repairs, & the mate continued on board by the owner's direction to superintend execution of such repairs. The owner having become bkpt., the mate brought an action in rem on the Admty. side of the cty. ct. to recover wages due for services so rendered by him on board the ship while in port:—Held: (1) the services so rendered were maritime services; (2) the ct. had jurisdiction to entertain the action.—*R. v. 1753. Court where vessel ls.—Under Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Acts, 1868 (c. 71) & 1869 (c. 51), an action in personam by a shipowner for damage sustained by his vessel may be brought "in the cty. ct. having jurisdiction within the dis-

1754. —.]—A claim by a shipowner under Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869 (c. 51), s. 2, arising out of an agreement in relation to the use or hire of a ship belonging to him, is properly brought in the Cty. Ct.—THE COUNTY OF DURHAM, [1891] P. 1; 60 L. J. P. 5; 64 L. T. 146; 39 W. R. 303; 6 Asp. M. L. C. 606.

Ct. by shipowners against the indorsees of a bill of lading which incorporated the terms of the charterparty, for demurrage for detention of pltf's. ship at the port of discharge. At commencement of the proceedings the vessel was on the high seas:—Held: (1) the cause related to the vessel only; (2) the proceedings were rightly commenced under Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 21 (2), in the Cty. in the district of which the owners of the vessel resided.—PUGSLEY & CO. v. ROPKINS & CO., LTD., [1892] 2 Q. B. 184; 61 L. J. Q. B. 645; 67 L. 1756. — Or his agent — Agency determined by loss of ship.—In an action in personam instituted in the City of London Ct. by pltf's., owners of a barge damaged by collision with deft.'s steamship within the jurisdiction, the summons described deft. as “G. S., of 75, Bothwell Street, Glasgow, owner of the s.s. or vessel C., whose agents in England are M. & W., of 36, Gracechurch Street, E.C., within the jurisdiction of this Ct.” The summons was served on a member of the firm of M. & W.; but the C. had been lost before commencement of the action:—Held: the service of the summons must be set aside as “agent in England” in Cty. Ct. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 21, meant a person acting for another person in relation to the vessel or property proceeded against at the time the service of the process was effected & at that time the agency had ceased.—THE CITY OF AGRA, [1898] P. 198; 67 L. 1757. Court where defendant carries on business.—Pltf's., owners of a steamship, brought an action in rem, on the Admty. side of the Cty. Ct. within the district of which defts., charterers of the vessel, & consignees of the cargo, carried on their business, for damages for detention of the vessel in unloading. The Cty. Ct. judge dismissed the action for want of jurisdiction, on the ground that, as the ship was not at the time of commencement of proceedings within the district, nor did pltf's. reside there, Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 21 (1), (2), had not been complied with:—Held: the Cty. Ct. had jurisdiction as Cty. Cts. Act, 1888 (c. 43), s. 74, was general in its terms, & included defts. in an Admty. action who, at the time of commencing the action, carried on their business within the district.—THE HERO, [1891] P. 294; 60 L. SUB-SECT. 3.—PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE.

1758. Form of procedure—Plaint—Salvage action.—BEADNELL v. BEESON, No. 1744, ante.

1759. Amendment of claim.—A Cty. Ct. judge has power, under Cty. Cts. Act, 1888 (c. 43), s. 87, to amend a claim in an Admty. action of collision after the question of liability has been decided, & before the reference.—THE ALERT, No. 1571, ante.

For full ann., see S. C. No. 1571, ante.

1760. —.]—In an action of salvage brought in the Cty. Ct., the judge, having found that no salvage services were rendered, directed the pleadings to be amended on pltf's. application by substituting the word “towage” for “salvage,” & thereupon awarded a sum for towage services:—Held: (1) as the amendment involved striking out some of the parties, & introduced a wholly different form of action, it could not be made without defts.' consent; (2) defts. were entitled to judgment.—THE ANNE (1914), 30 T. J. R. 544. S. C. No. 909, ante.

1761. Arrest warrant—Person to execute—Contempt.—A warrant of arrest issued in an action in rem, instituted for collision in the City of London Ct., & directed to the high bailiff of the Ct. & others the bailiffs thereof, is not duly executed if executed by a clerk in the bailiff's office, who is not a bailiff, & the master of the vessel so arrested is not guilty of contempt of Ct. in removing her. Semble: if the warrant had been addressed to the clerk as an officer of the Ct. it might, under Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 23, have been duly served by him.—THE PALOMARES (1885), 10 P. D. 36; 54 L. J. P. 51; 52 L. T. 57; 33 W. R. 616; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 343.

1762. — Ship already under arrest in High Court.—Semble: where a ship is under the arrest of the High Ct. & causes are also instituted in the Cty. Ct. against her, she should not be arrested by the Cty. Ct. as it is not probable she will be removed out of the jurisdiction of the Cty. Ct. without satisfaction of pltf's. several claims within Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), s. 22.—THE TURLIANT, No. 883, ante.

1763. Affidavit of value—Salvage action—When conclusive—Appraisement—Tender.—In an action of salvage in a Cty. Ct., defts. tendered & paid into Ct. £75 & filed an affidavit putting the value of their smack, salvaged by pltf's., at £140 & the cargo of fish at £42 15s. Pltf's. by letter objected to the value, but did not apply for an appraisement &, at the trial, tendered evidence putting a higher value on the smack. The Cty. Ct. judge held he was bound to admit the evidence, & fixed the value of the smack at £272 & the fish salvaged at £48, making £320, & he made an award of £80 (to include the £75 in Ct.), being £40 or one-eighth for salvage & £40 for loss of fishing on the part of pltf's. vessel. Defts. appealed:—Held: (1) under C. C. R. 1892, O. 39, pltf's., if dissatisfied with the value given in the affidavit, had a right of appraisement for the purpose of determining what the value of the res should be taken to be at the trial, so as to avoid the expense of calling experts, & also that defts. might thereby have a value on which to tender; (2) the tender must be upheld, as, in exercise of the discretion, which the Cty. Ct. judge ought to have exercised, the evidence was, in the circumstances, inadmissible & the affidavit of value conclusive.—THE ARGO, [1895] P. 33; 64 L. J. P. 12; 71 L. T. 640; 43 W. 1764. Mode of trial—Assessors.—In an Admty. cause of collision in a Cty. Ct., where one party asks for a jury & the other demands assessors, the trial must, notwithstanding Cty. Cts. Act, 1888 (c. 43), s. 101, be by judge & assessors.—Semble: in salvage & towage causes the same rule applies.—THE TYNWALD, [1895] P. 142; 64 L. J. P. 1; 71 L. T.

1765. ———.]—The proper mode of trial in the case of a maritime cause over which a cty. ct. having Admty. jurisdiction has jurisdiction under *Cty. Cts. Admty. 1766. Assessors—Function of.—Nautical assessors summoned under Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), to attend at the hearing of an Admty. action tried by a cty. ct. judge, are present merely to advise the judge, & the judge ought to decide the case in accordance with his own opinion as to the law & merits of the case.—THE AID (1881), 6 P. 1767. Shorthand note of evidence.—Wherever there is a probability of an appeal, notes of the evidence given in the cty. ct. should be taken by a reporter duly appointed according to the provisions contained in the rules for regulating the Admty. jurisdiction of the cty. ct.—THE BUSY BEE, No. 1587, ante.

1768. Judgment—Rescission of.—Where, in a collision action, the cty. ct. judge includes an order as to costs in his judgment determining the liability, & debts. subsequently tender an amount sufficient to cover the damage, as found by the registrar, the cty. ct. judge has no power to rescind that portion of his judgment dealing with the costs & to condemn pltf. in the costs of the action & of the reference.—THE RECEPTEA, Nos. 983, 1559, 1609, ante; No. 1773, post.

1769. Judgment in rem—Effect of—Sale by high bailiff—Free from Incumbrance.—After judgment in favour of pltf., in an action in rem for damage by collision on the Admty. side of a cty. ct., a warrant of execution issued directing the high bailiff to “levy by distress & sale of the goods & chattels, including the s.s. or vessel R. of deft.” Under this warrant the vessel was appraised & sold, but the registrar of shipping refused to register the bill of sale signed by the high bailiff except subject to an outstanding mtge.—Held: (1) the power given to a cty. ct. by Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), ss. 3 (3), 12, “to try & determine” an Admty. cause of damage by collision & enforce the decree “against the person or persons summoned,” carried with it the power of rendering pltf.’s maritime lien effectual against all persons having an interest in the res; (2) in order to obtain payment of the debt out of the proceeds the high bailiff could sell the ship free from incumbrance.—THE RUBY [1898] P. 52; 67 L. SUB-SECT. 4.—COSTS.

1770. Practice of particular court—Inconsistent with County Court Rules.—A cty. ct. judge has no power to establish a practice in the cty. ct. contrary to a general rule of the C. C. R., such as C. C. R., 1889, O. 50, r. 16, relating to the costs of witnesses, & such practice cannot prevail against the general rule.—THE CASHMERE, No. 1570, ante.

For full anns., see S. C. No. 1570, ante.

1771. Payment into court—Accepted in satisfaction—Effect on costs.—Pltfs. instituted an Admty. action in a cty. ct. for damages for breach of contract in relation to the use or hire of a ship “in the sum of £30 & costs.” Defts. paid into ct. £17 10s. “in satisfaction of the whole of pltf.’s claim herein” together with a denial of liability. Pltfs. accepted the £17 10s. in satisfaction of the claim in respect of which it was paid in, but their application for taxation, & payment by defts., of the costs of the action was refused without leave to appeal.—Held: (1) this being an Admty. action the special Admty. rules of the cty. ct., & not the general common law rules, applied; (2) the sum paid into ct. by defts. was to be treated as by way of “tender” under C. C. R., 1892, O. 39B, r. 48; (3) on acceptance of the tender, pltf. were entitled, under r. 50, to taxation & payment of their costs. THE VULCAN, No. 1572, ante.

1772. ——— Costs independent of amount.—In an Admty. action in the cty. ct. where money is paid into ct. unconditionally by deft. & accepted by pltf. in satisfaction, pltf. is entitled to his costs under C. C. R., O. 39B, r. 50A, & under r. 80 to have them taxed under Column B of the Cty. Ct. Scales of Costs, unless the cty. ct. judge otherwise orders, even where the amount so recovered by him is less than £2.—THE SKUDENAES (SKUDANAES) (1901), 70 L. J. P. 64; 17 T. L. R. 649; 45 Sol. Jo. 653.

1773. Tender—After liability determined—Before reference—Effect on costs.—In an action on the Admty. side of the City of London Ct., in which defts. denied liability, the judge gave judgment for pltf., subject to a reference to the registrar to assess the damages, & ordered defts. to pay pltf.’s costs of action. Defts. then paid £14 14s. into ct. by way of tender. The registrar certified that the sum of £14 14s. was sufficient to satisfy pltf.’s claim. The judge, on defts.’ application, altered his judgment by ordering pltf. to pay defts.’ costs of the action.—Held: (1) a tender made after the issue of liability had been determined could not affect the costs of deciding that liability, though it might affect the costs of the reference; (2) the judge not having reserved the costs of action, but having included an order as to them in his judgment, could not afterwards rescind that portion of his judgment.—THE RECEPTEA, Nos. 983, 1559, 1609, 1768, ante.

SECT. 2.—THE COURT OF ADMIRALTY OF THE CINQUE PORTS.

1774. Concurrent jurisdiction of High Court.—The Admty. Ct. had a concurrent jurisdiction within the boundaries of the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports; & this remains unaltered by M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), ss. 460, 476 of which sustain the general jurisdiction of the Admty. Ct. in salvage in the widest terms.—THE MARIA LUISA (1856), Sw. 67; 26 L. T. O. S. 316; 2 Jur. N. SECT. 3.—THE CINQUE PORTS SALVAGE COMMISSIONERS.

1777. Form of award.]—Where salvage is settled by the Cinque Ports Comrs. by 12 Ann., c. 18, s. 2, 26 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 10, their award need not be in writing.—THE AMERICAN HERO (1801), 3 Ch. Rob. 323.

1778. Enforcement of award.]—The Admty. Ct. has not power to enforce an award of salvage by the Cinque Ports Comrs. unappealed.—THE HECTOR (1833), 3 Hag. Adm. 90.

1779. Award—When no bar to action.]—Salvage services had been rendered to a vessel by several sets of salvors off Ramsgate. The owners of the vessel summoned a meeting of the above comrs. to adjudicate the matter. No notice of the intended meeting was given to any of the salvors, & it was proved that it was not usual to give any such notice. At the meeting of the comrs. one set of salvors was unrepresented, but it was proved that they were aware of the meeting, & were at hand. The comrs. made an award upon the whole matter. The salvors so unrepresented refused to accept their share of the money awarded, & brought their action in the Admty. Ct.:—Held: the award was no bar to the action, plffs. not having been parties to the first decision.—THE ELISE (1859), Sw. 436.

1780. Appeal—Rehearing—Fresh evidence.]—An appeal to the Admty. Ct. under Cinque Ports Act, 1821 (c. 70), from an award of the above comrs. in a salvage case is in the nature of a rehearing rather than of an appeal, & it is obligatory on the ct. to allow a re-statement of the case & to admit fresh evidence. The ct. will, in the exercise of its discretion as to costs, discourage the giving of fresh evidence unwarrantably.—THE CALEDONIA (1873), L. R. 4 A. & E. 11; 42 L. J. Adm. 13 n.; 28 L. T. 372 n.; 17 W. R. 626.

1781. ——— Tender.]—An appeal from an award of the above comrs. being in the nature of a rehearing, pleadings may be filed & new evidence given by appls., although at the imminent risk of costs; & the question of the value of the salvaged property, although agreed before the comrs., may be reopened on appeal.

On appeal by the owners of a salvaged ship from a salvage award made by the above comrs. appls. may, without filing pleadings, place upon the file of the ct. a tender, although no tender was made before the comrs., & resps. are bound to accept or reject a tender so made.—THE ANNETTE (1873), L. 1782. ——— Costs.]—In salvage cases, costs are not generally allowed by the Admty. Ct. where on appeal the award of the above comrs. is reversed, each party being left to pay his own costs.—THE

SECT. 4.—THE COURT OF PASSAGE OF THE BOROUGH OF LIVERPOOL.

1784. Jurisdiction—Action against pilot.]—A ship by compulsion of law in charge of a duly licensed pilot in the Mersey collided with & occasioned damage to another vessel. The owners of the damaged vessel instituted an Admty. suit in the Ct. of Passage against the pilot:—Held: the Ct. of Passage had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, as an Admty. suit.—THE ALEXANDRIA (1872), L. R. 3 A. & E. 574; 41 L. J. Adm. 94; 27 L. T. 565; 1 Asp. M. L. C. 464. S. C. No. 505, ante.

1785. ——— Proceedings pending in High Court—Prohibition.]—Salvage services were rendered by a Liverpool tug to a Spanish vessel of the value of £30,000, & a sum of £3,500 was awarded. The mate of the tug brought an action in the Ct. of Passage for apportionment of the salvage award. On motion by owners of the tug, plffs. in a salvage action in the Admty. Div., to restrain the proceedings in the Ct. of Passage:—Held: (1) a judge of the Admty. Div. has power to grant a prohibition with reference to a matter pending before an inferior ct.; (2) he has power to issue an injunction to a party proceeding in an inferior ct. to restrain him from going on with such proceedings.—THE TERESA (1891), 71 L. T. 342; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 505; sub nom. THE THERESA, 11 R. 681, D. C.

1786. Rules — Summary judgment — Ultra vires.]—An action in rem being brought in the Ct. of Passage to recover a sum of money as wages due to seamen, plffs. took out a summons in the above ct. calling upon defts. to show cause why they (plffs.) should not sign final judgment for the amount claimed & costs. The deputy registrar made a decree that defts. should pay £22 6s. 10d. & costs under an "order" made by the assessor or judge of the ct. on Feb. 10, 1882. This "order" purported to apply a procedure similar to that under R. S. C. O. 14, to Admty. actions in rem or in personam, brought in the Ct. of Passage to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money, & to enable a plff. on showing that there was no defence to the action, to enter up judgment or decree for the amount indorsed on the writ, together with interest (if any) & costs. No affidavit of merits was put in by defts., but they objected to the jurisdiction of the Ct. of Passage to make the "order": On an application by defts. for a writ of prohibition:—Held: (1) the "order" made by the assessor or judge of the Ct. of Passage was ultra vires, neither Cty. Cts. Admty. Jurisdiction Act, 1868 (c. 71), nor the Amendment Act of 1869 (c. 51), giving such power; (2) the registrar had no jurisdiction to make the decree.—FELLOWS v. THE LORD STANLEY (OWNERS), [1893] 1 Q. B. 98; 67 L. T. 857; 41 W. R. 253; 9 T. L. R. 79; 37 Sol. Jo. 83; 7 Asp. M. L. C. 298; 5 R. 115, D. C.

See, now, Liverpool Court of Passage Act, 1893 (c. 37).

1787. Appeals—Extension of time.]—Cty. Cts. Act, 1875 (c. 50), s. 6, provides an alternative mode of appeal by way of motion, but does not supersede the old practice with regard to appeals from inferior cts. having Admty. jurisdiction. The provisions of the Act of 1868, relating to appeals from the Ct. of Passage, are still in force, & the discretionary power of the ct. to allow an appeal after the time for such appeal has expired remains.—THE HUMBER (1883), 9 P. 1790. — Rules regulating—Security for costs.—An appeal from an order made by the Ct. of Passage in an Admty. cause is subject to the same rules as an appeal from a ct. in an Admty. cause. Security for costs must be given before lodging the instrument of appeal, otherwise the appeal cannot be entertained.—THE GANGES (1880), 5 P. D. 247; 43 L. T. 12; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 417, C. A.

1792. Limits of jurisdiction—Private rights.—Since the Union of England & Scotland the jurisdiction of the Admty. Cts. in Scotland is restricted to matters relative to private rights which may arise there.—JACKSON v. MONRO (1779), 2 Bro. Parl. Cas 411; 1 E. R. 1031.

1793. Law administered—British law—Not Scottish.—From the earliest times the cts. of Scotland exercising jurisdiction in Admty. causes have disregarded the municipal rules of Scottish law & have invariably professed to administer the law & customs of the sea generally prevailing among maritime States. In later times, with the growth of British shipping, the Admty. law of England has gradually acquired predominance, & resort has seldom been had to the laws of other States for the guidance of the cts. The law administered in English & Scottish Admty. Cts. is the same—the maritime code which ought to prevail in both countries being neither English nor Scottish, but British law. There may be conflicting decisions in the cts. of both countries, & a Scottish Admty. Ct. is no less free to examine the merits of an English authority than an English ct. is to estimate the value of a Scottish decision, & to accept or reject it according to its own view of the law maritime. But it does not follow that the law either is or ought to be different in the two countries (LORD WATSON).—CURRIE v. M'KNIGHT, [1897] L. C. 97; 66 L. J. P. C. 19; 75 L. T. 457; 13 T. L. SECT. 5.—ADMIRALTY COURTS IN SCOTLAND.

1791. Extent of jurisdiction—Wider than in England.—The jurisdiction exercised by Admty. Cts. in England & Scotland has never been precisely co-extensive. In Scotland the Admiral's jurisdiction, though cumulative with that of the Ct. of Session, extended to all questions arising in regard to policies of maritime insurance & had also been extended by long possession to the right of cognisance in bills of exchange & other mercantile questions which were in no sense maritime. In England, policies of marine insurance were regarded simply as matters of mercantile contract, & actions brought upon them belonged to the jurisdiction, not of the Admty., but of the common law cts. (LORD WATSON).—THE BLAIRMORE, [1898] A. C. 593; 67 L. J. P. C. 96; 79 L. T. 217; 14 T. L. R. 513; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 429; 3 Com. Cas. 241, H. L.

a. Arrestment to found jurisdiction.—Arrestments jurisdictionis fundandæ causa used, & action raised, at the instance of an American, his attorney resident in England & a Scotch mandatory, appointed by the attorney :—Held: the proceedings were well taken, & objection that they were inept for want of a mandatory duly appointed by the principal pursuer should be repelled.—KNIGHT v. FREETO (1862), 2 M. 386.—SCOT.

PART V. SECT. 6.

b. Effect of proceedings in English Court of Admiralty.—A vessel on a voyage to L. was arrested at Q., at the instance of pltf., for necessities supplied to her. Bail was procured by the assignees of a bottomry bond upon the ship, freight, & cargo, given on the voyage, & payable twenty days after her arrival at the port of discharge, & the vessel proceeded to L., where she was arrested in a cause of wages, & again arrested by warrant of the English Admty. Ct. in a cause of necessities, instituted by pltf., in respect of same claim as that on which the arrest at Q. was founded. The vessel was subsequently sold under an order of the Admty. Ct. in England, made at the suit of the assignees as bondholders, but a considerable sum remained due to them. Decree had not been obtained in the suits in England. Pltf. proceeded with his suit in Ireland & obtained a decree for the amount of necessities & costs. Pltf. instituted a motion for an order for a monition against the bail to compel the payment by them of the damages & costs :—Held: the motion should be granted. Semle: a cause instituted in the Irish Admty. Ct. will not be superseded or suspended by proceedings subsequently taken in the English Admty. Ct.—THE ONWARD (1872), 6 L. L. T. 150.—IR.

PART V. SECT. 7, SUB-SECT. 1.

c. Jurisdiction—Vice-Admiralty Courts—Colonial Acts.—An action brought under Navigation Law Amendment Act, 1881 (No. 6), s. 7, cannot be brought in Vice-Admty., but shall be tried before the Chief Justice, or a deputy judge appointed by him, sitting as in Vice-Admty. The jurisdiction of the Vice-Admty. Ct. having been determined by an Imperial Act, i.e., Vice-Admty. Cts. Act, 1863 (c. 24), cannot be extended by a Colonial Act.—AUSTRALIAN BANKING CO. v. SECT. 7.—COLONIAL COURTS OF ADMIRALTY AND VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1794. Jurisdiction—That of Admiralty Court before 1840.—Vice-Admty. Cts. abroad have only the ordinary jurisdiction exercised by the Admty. Ct. before the passing of Admty. Ct. Act, 1840 (c. 65); they cannot try causes of title to ships.—THE AUSTRALIA (1859), Sw. 480; 7 W. R. 718, P. C.

1795. — Wages of master.—The Vice-Admty. Cts. in the colonies exercise the same jurisdiction as the Admty. Ct., with one exception, namely, where particular powers are conferred upon the Admty. Ct. by name & not upon the Vice-Admty. Cts.

M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), applies to Vice-Admty. Cts. & confers on them jurisdiction in cases of a master's wages. No distinction is to be drawn in this respect between colonies acquired by conquest & settled colonies.—THE RAJAH OF COCHIN (1859), Sw. 473.

1796. — Wages of seamen.]—By an Order in Council, passed in pursuance of 2 Will 4, c. 51, the Vice-Admty. Ct. has jurisdiction to entertain a suit brought by any number of seamen, not exceeding six, to recover their wages. M. S. Act, 1854 (c. 104), s. 189, does not take away such right of suit so long as the total aggregate amount claimed by such seamen exceeds £50.

Where, in a suit brought by six seamen in the Vice-Admty. Ct., the judge found that a total amount of £203 19s. 8d. was due to them, partly for wages & partly for wrongful dismissal, but that the amount due to each was less than £50 :—Held : (1) the judge was wrong in dismissing the suit for want of jurisdiction ; (2) a decree for £203 19s. 8d. should be made.—THE PERRET (1883), 8 App. Cas. 329 ; 52 L. J. P. C. 51 ; 48 L. T. 915 ; 31 W. R. 869 ; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 94, P. C.

1797. Sale of ship — Under order of court—Invalid where unnecessary.]—The Vice-Admty. Cts. abroad have no authority, upon the mere petition of the master of a ship bound on a foreign voyage, to decree the sale of such ship, reported upon survey to be seaworthy, or repairable so as to carry the cargo to its place of destination but at an expense exceeding the value of the ship when repaired.—REID v. 1798. Sale of cargo—Under order of court—Invalid where unnecessary.]—The master of a ship which was injured by perils of the sea put into the Mauritius, & there abandoned ship & cargo, which were afterwards sold under an order of the Vice-Admty. Ct. there & the proceeds paid into that ct. The cargo was not damaged or perishable, nor was there any pressing necessity for the sale of it. The owners of the cargo brought an action on the case against the owners of the ship for wrongfully selling the cargo instead of carrying it to London, according to their contract, with a count in trover, & recovered a general verdict for the value of the ship & freight, which was one-fifth of the value of the cargo. They also sent out a power of attorney to an agent at the Mauritius to procure from the Vice-Admty. Ct. there the proceeds of the sale which had been paid in. The agent demanded them, but they had been previously remitted to the Admty. Ct. in England. In an action for money had & received by the owners against the purchaser of the goods :—Held : (1) the master had not any authority to sell the cargo, although acting bonâ fide & under the order of the Vice-Admty. Ct. ; (2) the recovery against the owners of the ship was no answer to the present action ; (3) the proceeds of sale at the Mauritius not having been paid when demanded, plffs. were in the same situation as if no such demand had been paid, & entitled to recover the value of the goods from deft.—MORRIS v. 1800. —.]—In an appeal from the Vice-Admty. Ct. of Jamaica in respect of proceedings for an offence against the revenue laws, the jurisdiction of that ct. was objected to as incompetent in proceedings for penalties under the Act ; but the sentence of the ct. below was affirmed, the jurisdiction being thus upheld.—R. v. O'HARA (1819), unreported, cited 1 Hag. Adm. 150.

1801. Law applicable.]—A moiety of the property saved with costs is the maximum of remuneration that can be allowed to salvors ; this rule applies to Vice-Admty. Cts. abroad.—THE INCA (1858), 12 Moo. P. C. C. 180 ; Sw. 370 ; 14 E. R. 882, P. C.

1802. Practice applicable.]—The usual practice in the Admty. Ct. as to proxies is for proctors to proceed without the exhibition of any proxy until called upon to produce it, & when they are called upon they satisfy the law by stating the names of the parties for whom they appear. In the Vice-Admty. Cts. proctors are not bound to do more than this under the Vice-Admty. Rules & Regulations, r. 40, unless upon a strict order of the ct.—THE EUXINE (1871), L. R. 4 P. 1803. Concurrent jurisdiction of Admiralty Court.]—The Admty. Ct. of England has concurrent jurisdiction with Vice-Admty. Cts. abroad.—THE PEEPLESS, Nos. 41, 62, 111.

For full anns., see S. C. No. 111, ante.

1804. Enforcement of decree—Where jurisdiction not exercised.]—The Admty. Ct. declined on application of claimant, & without letters of request, to interfere to enforce a monition to compel obedience to a decree made many years before by a Vice-Admty. Ct. for payment of a small sum as demurrage against a master who had ceased to be within the jurisdiction of the Vice-Admty. Ct., & was resident in England.—LA MADONNA DELLA LETTERA (1829), 2 Hag. Adm. 289.

1805. Setting aside decree—Fraud.]—Fraud sufficient to set aside in the Admty. Ct. the decree of a competent Ct. of Vice-Admty. must be fraud in procuring the decree.

Suit between mtgees. of the vessel & subsequent purchaser. Replication by mtgees. that a bottomry bond had been fraudulently executed by the co-operation of the bondholder & the master, with a view to a sale of the vessel under the decree of a Vice-Admty. Ct., & that these facts were fraudulently suppressed from the ct. on the application for a decree of sale :—Seemle : (1) such facts, if proved, would be sufficient to invalidate the sale ; (2) in such circumstances a decree of sale fraudulently obtained in order to pay a valid bottomry bond would be invalid.—THE JUSTYN (1862), 6 L. T. 553 ; 11 W. R. 44 ; 1 Mar. L. C. 225.

1806. Funds transmitted from abroad—Payment out.]—Certain proceeds arising from the sale of a ship & cargo at the Mauritius had been transmitted to the registry of the Admty. Ct. for the sake of security by order of the Vice-Admty. judge there. An application for payment out to the consignees was granted with the consent of the purchaser of the cargo.—THE LADY BANKS (1824), 1 Hag. Adm. 306.

1807. — Liability of Vice-Admiralty registrar.]—The registrar of a Vice-Admty. Ct. is not responsible for money transmitted under proper precautions & in the usual course of business for the purpose of being invested in the funds, & afterwards lost by failure of the consignee.—THE PRIMA VERA (1808), Edw 23.

1808. Appeal—None, if court not duly appointed.]—The Admty. Ct. cannot entertain an appeal from the sentence of a Vice-Admty. Ct. not duly appointed.—THE JOHN (1814), 1 Dods. 380.

1809. — Leave refused.]—Petitioner, a mariner on board a ship, was wrecked near the Cape of Good Hope; the crew succeeded in saving a great part of the cargo, most of the rigging, sails, & provisions, & the hull of the ship which were ultimately sold in the Vice-Admty. Ct. A suit was instituted at the Cape, in which wages were pronounced due as far as freight had been received. Petitioner being deprived of relief, entered on board another ship & continued in her service; the owners of the wrecked vessel had refused payment of his wages. The petitioner eighteen months afterwards applied for leave to enter an appeal. The ground of the petition being that owing to some trifling informality in the proceedings of the professional persons employed by the mariners at the Cape, in not interposing an appeal, his only remedy was to apply to the Admty. Ct. for its permission to appeal.—Held: the motion must be refused.—THE MARY (1820), 2 Hag. Adm. 26.

1810. — Desertion of appeal.]—An appeal from the Vice-Admty. Ct. at the Cape not being duly prosecuted, a motion that the ct. should pronounce the appeal to be deserted, & to condemn applts. in costs, was granted.—THE ELIZABETH (1824), 1 Hag. Adm. 226.

a. Exchequer Court of Canada.]—Colonial Cts. of Admty. Act, 1890 (c. 27), ss. 2, 3, vest the jurisdiction of the Vice-Admty. Cts. in any colonial Ct. of Admty., & by Admty. Act, 1891 (c. 29), the Parliament of Canada made the Exch. Ct. the Ct. of Admty. for the Dominion, & by s. 9 thereof conferred upon the local judges in Admty. all the powers of the judge of the Exch. Ct. with respect to the Admty. jurisdiction thereof.—R. v. THE ANNIE ALLEN (1895), 5 Ex. C. R. 144.—CAN.

c. — — — — —.]—The Exch. Ct. of Canada was constituted by Exch. Ct. Act (c. 16) (Dominion) for the purpose of dealing with matters in which the Crown was concerned (ss. 15 & 16), & has no general common law jurisdiction. It has also under Colonial Cts. of Admty. Act, 1890 (c. 27), & Admty. Act, 1891 (c. 29) (Dominion), jurisdiction in Admty., including its statutory extensions.—BOW, McCLACHLAN & CO., LTD. v. THE CAMOSUN, [1909] A. C. 597; 101 L. d. — — — — — Power to suspend proceedings.]—On motion by deft., made under Admty. Ct. Act, 1861 (c. 10), s. 34, an order was made suspending the proceedings by the Crown against deft. ship for damages for collision to a Canadian Government tug, until the Crown had given security to answer a judgment in a cross-cause in personam by deft. against the master of the tug. On appeal.—Held: the above sect. is one which gives or defines the right under consideration, which is one of those more extensive powers conferred upon the High Ct. of Admty., which it did not formerly possess, & therefore the Exch. Ct. of Canada falls heir to the same jurisdiction. It is no objection to the conferring of jurisdiction that the statute which does so at the same time denotes the mode of proceedings by which the legal right is enforced; & even if this opinion were wrong, r. 228 would cover the case. *Poyser v. Vendees having failed to perform the terms of the agreement, A. resumed possession of the vessel. In an action in rem in the Exch. Ct. for wages due to a seaman employed by vendees & which were earned during their possession of the vessel.—Held: (1) the amount of the claim being below $200, the Exch. Ct. has no jurisdiction under Inland Waters Seamen's Act, s. 2; (2) if summary proceedings had been taken as provided by Inland Waters Seamen's Act, a direction might have been made to provide for the realisation of the seaman's claim against the vessel, & she might have been tied up by the ct. on his showing that vendees who employed him were then the supposed owners of the vessel, & when the action was brought more or less within s. 34 of the above Act.—THE JESSIE STEWART (1892), 3 Ex. f. — — — — —.]—When the exceptions in Seamen's Act, R. S. C. c. 74, s. 56, do not apply, the Exch. Act, 1891 (c. 29), being a general law, & enacting general provisions as to jurisdiction, does not repeal by implication the special provisions of the above sect., limiting the jurisdiction of the ct. in proceedings for seamen's wages. The ct. has no jurisdiction to entertain a claim for seamen's wages under an amount of $200 earned on a ship registered in England, & to which M. S. Act, 1894 (c. 60), s. 165, applies.—*GAYNON v. North West Territories—Supreme Court of.]—Pltf. brought an action for wages due to him as a seaman, & asked for an order declaring him entitled to a lien on the ship, & a receiver & injunction order:—Held: (1) the jurisdiction conferred upon the Supreme Ct. of the North West Territories by North West Territories Act, R. S. C., c. 50, s. 48, was that used, exercised & enjoyed by the superior cts. of law, or by the Ct. of Chancery or by the Ct. of Probate in England on July 15, 1870, & the Ct. of Chancery had concurrent jurisdiction with the Ct. of Admiralty at that date in cases of wages creating liens; (2) the order asked for must be granted.—KELLY v. ALASKA MINING & TRADING CO. (1899), 4 Terr. L. R. 18.—CAN.

s. Manitoba—Admiralty jurisdiction in—Master's wages.]—The master of a vessel registered at W. & trading upon Lake Winnipeg had, in 1888, 1889, & 1890, no lien upon the vessel for wages earned by him as such master, there being no ct. in the Province of Manitoba in which it could have been enforced, & it could not be enforced under Colonial Cts. of Admiralty Act, 1890 (c. 27), or Admiralty Act, 1891 (c. 29).—BERHAMAN v. THE AURORA (1893), 3 Ex. C. R. 228.—CAN.

t. Quebec—Admiralty district of—Transfer of action for consolidation.]—There is at present only one registry in the Admiralty District of Quebec, & Admiralty Act, 1891 (c. 29), as amended by 63 & 64 Vict. c. 45, s. 3 (now R. S. C., 1906, c. 141, s. 18 (2)), which enact that when a suit has been instituted in any registry no further suit shall be instituted in respect of same matter in any other registry of the ct., do not prevent an order for transfer of an action for the purpose of consolidation from the Quebec Registry to the office of the Deputy Registrar at Montreal. The deputy judge has jurisdiction equally with the local judge in Admiralty, in cases instituted within Quebec Admiralty District, to order consolidation of such cases for purposes of trial.—BOUCHARD v. MONTREAL GRAIN ELEVATOR CO. v. MONTREAL GRAIN ELEVATOR CO. v. (1906), 11 Ex. C. R. 220.—CAN.

u. Court of King's Bench—Appellate jurisdiction.]—Certain fees were paid by pltf. to deft. as judge of the Vice-Admiralty Ct. in a suit pending before him for subtraction of mariners' wages. Later pltf. brought an action against the judge to recover back the fees paid to him, & contested deft.'s right to exact them:—Held: (1) the K. B. Ct. for the district of Quebec had no appellate jurisdiction over the decisions of the Vice-Admiralty & could not try that which the judge had done within scope of his jurisdiction, although he should have proceeded erroneously; (2) the action must be dismissed & pltf.'s remedy was to appeal to the High Ct. of Admiralty in England or to the Privy Council; (3) the judge's right of receiving fees was established by an immemorial usage & nothing but an Act of Parliament could derogate from this usage.—WILSON v. KERR (1828), Stuart, 341.—CAN.

w. Toronto—Admiralty District of—Transfer of action from one registry to another.]—Pltf. applied to the local judge of the Admiralty District of Toronto for an order allowing him to remove the suit against a ship from the registry at Toronto to the registry at Quebec. The local judge held he had no such jurisdiction. On appeal:—Held: under Admiralty Act, R. S. C., 1906, c. 141, s. 19 (2), providing that "any party to a suit may, at any stage of such suit by leave of the ct., etc. . . remove such suit pending in any registry to another registry," pltf. was entitled to remove the suit from the Toronto to the Quebec Registry.—MONTREAL TRANSPORTATION CO. v. NORWALK (1908), 11 Ex. C. R. 321.—CAN.

THE SHAWARD (1892), 3 Ex. C. R. 268.—CAN.

z. ————.]—Power of Dominion Parliament to extend.]—The Parliament of Canada has exclusive power to legislate on the subject of Inland Revenue to declare in what cts. penalties for breaches of Dominion Inland Revenue Act, 1867 (c. 8), can be prosecuted; & in selecting the Vice-Admiralty Ct. as having jurisdiction in the Province of Nova Scotia it has not exceeded its powers. Valin v. Langens (1870), 5 App. Cas. 115, folld.—A.-G. OF CANADA v. FLINT (1884), 16 S. C. R. 707; 4 Cart. 288.—CAN.

a. ————.]—By British North America Act, 1867 (c. 3), exclusive legislative authority extends to the Parliament of Canada with regard to navigation & shipping within the territorial limits of the Dominion; as an incident to this power the Cts. of Vice-Admiralty come under the control of the Canadian Parliament, & under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 63, any colonial law repugnant to the provisions of an Imperial Act is valid only to the extent it is in agreement with the Imperial Act.—THE FAREWELL (1881), 7 Q. b. ————.]—Collision in harbour.]—Where a collision occurred inside Halifax Harbour, & within the body of the county of Halifax:—Held: under Admiralty Ct. Act, 1861 (c. 10), & Vice-Admiralty Cts. Act, 1863 (c. 24), the ct. had full jurisdiction in the matter.—THE WAVELET (1867), Y. A. D. 34.—CAN.

c. ————.]—Timber cut on Crown lands—Action in rem by Crown.]—On motion for a prohibition to the Vice-Admiralty Ct.:—Held: that ct. had jurisdiction under 8 Geo. 1, c. 12, & 2 Geo. 2, c. 35, to entertain a suit in rem, instituted by the Crown against pine timber seized as cut on Crown and without licence, & to proceed to adjudge the forfeiture & condemnation thereof, although there had been no prosecution for the pecuniary penalties imposed by the Acts on persons cutting or carrying away same. A prohibition was accordingly refused.—R. v. ONE HUNDRED & SIXTY-TWO PIECES OF TIMBER (1839), Ber. [612] 410.—CAN.

Action for compensation for salvage services.]—The Supreme Ct. will grant prohibition restraining the prosecution of a suit instituted in the Vice-Admiralty Ct. for the recovery of a compensation for services rendered a vessel in distress.—CONARD v. DRISCOLL (1820), 1 Nfld. L. R. 201.—NFLD.

The title of an individual appointed to this office by the Governor, as the King's representative, does not derive support from that recognition of him in that capacity by the Lords of Appeal & the High Ct. of Delegates. On the other hand, a person appointed to this office by an Admiralty patent holds that office not from the period of his assuming the duties of it, but from the enrolment in the registrar's office in London.—STEWART v. 1813. Jurisdiction of Consular Court.]—The effect of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94 is to make the jurisdiction of the British consular authority in the Ottoman Empire liable to be regulated by Order in Council; & the Order in Council, Aug. 27, 1860, provides for the exercise of such jurisdiction in suits between British subjects & the subjects of foreign States. The nature & extent of the consular jurisdiction must be solved by reference to usage. The Consular Ct. has exercised a customary jurisdiction in rem in cases of bottomry, whence the right to exercise a similar jurisdiction in cases of collision may be inferred. The jurisdiction being in rem, the rules applying to actions in rem apply rather than the rules of the English common law in personal actions; & if both parties are to blame for a collision, the damages ought to be divided. The Order in Council, Jan. 9, 1863, confirms rather than confers the Admty. jurisdiction of the Consular Ct.—THE LACONIA (1863), Brown. & Lush, 117; 2 *Moo. P. C. C. N. k. Jurisdiction of Supreme Court.—Salvage.]—Shipping & Seamen Act, 1903, s. 272, provides that actions for salvage shall be determined by the Supreme Ct.; but this means the Supreme Ct. in its Admty. jurisdiction & under the rules made under Vice-Admty. Cts. Act, 1863 (c. 24).—AORERE STEAMSHIP CO., LTD. v. COLONIAL SAILING SHIP CO., LTD. (No. 1) (1906), 20 N. Z. L. R. 257.—N.Z.

l. Practice applicable.—Supreme Court of Bombay.]—The Bombay Charter, Dec. 1823, established the Admty. jurisdiction of the Supreme Ct., "as the same is used & exercised in that part of Great Britain called England, together with all & singular their incidents, emergents, & dependencies annexed & connexted causes whatsoever; & to proceed summarily therein with all possible despatch, according to the course of our Admty. in that part of Great Britain called England";—Held: the rules & practice of the High Ct. of Admty. in England prevailed & governed the proceedings in the Supreme Ct. at Bombay in maritime causes.—LOUGHNAN v. JOOSUP BHULLADINA, THE HYDROOS (1851), 5 Moo. I. A. 137.—IND.

m. Jurisdiction.—High Court of Bombay.]—Admty. Ct. Act, 1840 (c. 65), & Admty. Ct. Act, 1861 (c. 10), do not extend to India. The jurisdiction of the High Ct. on its Admty. side is the same as that exercised in the Ct. of Admty. in England before the passing of the above Acts.—Re THE ASIA PROCEEDS, Ex p. NORMANJI (1868), 5 Bom. O. C. 64.—IND.

n. S. P. BARDOT v. THE AUGUSTA, ante.—IND.

o. — High Court of Bengal.]—Admty. Ct. Act, 1861 (c. 10), & Vice-Admty. Cts. Act, 1863 (c. 24), extend to India. The High Ct., as constituted by the Charter of 1862, had not, by virtue of Admty. Ct. Act, 1861, or otherwise, any jurisdiction over claims for disbursements by the master. But after the passing of the Charter of 1865, Vice-Admty. Cts. Act, 1863, applied to the High Ct., as being "a Vice-Admty. Ct. established after the passing of that Act in a British possession," & the High Ct. had jurisdiction, as a Vice-Admty. Ct., to entertain the claim of a master for wages & disbursements on account of the ship.—Re THE PORTUGAL (1870), 6 B. L. R. 323.—IND.

p. — Charges of incompetency or misconduct against Board of Trade certificate holders.]—The powers conferred on Cts. of Admty. by Act IV. of 1875, s. 5, of investigating charges of incompetency or misconduct against holders of Board of Trade certificates is totally distinct from the power of inquiry into wrecks or casualties conferred on tribunals by same Act. In investigating charges of incompetency or misconduct under the above sect. it is not necessary, in order to give the Ct. jurisdiction, that such incompetency or misconduct should have occurred on or near the coasts of India.—Re THE AVA & BRENHILDA, BENIGAL GOVT. v. WHITTARD (1879), 1 L. R. 5 Cale. 453; 5 C. L. R. 307.—IND.

q. — Objections.—Application of Privy Council Rules.]—In Vice-Admty. cases, the effect of appearance, the mode of objecting to jurisdiction & of questioning a pleading, are matters governed by a settled practice under the Code of Civil Procedure. The Privy Council rules issued under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 51, have no operation, except in case of suits in rem in which no appearance has been entered, & other matters to which the Code cannot be applied.—Re THE FANNIE SKOLFIELD (1889), 1 L. R. 17 Cale. 337.—IND.

PART V. SECT. 7, SUB-SECT. 5.

r. South African Courts.—Attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem.]—The South African Cts. will not order the arrest of goods of a peregrinus ad fundandam jurisdictionem at the suit of another peregrinus in respect of a tort committed outside the Union. The British ship H. & the German ship A. collided off the mouth of the Elbe, & the H. foundered with all her cargo. The A. thereafter put into Durban, whereupon the owners of the H. applied to the Natal Provincial Division for the arrest of the ship to found jurisdiction in an action they proposed to institute against her owners.—Held: no action in rem under Colonial Cts. of Admty. Act, 1890 (c. 27), would lie unless the ship were attached under the discretionary powers conferred by M. S. Act, 1894 (c. 60), & attachment ad fundandam jurisdictionem could not avail ptfs. for that purpose.—THE HUMBER (OWNERS) v. THE ANSWALD (OWNERS) (1912), A. D. 546; S. A. Law Journal, vol. 30, Pt. 11, p. 212.—S. A.

s. Court without British territory established by treaty.—Supreme Court for China & Corea.]—A Ct. established by treaty in a place not within British territory has no jurisdiction to adjudicate a ship forfeited under M. S. Act, 1894 (c. 60), s. 76.—THE MAORI KING (OWNERS) v. SHANGHAI CONSUL-GENERAL (1909), 78 L. J. (P. C.) 138; 100 L. T. 787; 25 T. L. R. 545; 53 Sol. Jo. 519. P. C.—CHINA & COREA.

t. Constantinople.—Supreme Consular Court.—Law applicable.—Salvage.]—In an action for salvage services, a plea was put in claiming exclusive jurisdiction for the Turkish authorities.—Held: the law administered in the Constantinople Consular Ct. was the law of England modified by the custom of the Levant, & the civil law, the Rhodian law, & the laws of Oberon governed the English Admty. Cts., & in certain cases the Ct. was guided by principles which also guided Cts. of Admty.—HAMILTON v. AQUILINA (1860), 2 L. T. 90.—CONSTANTINOPLE CONSULAR CT.

u. — Practice applicable.—Collision.]—The Constantinople Supreme Consular Ct. being constituted by Ct. of Vice-Admty. by Order in Council of Nov. 20, 1861, s. 41, the only procedure which can be followed in it is that of the High Ct. of Admty. in England.

In a suit for damage by collision, a ship was arrested which was in the course of a voyage with a cargo of corn on board.—Held: (1) the ship was not protected from the effects of its own wrong because it had cargo on board, & as the law of England gave the remedy of arrest to ptfr., the registrar of the Ct. had no discretionary power to refuse the warrant; (2) in opposition to the usual practice of the High Ct. of Admty. in England, ptfr. must give security for deft.'s costs & the damages arising from detention.—THE BROTHERS v. THE FINGAL (1869), 21 L. T. 621.—CONSTANTINOPLE CONSULAR CT.

Part I.—The Relation of Agency.

1. In general.]—No one can become the agent of another person except by the will of that person. His will may be manifested in writing, or orally, or simply by placing another in a situation in which, according to ordinary rules of law, or perhaps it would be more correct to say, according to the ordinary usages of mankind, that other is understood to represent & act for the person who has so placed him; but in every case it is only by the will of the employer that an agency can be created (LORD CRANWORTH).—POLE v. LEASK (1863), 33 L. J. Ch. 155; 8 L. T. 645; 9 Jur. N. S. 829, H. L.

2. —.]—The word "agency" in its prima facie sense seems to imply the relation of principal & agent, & not of vendor & purchaser; but there is no magic in the word "agency." It is often used in commercial matters where the real relationship is that of vendor & purchaser (JAMES, L.J.).—Re NEVILL, Ex p. WHITE (1871), 6 Ch. App. 397; 40 L. J. Bcy. 73; 24 L. T. 45; 19 W. R. 488, C. A.; affd. sub nom. TOWLE & Co. v. WHITE (1873), 29 L. T. 78, H. L.

Annotations.—Consd. Re Smith, Ex p. Bright (1879), 10 Ch. D. 566, C. A. Reid. Re Watson, Ex p. Atkins, [1904] 2 K. B. 753, C. A.; Gabriel v. Churchill & Sim, [1914] 1 K. B. 449. Mentd. Re Cheseborough, Ex p. Blackburn (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 358.

3. —.]—Confidence in the particular person employed is at the root of the contract of agency

Annotations.—Reid. The Fanny, The Mathilda (1883), 48 L. T. 771, C. A.; Powell & Thomas v. Jones, [1905] 1 K. B. 11, C. A. Mentd. Re Pepperell, Popperell v. Chamberlain (1879), 27 W. R. 410; Blake v. Gale (1885), 31 Ch. D. 196; Mayerstein v. Eastern Agency Co. (1885), 1 T. L. R. 595; Allard v. Skinner (1887), 36 Ch. D. 145, C. A.; Northumberland v. Bowman (1887), 56 L. T. 773; Harris v. Fiat Motors (1906), 22 T. L. R. 556; Re Jolcey, Jolcey v. Elliot, [1915] 2 Ch. 115, C. A.

4. —.]—The relation of principal & agent requires the consensus of both parties (JAMES, L.J.).—MARKWICK v. HARDINGHAM (1880), 15 Ch. D. 339; 43 L. T. 647; 29 W. R. 361, C. A.

For full anns., see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

5. —.]—A person may use expressions calling himself an agent, but however true or applicable they may have been in a popular sense, if in point of law & in their legal sense they are meaningless, they may be treated as such.

No word is more commonly & constantly abused than the word "agent." A person may be spoken of as an agent & no doubt in the popular sense of the word may properly be said to be an agent, although when it is attempted to suggest that he is an agent under such circumstances as create the legal obligations attaching to agency that use of the word is only misleading (LORD HERSHELL).—

PART I.

1. In general.—Essential characteristics.—A person does not become the agent of another merely because he gives him advice in matters of business. The essence of the matter is that the principal authorises the agent to represent or act for the principal in bringing him, or aid in bringing him, into contractual relation with a third person, that is to say, there must be a recognition of the derivative authority of the agent.

Pltf. jointly with R., a pleader, advanced money on insufficient security, but pltf. knew & approved of the security. —Held: pltf. was not entitled to be recouped by R. for any loss, even though he might have obtained the advice of R. as pleader. —Dooby v. Watson (1888), 39 Ch. D. 179, cited. —MOHESH CHANDRA BOBA v. RADHA KISHORE BHATTACHARJEE (1908), 12 C. W. N. 28.—IND.

51. —Form of transaction immaterial.—A. gave B. a general power of attorney to enable B. to trade as a general dealer without a licence. B. thereafter became insolvent, & his stock-in-trade was seized by deft. as trustee of B.'s estate. A. claimed restoration of the goods: Held:

neither A. nor B. intended to create the relation of principal & agent or to invest A. with the ownership of the goods. Semle: the transaction between A. & B. was void on the ground of illegality, its object being to enable B. to trade without a licence, which was an offence forbidden by law.

No matter in what form such transaction is cast, the ct. will inquire into the real nature & the real intentions of the contracting parties, & will adjudicate accordingly. —MAHOMED ABDULAH R. LEVY, S. A. L. R. (1916), C. P. D. 302.—AUS

v. UNION BANK OF LONDON (1862), 7 H. & N. 661; 31 L. J. Ex. 154; 5 L. T. 757; 8 Jur. N. S. 265; 10 W. R. 299; 158 E. R. 635.

Pockett's Bristol Channel Steam Packet Co.*, [1899] 1 Q. B. 643, C. A.; Oppenheimer v. Frazer & Wyatt, [1907] 1 K. B. 519.

18. — Banker.—FOLEY v. HILL, No. 7, ante.

For full anns., see S. C. No. 7, ante.

See, further, BANKERS & BANKING.

19. — Cestui que trust.—Copyhold lands were devised to plffs. in trust for F. for life, but plffs. were never admitted to the copyhold. At the time of testator's death the lands were in the possession of deft., to whom F., with plffs.' assent, afterwards re-let them in her own name. Plffs. then gave notice to deft. to pay the rent to them:—Held: (1) in letting the premises F. did not do so as plffs.' agent, but as being the person interested in the property, & as having general management & control of it in her own hands; (2) no contract could be implied between plffs. & deft., there having been an existing contract between deft. & F., & the occupation having been by permission of F.; (3) an action for use & occupation would not lie by plffs. against deft.—CHURCHWARD & BLIGHT v. FORD (1857), 2 H. & N. 446; 26 L. J. Ex. 354; 5 W. R. 831; 157 E. R. 184.

For full anns., see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

20. — ——.—A cestui que trust is not the agent of the trustee, even in the case of a bare trustee (NEVILLE, J.).—STAIT v. FENNER, [1912] 2 Ch. 504; 81 L. J. Ch. 710; 107 L. T. 120; 56 Sol. Jo. 669.

For full anns., see SALE OF LAND.

21. — Director.—A director of a co. is certainly not a mere agent. It is his duty, amongst other things, to protect the co. & to enforce its rights even against himself (LINDLEY, L.J.).—Re SHARPE, Re BENNETT, MASONIC & GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE CO. v. SHARPE, [1892] 1 Ch. 154; 61 L. J. Ch. 193; 65 L. T. 806; 40 W. R. 241; 36 Sol. Jo. 151, C. A.

For full anns., see COMPANIES.

22. — ——.—Although the directors of a co. are properly described as its agents & act as such, there is a broad distinction of degree between them & ordinary agents arising out of the fact that, so far as knowledge & intention are concerned, the co. is an abstraction. Where directors actually perform their part in the management of the co. they are both the brains & hands of the co. (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—BATH v. STANDARD LAND CO., LTD., [1911] 1 Ch. 618; 80 L. J. Ch. 426; 104 L. T.

26 i. — Partner.—An agreement by several persons stipulated that one of them should furnish the premises in which to carry on the business & capital for carrying on the business, & that he should receive a stipulated sum annually for his time & expenses, & the others stipulated sums together with a proportion of the net profits:—Held: this contract created a special agency, not a partnership, between the parties. —MUNSON v. HALL (1863), 10 Gr. 61.—CAN.

26 ii. — ——.—Plffs. agreed with B. that he should purchase & ship to plffs. such lumber as they should direct—in consideration whereof plffs. were to furnish B. with the necessary funds for purchasing, shipping, & other expenses connected therewith, & out of the profits when the lumber was sold to allow & pay to B. a percentage for his services, & to apply the remainder of the profits in payment of B.'s prior indebtedness to plffs. An execution creditor of B. seized the lumber purchased by him:—Held: (1) there not being a community of profit & loss between plffs. & B. there could be no partnership; (2) B. was the mere agent of plffs.—CLARK v. MCKELLAR (1862), 12 C. P. 562.—CAN.

26 iii. — ——.—Plff. sold half his interest in certain land to deft., & they agreed to build houses thereon at their joint cost, raising the necessary money by mtge. & contributing the remainder in equal shares. Deft. collected the rents on their joint account, & out of them paid mtge. interest & outgoings, rendering accounts to plff. In an action by plff. alleging that deft. had not contributed his just share & had not properly accounted for rents:—Held: the accounts could not be gone into beyond six years from date of writ, as

24. — Independent contractor.—Deft., a landowner, contracted with a co. for drainage of his estate, & it was agreed that plff. (his steward) should, at a fixed sum, execute the same as the co.'s agent. The sum agreed upon had, after completion of the works, been paid by the co. to deft. Plff. claimed from deft. the profits on the works, being the difference between what the works had cost out of pocket, & what had been charged for them, on the ground that he was in the position of an ordinary contractor:—Held: (1) although on the face of the deeds executed plff. appeared to be an ordinary contractor, in reality he acted solely as deft.'s agent, the arrangement being merely a contrivance by the co. to allow a landowner to execute drainage works under superintendence of his own agent; (2) the claim could not be allowed.—WATERS v. SHAFTESBURY (EARL) (1867), 2 Ch. App. 231; 15 L. T. 489; 15 W. R. 289, C. A.

25. — One co-tenant acting in own right.—Where one tenant in common of real estate was left by his co-tenant with the management of the property, & the mtgees. required him to pay over the rents to them in reduction of the mtge. debt & payment of interest in place of keeping them or paying them to his co-owner:—Held: he nevertheless collected these rents in his own right, & the right he had as owner & not as agent of the mtgees.—*KENNEDY v. 26. — Partner.—A fire insurance society being an unincorporated assocn. under its powers entered into treaties with other cos., appointing them its agents in foreign lands, & agreeing to accept & enter upon the risk of one-eighth of every fire insurance policy of such cos. in force at the date of the treaty or effected or renewed after that date, & agreed to be on all risks simultaneously with the other cos., the other cos. agreeing to pay a proportion of the premiums, 20 per cent. commission to be allowed on such premiums to the agents for the expenses of conducting the agency. The fire insurance society having gone into liquidation, the chief clerk allowed the claim of another co. for sums due to it in respect of guarantee & treaty business. On a summons by the liquidator to vary the certificate:—Held: the dealings did not constitute a partnership, the parties being co-owners only, & in collecting the rents, paying outgoings, & rendering accounts, deft. had acted as an ordinary agent & not as an express trustee. —Burdick v. Garrick (1870), 5 Ch. App. 233; Lyell v. Kennedy (1889), 14 App. Cas. 437; Re Hindmarsh (1860), 1 Dr. & Sm. 129; Watson v. Woodman (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 721; *Friend v. treaty agreements did not constitute an amalgamation between the contracting cos., nor a partnership either inter se or as regarded third persons, but were agreements of agency.—Re NORWICH EQUITABLE FIRE ASSURANCE SOCIETY, ROYAL INSURANCE CO.'S CLAIM (1887), 57 L. T. 241; 3 T. L. R. 781.

27. — Purchaser.—T. & Co. consigned goods to N. at an invoice price. N. dealt with the goods as owner, & sold them at such prices & in such manner as he thought fit. He sent regular monthly statements of the goods sold, & every month paid the invoice price of the goods comprised in the previous monthly statement. N. was partner in a firm of N., J. & Co., & by arrangement with his partners used the partnership as his bankers in reference to the above business, which he carried on for his special benefit, & an account of the moneys paid in & drawn out was regularly kept. N., J. & Co. having executed a deed of arrangement with their creditors, at a time when the account of N. showed a balance of £2,035 1s. 2d. in his favour, the account of N. with T. & Co. at that time showed a balance in favour of T. & Co. of £2,035 11s. 8d. T. & Co. sought to prove against the partnership for the amount of this balance, as being trust moneys held by N. as his trustee:—Held: the nature of the business carried on between T. & Co. & N. was that of vendor & purchaser, & not principal & agent, & there was no trust.

27 i. — Purchaser.—C. consigned goods to a co. on terms they should retain the property of C., the co. undertaking their storage & not to sell below certain prices & to account each year for the goods sold:—Held: the co. was not a purchaser of the goods from C., but merely an agent to sell on his behalf.—Re WARD, FARMERS' ASSOCN., LTD. (1897), 15 N. 27 ii. — — — — ——Pltf., a commission merchant, acting on a telegram from defts., distillers, bought a cargo of corn, which he shipped on a schooner, & drew on defts. for the amount. Pltf. insured the cargo in his own name. He then transferred the draft to a bank & procured its discount, indorsing the bill of lading to the bank & handing them the insurance policy, these documents to be regarded as collateral security. The bank was instructed not to deliver the bill of lading until after payment of the draft. On arrival it was found that the corn was damaged, & defts. refused delivery & declined to pay the draft. Pltf. retired the draft, & the corn was sold for the best price obtainable, & pltf. sued for the balance:—Held: the contract was one of sale & purchase & not of agency.—CORBY v. WILLIAMS (1881), 7 S. C. R. 470.—CAN.

27 iii. — — — — ——B. & G. agreed that B., Transvaal agent for certain beer syphons from Germany, G. to pay B. £300 for such syphons & no more, & to allow B. to purchase them from him on arrival for £425, & B. to order the syphons in his own name & pay all charges. On arrival B. was in any event to have the use of the syphons, & no delivery to G. was contemplated. In the event of B. purchasing, it was agreed that the ownership in the syphons should remain in G. till the whole of the £425 had been paid by B.:—Held: under this agreement, B. was not G.'s agent to import but the purchaser of the syphons from the manufacturer, the arrangement between B. & G. being merely an attempt to effect a pledge, in the guise of a sale, in favour of G. in security of an advance of £300.—GROSS v. BECK'S TRUSTEE (1906), Transvaal Supreme Court, 167.—S. A.

27 iv. — — — — ——D., traveller of pltf., a carriage manufacturing co., having been approached by the manager of W. Co. with a view to the purchase of carriages, & having declined the offer on the ground that W. Co.'s credit was not sufficiently good, was taken by the latter's manager to defts., who then signed a guarantee addressed to pltf. in the following terms: "We hereby oblige ourselves . . . to the amount of $1,000 for purchases they (W. Co.) may now make from you at any time." Pltf. then supplied W. Co. with carriages to the value of $1,824, subject to the condition that the title to the goods should not pass till they had been paid for. This amount being unpaid, pltf. sued defts. on the guarantee:—Held: the contention that the transaction was not a sale to W. Co., but an authority to them to sell as agents of pltf., could not stand, because W. Co. were to sell for themselves & the purchase-money was to be theirs.—E. N. HENRY CO. v. BIRMINGHAM (1908), 6 E. L. R. 385; (1909) 7 E. L. R. 163.—CAN.

27 v. — — — — ——Pltf. shipped machines to deft., accompanied by invoices which contained an item "to balance of account rendered" followed by charges for new merchandise sold & giving credit for amounts received. They supplied deft. with a book of lien notes which stipulated that the goods should remain the property of pltf., until paid for by purchasers, but no instructions were given as to selling price, nor did pltf. receive information regarding sales made by deft. The lien notes were filled in by customers, & deft., after indorsing them, sent them to pltf. for his credit. He also gave them a promissory note for balance due from him on his account, & had at times made payments in cash. Deft. had never made a charge for commission:—Held: the transactions represented genuine sales intended & expected to be paid for by deft.—RICHARDSON v. ELDRIDGE (1908), 34 Que. S. C. 421.—CAN.

27 vi. — — — — ——Pltf., carriage manufacturers & sellers, desired S., a manufacturers' agent, to handle their goods, & arranged with him to "cut out" a rival firm for which S. acted as agent, & deal with pltf. S. gave a signed order for some buggies, which provided that they were to be paid for by draft & that the property was to remain in pltf. until actually paid for. S. sold two of the buggies to deft., who gave a draft & two other buggies in payment, & shortly after the sale, pltf. drew on S. for the amount of the invoice. The draft was accepted, but not paid at maturity by S. S. had not handed over deft.'s note to pltf. Pltf. made a demand on S. for payment, who said he had no money, & that the buggies were in possession of deft. On the day that the pltf. made their demand on S. they appointed him their agent to sell, & agreed that the terms should apply to all goods sold & unsettled for, but this arrangement did not include the buggies sold to defts. which had been settled for:—Held: the transaction between pltf. & S. was one of sale & not of agency.—DOMINION CARRIAGE CO. v. WILSON (1910), 17 O. W. R. 363.—CAN.

27 vii. — — — — ——In an action for price of goods supplied, the facts were that from the commencement of the dealings pltf. had sent to deft. every week an invoice for goods "sold" showing the price, & had kept an accurate account of the sales. Pltf. made no request for an account, but would not have continued sending goods without receiving an account had he regarded deft. as an agent.

Deft. had kept no account of the transactions for the purpose of his commission. Deft. had submitted a draft agency agreement to pltf., but pltf. did not agree to its terms & had refused to sign it:—Held: the course of the dealings showed the relation of vendor & purchaser, & not that of principal & agent.—Re Watson & Co., Ex p. Atkin Brothers, [1904] 2 K. B. 753; Re Nevill, Ex p. White (1871), 6 Ch. App. 397, approved.—GALLAGHER v. FREEMAN (1913), 23 W. L. R. 389; 10 D. L. R. 438.—CAN.

27 viii. — — — — ——Pltf. ordered a tractor from defts., sellers of agricultural machinery, who were appointed agents by the manufacturers, & supplied by them with tractors at English prices. Defts., & not their customers, were responsible for the purchase price, defts., however, agreeing not to charge their customers more than a certain price:—Held: relations between the manufacturers & defts. were those of purchaser & seller & not of principal & agent.—SEGGER v. PHILIP BROS., S. A. L. R. (1915), C. P. D. 292.—AUS.

27 ix. — — — — ——Manufacturers supplied goods to a retail firm under agreements in which the latter were described as "stockists," "consignees" & "stockists or agents." The property in the goods was to remain in the manufacturers till actually sold & paid for. The goods were to be supplied at wholesale prices, & the retailers were to sell at prices fixed by the manufacturers & to get the difference between the wholesale & retail prices. The retailers sold the goods to their own customers, & debited them with the retail price in their own books, & rendered accounts to them in their own name. The customers' names were not disclosed to the manufacturers, & the retailers used the money received for the goods for their own purposes. The manufacturers rendered accounts to the retailers showing the amounts due in respect of goods supplied which were settled by the retailers. The amounts received by the retailers from their customers were never appropriated in a separate account to the manufacturers. The accounts rendered to their customers by the retailers contained items other than the manufacturers' goods:—Held: the relation was that of seller & buyer, not that of principal & del credere agent.—MICHELIN TYRE CO., LTD. v. MACFARLANE (GLASGOW), LTD. (1916), 2 S. L. T. 221; 54 Sc. L. R. 1.—SCOT.

27 x. — — — — ——A co-operative dairy co. received butter-fat from suppliers to be manufactured into butter & cheese. The butter-fat went into bulk, & the identity of each supplier's property was lost. The suppliers were consulted each year as to the mode of disposal of the butter & cheese, & as the co. had deducted the cost of manufacture according to a fixed scale, the proceeds were divided proportionately among the suppliers:—Held: (1) the relation between the suppliers & the price he likes & to receive payment at any time he likes, but is bound, if he sell his goods, to pay the consignor for them at a fixed price & at a fixed time, is not a del credere agent, but a principal; it is immaterial that the parties designate their relationship by the term "agency" (MELLISH, L.J.).—TOWLE (JOHN) & Co. v. The fact that by the contract the agent guarantees all accounts shows that he is not the real purchaser, but a del credere agent.—Re SMITH, Ex p. BRIGHT (1879), 10 Ch. D. 566; 48 L. J. Upon the invitation of bkpts. appcts., wholesale silversmiths, sent certain goods to bkpts.' office as samples, & the goods were to remain at appcts.' risk. The usual practice of bkpts. was to introduce their customer to appcts., who supplied him with goods corresponding to the samples, but in cases of urgency bkpts. sold the samples themselves:—Held: the parties were not in fact vendors & purchasers, but principals & agents.—Re WATSON & Co., Ex p. ATKIN BROTHERS, [1904] 2 K. 30. — Servant.]—Prisoner, who kept a refreshment house, was employed by the prosecutors to get orders for their goods, collect the money & pay it over. He was paid by commission. He was to go about among farmers to get orders, but no definite time was to be spent in so doing. He was styled by them their agent for the particular district. The prosecutors had a store at B., under control of prisoner, who supplied customers from the stores pursuant to orders he obtained. In order to obtain the security of a guarantee society for prisoner's conduct, & in compliance with their regulations, it was arranged that prosecutors should pay prisoner a salary of £1 a year. Prisoner having got into arrear was treated by prosecutors as a debtor for the amount. Prisoner fraudulently appropriated money which he received from customers & gave a false account:—Held: a conviction for embezzlement could not be sustained, as the above facts did not establish that prisoner was servant of prosecutors, their relation being rather that of agent & principal.—*R. v. 31. ———.]—Where the person employed to receive money is a clerk or servant, he must receive it himself & must hand it over as he receives it. But where the authority given is to receive the money & then not to hand it over in specie but to pay over an equivalent sum, the case is very different. If a servant intrusted with his master's money becomes bkpt. the money would not belong to his creditors. But where an attorney or commercial agent is employed to receive money to be paid over to his principal the next day, it would in the event of the bkpy. of the attorney or agent, whilst the money remained in his hands, form part of his general assets. Where the person to whom the money is paid stands in the relation of a clerk or servant, the payment to him, whether in cash or by a cheque which is afterwards paid, is a good payment to the principal (BLACKBURN, J.).—BRIDGES v. It was also provided that the price at which the machines should be invoiced to A. should be £37 10s. net duty paid, o.i.f. pense, the ship to be consigned to the charterer's agents at ports of loading & discharge, & a stevedore for the outward cargo to be appointed by the charterer, but to be paid by & to act under the captain's orders. The charterer put up the ship as a general ship for Port L. & appointed a stevedore, who with his men went on board for the purpose of stowing the vessel, in the usual course of his business. The master gave no orders to or in any way interfered with the stevedore, only looking into the hold occasionally to see how the cargo was being stowed for the safety of the ship. Pltfs.' agent arranged with the broker of the charterer for the freight & carriage to Port L. of certain sugar-pans, & sent them alongside the ship. On demurrer:—Held: (1) either the order of quarter sessions was bad, as delegating to the surveyors a discretion as to the line of new highway to be made, or, if the words to this purport were rejected, it did not appear that the order was obeyed; (2) the old highway was not shown to have been effectually stopped.—*R. v. 48. Metropolitan local authority.]—A metropolitan local authority cannot delegate to their officers their power under Metropolis Management Acts of ordering drainage of a group or block of houses by a combined operation. To prove that a pipe draining a group or block of houses in London is a drain, as having been laid pursuant to an order of the proper local authority for drainage of the group or block by a combined operation, it is generally enough to produce from the records of that authority an application for their sanction to the laying of the pipe marked by the proper officer of the authority as approved, for the proper inference in such a case is that the application received the sanction of the authority. It is otherwise if at the time of application the authority had purported to delegate their power of sanctioning such applications to the officer in question, for then the proper inference is that the matter was dealt with by the officer himself & not brought before the authority.—*HIGH v. 68. Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1914 (c. 47), s. 5 (1), (2).]—A debtor gave his sister a power of attorney authorising her to execute a deed of arrangement for the benefit of his creditors & to make any affidavit necessary for registering the deed. It was executed by her as his attorney under the power, & she also made the affidavit required by s. 5 (1) of the above Act to be made "by the debtor" on the registration of the deed stating the total estimated amount of property & liabilities included under the deed & the names & addresses of the creditors. The debtor escaped bkpey. proceedings by the execution of the deed & afterwards recognised it & concurred in the trustee acting under it. He subsequently made an application for a declaration that the deed was void:—Held: (1) execution of the deed by debtor personally was not necessary, & it could be executed by the donee of the power of attorney given by debtor for that purpose; (2) the affidavit required by s. 5 (1) could not be made by the donee of the power, but must be sworn by debtor personally, & the deed was void under s. 2 for non-registration.

101. General agent—Special agent.]—There is a wide distinction between general & particular agents. If a person be appointed general agent, as in the case of a factor for a merchant residing abroad, the principal is bound by his acts. But an agent, constituted so for a particular purpose & under a limited & circumscribed power, cannot bind the principal by any act in which he exceeds his authority, for that would be to say that one man can bind another against his consent (BULLER, J.).—FENN v. HARRISON, No. 351, post.

being only bound to the extent of authority given.—EAST INDIA CO. v. HENSLEY (1794), 1 Esp. 111.

103. — — —.]—Where a purchase is made by an agent, he is not a special agent if he has any discretion to exceed the sum ordered to be given by his principal: if he has such discretion, the principal is bound by his contracts, though they exceed the sum which he is ordered by his principal to give.—*HICKS v. E. Commercial traveller.]—A commercial traveller who, without a licence, offered goods for sale in Saskatoon on behalf of a merchant in Toronto, was convicted under City Bye-law 1025, which required that a licence should be taken out by a commercial traveller offering or selling goods on behalf of a merchant selling direct to the consumer. City Act, 1915, s. 204 (62), only gave power for a bye-law to license commercial travellers selling on behalf of principals "not having his principal place of business in the city":—Held: as the bye-law did not contain these words of limitation, it was ultra vires, being broader than authorized by stat., & the conviction was quashed.—*R. v. But deft. swore that when he applied to the solr. the latter told him he had £200 to lend, that he had advertised it, & that it was the mtgee.'s money:—Held: assuming the solr. to be the agent of the mtgee., as he was not a general agent, but a particular agent, deft. could not assume that he had been authorised to do an illegal act.—ALMON v. FOOT, R. E. D. 1.—CAN.

f. Land agent—Newfoundland.]—An authority by parol to an agent to let or dispose of property is as effectual in Newfoundland as the most formal deed.—WARDEN v. WADDEN (1893) 7 Nfld. L. R. 735.—NFLD.

PART IV. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 1.

128 l. Agent to execute deed—Renewal of lease.]—An agent of a trustee, residing in Newfoundland, for an estate in Newfoundland, undertook to renew leases which had expired. For so doing he had no authority except instructions contained in letters from his principal, not under seal, though in other respects the homologation was complete. To the leases so granted he had attached seals. The law of Newfoundland did not require any such formality to render valid a lease. The trustee sold the property & ignored the tenants holding under the new leases, as if no leases had been granted, upon the ground that an authority to an agent to execute a document under seal must be given

136. Deed executed for principal's benefit—Estoppel.]—G. having through physical infirmity become incapable of managing his affairs, intrusted his father, H., to undertake sole direction of them in his stead, & H. exercised the office of agent for many years. P., a debtor of G., having become embarrassed, H. was sent for by the creditors' attorney to execute a deed of assignment of P.'s estate for the benefit of his creditors; he did so, & entered the amount of the debt in a schedule annexed to the deed. G. having died, & a dispute arising as to his claim, H. filed his bill to establish his claim as a creditor upon P.'s estate:—Held: (1) the effect of H.'s having executed the deed was to prevent him, as his son's agent, from taking any proceedings against P. so that the estate of P. would obtain a benefit through such execution; (2) the way in which the parties had dealt with the deed was a beneficial thing for the son, & would enable the ct. also to deal with it for the benefit of the son; (3) the execution of the deed by H. was valid in the circumstances, although he might not have been appointed an agent by deed.—GOODALL v. MAXWELL (1845), 6 L. T. O. S. 166.

137. Proof of authority—Conduct of principal—Recognition of agency—Non-production of power.]—In an action on a policy of insurance subscribed by deft.'s agent under a power of attorney, it is sufficient proof of the agency that deft. is in the habit of paying losses so subscribed by the agent in his name, without producing the power of attorney.—HAUGHTON v. EWBANK (1814), 4 Camp. 88.

138. Subsequent acknowledgment—Inference of re-delivery.]—Where a deed of gift executed by an attorney under a power which does not authorise the execution of such a deed is afterwards shown to the grantor & acknowledged & treated as a valid deed, & the grantor acts as if the property comprised therein had duly passed to the grantee, the ct. may infer that there has been a re-delivery as at the date of the acknowledgment, & the grantor is bound thereby, & it is not necessary to show that at the date of acknowledgment the grantor knew he was not already bound.—Re SKYMOUR, FIELDING v. SEYMOUR. [1913] 1 Ch. 475; 82 L. J. Ch. 233; 108 L. T. 392; 57 Sol. Jo. 321, C. A.

139. Property in & production of deed.]—A power of attorney is the property of the person to whom it is given; where in an action on a lease executed under a power of attorney the party executing was not duly served with a subpoena duces tecum to produce the power:—Held: secondary evidence of its contents was not receivable.—HIBBERD v. KNIGHT (1848), 2 Exch. 11; 3 New Pract. Cas. 75; 17 L. J. Ex. 119; 10 L. T. O. S. 395; 12 Jur. 162; 154 E. R. 384, Ex. Ch.

PART IV. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 2.

137 i. Proof of authority—Conduct of principal—Recognition of agency—Non-production of power.]—A bond was executed by D. for V. as his attorney. D. on examination by plff. as to his authority said he had a power of attorney (not produced) from V. & had acted for him in relation to the matter in respect of which the bond was given for several months.—Held: D. was authorised to execute the bond.—BALFOUR v. DRUMMOND (1890), 9 C. L. T. Dec. N. 201.—CAN.

137 ii. — Conduct of third party—Recognition of agency—Non-production of power.]—An agent having appeared as plff. in an action for the balance of a bill of exchange, deft. called for a power of attorney. Deft. had from time to time paid plff., who received the money under written instructions received some time back from the principal.—Held: deft. had by his conduct admitted the agent's authority.—SEWELL & Co. v. NOWLIN (1844), Blount, 284—1. of M.

137 iii. — Ancient deed.]—Production of a deed thirty years old, purporting to be executed under a power of attorney, does not prove the power. Where the only proof of authority was the production of a copy of an unsealed

SUB-SECT. 3.—OTHER POINTS.

140. Deed not essential to validity of transaction—Principal bound.]—Where a married woman contracts, by deed, without any power of attorney from her husband, for the hire of a servant, plff. may consider the deed as void, & declare on the simple contract against the husband; & in such case the deed is evidence of the contract. If another person joins in such deed, it does not take away the remedy against the husband to sue him in assumpsit.—WHITE v. CUYLER (1795), 6 Term Rep. 176; 1 Esp. 200; 101 E. R. 497.

141. — Transfer of ship.]—A ship, having been sold by auction, was transferred by an instrument executed by the auctioneer under seal, though not acting under any power of attorney:—Held: as no transfer under seal was required by Act of Parliament it operated as a written transfer by the principal.—HUNTER v. PARKER, No. 1045, post.

142. — Sale of chattel—Principal not liable on covenants.]—If an agent, acting under a parol authority to sell a chattel, sells it under a contract purporting to be executed by himself as owner of the chattel, & made in fact under seal, though not required by law to be so made in order that it may be binding, such contract under seal is binding on the principal as a contract of sale, & passes the property in the chattel to the vendee, but the deed & the covenants thereof are the deed & covenants of the agent & not of the principal.—Low v. MCGILL, No. 212, post.

143. Lease by mortgagee—"As agent" of mortgagor—Mortgagee not in possession.]—R., a legal mtgee., who collected rents as agent for the mtgors., but did not assume the position of mtgee. in possession, was a party to a tenancy agreement under seal, which was expressed to be made between R. "as agent, hereinafter called the landlord," & S., the tenant. Mtgors. were not parties to the agreement, & had not given power to R. under seal:—Held: (1) the agreement operated to effect a legal demise of the premises; (2) a purchaser from mtgors. was entitled to enforce as against the tenant the covenants contained in the agreement.—CHAPMAN v. SMITH, [1907] 2 Ch. 97; 76 L. J. Ch. 394; 96 L. T. 662; 51 Sol. Jo. 428.

PART IV. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.

144 i. General rule—Not necessary.]—An agent acting for B. signed an agreement for the purchase of an hotel. The agreement was one which did not require to be under seal:—Held: in such case the appointment of the agent did not require to be under seal, or, in fact, in writing, & B. could be sued under the agreement made by the so doing need not be in writing unless the instrument is one within Stat. Frauds.—COOKE v. JACKSON (1850), 15 L. T. O. S. 523.

145. — Del credere agent.—An agreement by a factor to sell upon a del credere commission need not be in writing, not being a promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person within Stat. Frauds, s. 4.—COUTURIER v. HASTIE (1852), 8 Exch. 40; 22 L. J. Ex. 97; 155 E. R. 1250; reversd. on another point (1856), 5 H. L. Cas. 673, H. L.

147. — Stockbroker—Half commission.—By a verbal agreement with defts., plffs., a firm of stockbrokers, undertook to transact ordinary business, & be answerable upon the Stock Exchange for customers whom defts. should introduce, upon terms that defts. should receive half the commission earned upon, & be liable to plffs. for half the losses arising from, such transactions. Owing to the default of a customer a loss was incurred by plffs., half of which they sought to recover under the above agreement:—Held: (1) the promise to be answerable for the losses was the ulterior consequence only of the above agreement, the main object of which was to regulate the terms of defts.'s employment in respect of transactions in which he was interested; (2) upon the principle applicable in the case of a del credere agency, the contract was one of indemnity, not a promise to guarantee the debt of another person; (3) Stat. Frauds, s. 4, did not apply; (4) the agreement was valid.—SUTTON & Co. v. GREY, [1894] 1 Q. B. 285; 63 L. J. Q. B. 633; 69 L. T. 673; 42 W. R. 195; 10 T. L. R. 90; 38 Sol. Jo. 77; 9 R. 106, C. A.

148. — Contract for lease.—A bill for specific performance of a contract for a 21 years' lease alleged to be entered into by deft. P., as agent for pltf., with the other deft. S., stated that P. had informed pltf. that S. had written him a letter constituting the contract, & further stated that P. had entered into "the said" contract as agent for & on behalf of pltf. On demurrer:—Held: (1) the bill contained a sufficient averment of a contract in writing to satisfy Stat. Frauds; (2) it was not necessary that the agency of P. should be constituted by writing.—HEARD v. PILLEY (1869), 4 Ch. App. 548; 38 L. J. Ch. 718; 21 L. T. 68; 33 J. P. 628; 17 W. R. 750, C. A.

148 I. — Contract for lease.—An agent's authority to contract for a lease of lands need not be in writing. Scmble: a written proposal for a lease made to an agent, who has not power to enter into a contract for such a lease, may be acknowledged by parol by the principal, so as to bind him.—CALLAGHAN v. PEPPER, 2 I. Ed. R. 399 (E. E.).—IR.

148 II. ——Defts.' agent was authorised, though not in writing, to advertise a house & farm for letting, & laid a proposal offering £2 per acre for such term as should be agreed on before defts., who authorised its acceptance if the agent was satisfied with security for rent. A draft lease was prepared for thirty-one years from defts. to pltf., & the agent wrote on it names of proposed sureties, & pltf. at an auction purchased some furniture for the house & a large amount of manure. In a suit for specific performance:—Held: the agent having full authority, & the agreement between agent & pltf. being preliminary to a formal lease, the former need not be authorised in writing to conclude it, & specific performance granted.—*MC CAUSLAND v. 148 III. ——Defts. who were incorporated under Charitable Associations Act, R. S. M., 1902, c. 18, passed a resolution in favour of opening club rooms, & the house committee, which was vested with full power to rent or lease suitable club rooms, agreed to lease certain premises from pltf. An offer in writing to take the premises for two years on certain terms therein stated was made to pltf.'s agent, & this offer was signed "Loyal Order of Moose, per W. G. G." G., who held the office of Vice-Dictator, had assisted the house committee considerably & a vote of thanks had been passed to him for his untiring efforts on behalf of the house committee. The offer was accepted:—Held: defts., acting by resolution, delegated their powers with respect to renting club rooms, & the house committee had practically delegated their powers to G., & clothed him with authority to make the offer to pltf.—PILFORD v. LOYAL ORDER OF MOOSE (1913), 25 W. L. R. 868.—CAN.

149 I. — Purchase of land.—In an action against defts. to compel a conveyance to pltf. it was proved that they had purchased certain land as agents for pltf., who had entered into possession, made improvements, & paid interest on the purchase-money, on faith of the arrangement with defts.:—Held:—pltf. could prove the agency & the purchase by parol evidence notwithstanding Stat. Frauds, & was entitled to a conveyance. James v. Smith, [1891] 1 Ch. 384; Re Marlborough (Duke), Davys v. Whitehead, [1894] 2 Ch. 133; Rochefoucauld v. Boustead, [1897] 1 Ch. 196, C. 149 II. — By sub-agent.—An agent to purchase land employed a sub-agent, who bought in his own name. In an action by the principal against the sub-agent:—Held: the agreement to act as sub-agent did not require to be in writing, because the cause of action was not upon the agreement as creating a trust in land, but upon a constructive trust not created or intended by the parties; the cause of action arose ex delicto & not ex contractu, & Stat. Frauds had no application. Barlett v. Pickers-gill (1760), 4 East, 577 n., distd.—PORTER v. TE KORAMO, 4 J. R. N. S. S. C. 1.—N.Z.

g. Land agent.—Land Agents Act, 1912, s. 13, does not require that all the terms of the agreement between an agent & a principal should be in writing. 155. Memorandum of deposit—Equitable mortgage.]—Certain bankers petitioned for the sale of an equitable mtge. The memorandum of deposit of title deeds was not written or signed by bkpt., but was drawn out by a clerk of the bankers, when he left the deeds at the bank. It was submitted on behalf of petitioners that the clerk might be considered bkpt.'s agent pro hac vice.—Held: the memorandum of deposit being entirely in the handwriting of the clerk of the depository, it was not sufficient to take the case out of the general rule, which requires a memorandum to accompany a deposit of deeds by way of equitable mtge.—Re KINGSFORD, Ex p. EMMERTON (1834), 3 Deac. & Ch. 654, C. of R.

156. Agent—Special authority unnecessary.]—A letter written by an agent within scope of his authority, which refers to & recognises an unsigned document as containing the terms of a contract made by his principal, is a sufficient memorandum of the contract within Stat. Frauds, s. 4. It is not necessary, in order to satisfy the stat., that the principal should have authorised the agent to sign the letter as a record of the contract.—*GRIFFITHS (JOHN) CYCLE CORPN., LTD. v. 158. Broker—Authority as such while acting for both buyer & seller.]—A broker employed to sell goods for any person, who agrees for the sale of them, & gives to the purchaser & to his employer a sale note, is to be considered as agent for both parties, & such note is a sufficient note in writing within Stat. Frauds.—RUCKER v. CAMMEYER (1794), 1 Esp. 105.

The contract was actually made by T., employed by pltf., and was in these terms: "Sold H. 320 quarters of [pltf.'s] malt at 74 shillings. (Signed) T." It was objected that T. was agent for pltf. only, and that, as he only had signed the sale note, Stat. Frauds was not satisfied.—Held: it was sufficient, as T. was the agent of both parties in making the contract.—HICKS v. HANKIN (1802), 4 Esp. 114.

A. deft.'s agent, offered flour for sale, & pltf. authorised brokers to buy a portion of it. A. & the brokers negotiated a bargain, the former acting for deft. & the latter for pltf. The brokers signed a contract note for both parties.—Held: (1) there was no evidence that deft. had made the brokers his agents to sign the contract note; (2) there was not a note or memorandum sufficient to satisfy Stat. 164. ———.—[A broker acting for pltf. made a contract for the sale of goods to deft., sending a note to each party, but signing only that which was sent to the seller; he, however, entered the contract in his book, in which he signed both bought & sold notes. Deft. kept the note sent to him without objection until called upon to accept the goods, when he repudiated the contract, assigning for reason that the note sent to him was not signed:—Held: (1) the conduct of deft. amounted to an admission that the broker had authority to make the contract for him; (2) his signature to the sold note bound deft.; (3) the signed entry in the broker's book was a sufficient memorandum of the bargain to satisfy Stat. Frauds.—THOMPSON v. GARDNER (1876), 1 C. P. D. 777.

165. Estate agent—Authority to sell.—[An authority given to an estate agent to sell property primâ facie implies an authority to effect a sale binding in law, & includes an authority to execute an agreement on behalf of the principal where the law requires a contract in writing.—ROSENBAUM v. BELSON, [1900] 2 Ch. 267; 69 L. J. Ch. 509; 82 L. T. 658; 48 W. R. 522; 44 Sol. Jo. 485.

166. Factor—Authority as such while acting for both buyer & seller.—[Deft., having negotiated with pltf., a hop-grower, for the purchase, by sample, of some hops, went with him to his factor, when deft. agreed to buy the hops, & in the presence of both parties the factor wrote out bought & sold notes, the former of which contained the name of deft., & was delivered by the factor to him. The date of the notes was altered by the factor at the request of deft., in order to give him further time for payment. The hops were afterwards weighed in the presence of pltf. & deft., when a dispute arose as to their weight & condition, & deft. refused to accept them:—Held: (1) there was evidence for the jury that the factor was agent of both parties for the purpose of drawing a record of the contract binding on them.—DURRELL v. EVANS (1862), 1 H. & C. 174; 31 L. J. Ex. 337; 7 L. T. 97; 9 Jur. N. S. 104; 10 W. R. 665; 158 E. R. 848, Ex. Ch.

165 ii. ———.—[The owner of land gave parol authority to an agent to sell, & the agent accordingly entered into a parol contract for sale, & communicated the fact & the particulars of the contract to his principal by letter:—Held: sufficient to satisfy the stat.—McMILLAN v. BENTLEY (1869), 16 Gr. 387.—CAN.

165 iii. ———.—[To admit the proposition that an agent could sell the property of another & prove by parol testimony, in an action for commission, a verbal mandate authorising such sale, would destroy the safeguards of the proprietor. The retaining of services to sell & the giving of a mandate to sell are without distinction, & neither can be proved by parol testimony.—DUDEMAINE v. PELLETIER (1914), 47 Que. S. C. 154.—CAN.

165 iv. ———.—[Or to purchase.—A., acting as agent for B., but without written authority, bought certain lands. 168. Traveller—Instructed by buyer to make & sign entry in latter's book.—[A contract for the sale of goods was, in the presence & at the desire of the buyer, written & signed by the seller's traveller in a book belonging to the former, as follows: "Of N. & Co., 30 mats of Maurit., à 71s. cash, two months. J. D."—Held: not a sufficient note or memorandum of the bargain to satisfy Stat. Frauds, s. 17, J. D. not appearing to be authorised to sign it as agent for the buyer.—GRAHAM v. MUSSON (MOSSON) (1839), 5 Bing. N. C. 603; 7 Scott, 709; 8 L. J. C. P. 324; 3 Jur. 483; 132 E. R. 1232.

169. ———.—[Instructed to sign entry made by buyer in latter's book.—J. D., pltf.'s traveller, sold defts. sugar on account of pltf's. At the time of the sale, one of defts. wrote the following entry in their book, which J. D., on being requested, then signed, viz.: "Of N. & Co., 150 mats Ma. sugar, à 71-6, as sample, per sea, F.'s wharf. First & second ship. Signed, J. D." J. D. had, upon many previous occasions, sold sugars for pltf's. to defts. on credit, upon which occasions similar sale notes had been signed by him, & these contracts defts. had always performed:—Held: the above entry was not a sufficient memorandum in writing within Stat. Frauds, s. 17, to bind defts., J. D. not being their agent for that purpose.—GRAHAM v. FRETWELL (1841), 3 Man. & G. 308; 4 Scott, N. R. 25; 11 L. J. C. P. 41; 133 E. R. 1186.

170. ———.—[Authority as such.—Pltf.'s traveller, on taking an order for goods from deft., wrote out, in the ordinary course of his business, in his own order book, & in deft.'s presence, a memorandum in a salesman, but not signed by deft. Deft. refused to accept delivery of the goods, contending that the order was countermanded before their arrival & that in any case there was no contract within Stat. Frauds:—Held: a traveller or salesman of a wholesale dealer is presumably not authorised by the persons who buy from him to sign a contract for them as purchasers, & this presumption is not rebutted by the memorandum of the order being made up in the purchaser's presence in duplicate, one copy being given to the buyer & the other copy being sent to the wholesale house. The entry of the name of the buyer made by the salesman is not evidence per se of his agency to sign. Murphy v. Boese (1875), L. R. 10 Ex. 126, folld.; *Elliot v. duplicate of the order, writing therein the name of deft. as purchaser, & handing one of such duplicate memoranda to deft., who kept it:—Held: (1) the traveller, in what he did, was acting in the ordinary course of his business on behalf of pltf. alone; (2) there was no evidence that he signed, or had any authority to sign, the memorandum as agent of deft. within Stat. Frauds, s. 17.—MURPHY v. BOESE 40; 32

SECT. 3.—EVIDENCE OF AGENCY.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

171. Burden of proof.—The burden of proof is on the person dealing with anyone as an agent through whom he seeks to charge another as principal. He must show that the agency existed & that the agent had the authority which he assumed to exercise, or otherwise that the principal is estopped from disputing it.—POLE v. LEASK, No. 1, ante.

172. —Pltf. instructed deft., a broker, to purchase certain goods for him. Deft., professing to have bought the goods as broker, delivered a bought note to pltf., "Bought by order & for account of" pltf., "from principal, 102 barrels of raisins, etc." Pltf. paid to deft. the purchase-money, & received from him a delivery warrant for the goods; but, upon pltf.'s presenting it to the wharfingers holding the goods, they refused to deliver them, on the ground that the warrant was fictitious. PART IV. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.

171 i. Burden of proof.—In a suit against a principal for acts of an agent, the onus lies on pltf. to prove that the alleged agent was the duly accredited agent of deft. in reference to the subject of the claim.—HATHE RAM v. GOBIND RAM (1868), 3 Agre, 131.—IND.

171 ii. —The onus of proving an agency lies strictly on the party seeking to enforce a contract made with the alleged agent. Where pltf. seeks to enforce a contract on the ground that it was made with a person whom deft. held out to the world as his agent by permitting him to deal in a certain way, pltf. must prove he was aware of & contracted on the strength of that course of dealing from which he seeks to show an implied agency.—ROBINSON v. TYSON (1888), 9 N. S. W. 297.—AUS.

171 iii. —The burden of proof is on the person dealing with anyone as an agent, through whom it is sought to charge another as principal, & it must be shown the agency did exist & that the agent had the authority he assumed to exercise.—McCORMACK v. GALLAGHER (1917), 44 N. B. R. 630; 36 D. L. R. 711.—CAN.

176 i. Necessity for proof.—Where the action is against the agent of pltf. in the suit, it is not sufficient to produce an affidavit purporting to be made by him; it must be proved to have been made by him, & that he was pltf.'s agent.—McLAUREN v. BLACKLOCK (1857), 14 U. C. R. 24.—CAN.

176 ii. —To sustain an action against a principal for damages occasioned in performance of a contract, it must be shown that the contractor is the authorised agent of the party to recover back the money so paid:—Held: (1) the burden of proving the broker was the real principal lay on pltf.; (2) pltf. might deliver interrogatories to deft. under C. L. P. Act, 1854 (c. 125), s. 51, requiring him to answer whether he acted in the transaction as principal or agent, & if as agent, to name his principal.—THÖL v. LEASK (1855), 10 Exch. 704; 24 L. J. 173. —Where, in an action to money alleged to have been received by deft. as the result of bets on commission, deft. pleads that he acted as a principal & not as an agent, the burden of proof that deft. acted as an agent lies on pltf.—POTTER v. CODRINGTON (1892), 9 T. L. R. 54.

174. S. P. PRITCHARD v. DOUGHTON, LOVYCK & Co. (1900), 16 T. L. R. 377, C. A.

175. —Pltf. sued deft. upon a Lloyd's fire policy effected through an agent. Deft. relied upon a misstatement in the policy, which was due to a mistake of the agent. The question being whether the agent acted on behalf of pltf. or deft.:—Held: (1) the burden of proving the agent acted on behalf of deft. lay on pltf.; (2) pltf. not having discharged the burden of proof, was not entitled to succeed.—BANCROFT v. HEATH (1901), 17 T. L. R. 425; 6 Com. Cas. 137, C. A.

176. Necessity for proof.—A statement of grounds of appeal was signed by W. R., T. G., & for W. H., W. P. IL., "churchwardens & overseers" of parish A., which formed part of a union:—Held: such signature was insufficient, it not appearing that W. H. had given W. P. H. authority to sign for him.—R. v. SURREY J.J., ALLHALLOWS v. WIMBLEDON (1844), 5 Q. B. 506; 1 Dav. & Mer. 106; 1 New Sess. Cas. 124; 13 L. J. M. C. 86; 3 L. T. O. S. 53; 8 J. P. 440; 1 Jur. 379; 114 E. R. 1340.

176 iii. —In ejectment for non-payment of rent, founded on an agreement entered into by an agent "to let the premises for 150 years, at £150 rent, three leases to be made in equal proportion":—Held: an authority in the agent, at the time of signing the agreement, need not be proved.—STEWART v. Sisson (1832), 114 E. R. 512.—IR.

176 iv. —Agent under power of attorney.—In an action in a magistrate's ct. by an interested alien enemy, deft. applied for absolution on the ground that the general power of attorney under which pltf.'s book-keeper instituted the action, was not produced in ct. The magistrate refused the application on the ground that general powers of attorney were not registered in magistrates' cts., the presumption being that an agent is duly authorised & the onus being on the other side to raise the question of authorisation. On appeal:—Held: in view of Rules of Ct. 8 & 413, the magistrate's reasons were not good; a magistrate should have some prima facie evidence of authority; & the practice of the Supreme Ct. requiring the production of a power should, in the absence of other established usage, be followed in magistrates' cts.—LABUSCHAGNE v. MAARBURGER, S. A. L. R. (1915), C. P. D. 163.—AUS.

1. Whether agency exists—Question for jury.—The question of agency is a question of fact for the jury, there being some evidence to go to them, of which the judge must decide.—DE BLAQUIERE v. BECKER (1859), 8 C. P. 167.—CAN.

m. Inference of agency.—Whether authority has been conferred on an agent is a question of fact, which may be proved by showing that it was expressly given; or the acts of recognition by the principal may be such that the authority may be inferred.—SAYWARD v. DUNSMUIR & HARRISON, 11 B. C. R. 375.—CAN.

Agent of foreign company.—In order to prove that a person, acting as agent of a foreign insurance co. by issuing policies in its name & receiving premiums, is the co.'s accredited agent, it is not necessary to show his appointment under the corporate seal where such person has acted as agent on various occasions & paid losses in the name of the co.—*ROBERTSON v. o. Agent to sell land.—Where statement of a price which an owner of land is willing to take & reference to a commission does not vest a real estate agent with a general monopoly of sale. p. —In an action for specific performance of an alleged contract for sale of land, the evidence showed that deft. A. K. had no authority to make a contract on behalf of deft. S. K., & that S. K. had not ratified the act; further, that A. K. had no authority to sell the land:—Held: where an agent not expressly authorised sells real estate, his authority to exercise such power is not readily inferred from the act of selling.—WILLIAMS v. KLINGEL (1913), 23 W. L. R. 67; 9 D. L. R. 871.—CAN.

178. Incomplete agreement.—Offer of agency not accepted.—Underwriting.]—A contract made by an agent under a written & signed offer of agency, purporting to have been duly & effectually accepted by the agent, will not, if such acceptance has not in fact been communicated to the principal, be binding upon the principal by estoppel.

A. signed an underwriting letter to the secretary of the promoters of a co. whereby for a commission he undertook on or before a certain day to subscribe or find subscribers for 10,000 shares in the co., or "such less number as may be accepted by you," & it was agreed that in the event of his failing to comply with the terms thereof the secretary as his agent might apply on his behalf for the shares guaranteed by him. The secretary signed this letter, purporting to accept the offer therein contained to the extent of 10,000 shares, & applied for shares in A.'s name, which were allotted to him, but no notice of the acceptance was communicated to A. until after the allotment:—Held: the letter was an offer requiring acceptance by the secretary & communication of such acceptance to A. in order to bind A.—*Re CONSORT DEEP LEVEL GOLD MINES, LTD., Ex p. 177 iii. —.]—In an action by pltfs. on certain promissory notes, alleged to represent the balance of purchase-money for agricultural machines, parol evidence was given by C. to prove that he was pltf.'s agent & had done certain acts on their behalf. During the giving of the parol evidence, it was revealed that C.'s appointment was in writing:—Held: there was good ground for striking out so much of C.'s evidence as was given before the fact was revealed that his authority was in writing, & for objecting to so much as was given after that fact got out, but as no application was made to strike out the one, and no objection raised as to the reception of the other, the testimony was entitled to consideration, & it could not be treated as of no value.—HARRIS v. DUSTIN (1892), 1 Terr. L. R. 404.—CAN.

177 iv. —.]—Deft. employed pltf. to sell his property, but no written mandate was given, & pltf. put up his sale board on the property. Another agent who had already been appointed for the same object was showing the property to a customer who saw pltf.'s sale board. The customer, not having heard from the agent for a few days, called upon pltf., who introduced him to the owner:—Held: pltf. entitled to give verbal testimony to prove the existence of the oral mandate, as deft. had stated in his depositions that he would divide the commission between his two agents, & had allowed pltf. to fix up his sale board, & had handed the keys to the customer when introduced by pltf.—(1914), 45

The whole terms of the contract were at defts.' request arranged on a Sunday, & on same day entered in the broker's contract-book with the exception of the name of the seller, which was added next day, & the sold note delivered to defts.:—Held: (1) the entire contract being, as far as it affected defts., completed on Sunday, was void by Sunday Observance Act, 1677 (c. 7); (2) the conduct of defts. made no difference.—SMITH v. SPARROW (1827), 4 Bing. 84; 12 Moore, C. P. 260; 5 L. J. O. S. C. P. 80.

q. Facts excluding agency.—Payment under compulsion.]—In 1891 a two-inch water service pipe was supplied by deft. to pltf.'s brewery. In 1895 pltf. conveyed the property to a co., of which O. was manager, & some time afterwards deft., as a means of enforcing payment of a claim against pltf. in respect of the pipe, turned off the water. O., to prevent serious loss to the co., paid the amount in dispute, & afterwards obtained it from pltf., who in turn sought to recover it from deft. as paid on his account:—Held: the fact that the payment made by the co. was made under compulsion excluded the idea that the co. was acting in the matter as agent of pltf.—*LINDBERG v. After the accident deft., who was on the driving box, offered money to the injured party, & gave his card; & upon the owner of the gig afterwards calling upon him, deft. observed that "cutting in" was all fair upon such occasions, & he "intended, if the gig had gone quietly out, to have pulled up to let it in again":—Held: (1) the jury was warranted in inferring that the postillions had acted as they did with the sanction of deft.; (2) he was liable in trespass.—*M'LAUGHLIN v. quently, upon an alteration of circumstances, M. objected to the contract, & refused to join in the purchase:—Held: (1) there was no evidence that M. had entered into any agreement, or that R. acted as his agent; (2) the recital of an agreement in a document intended to be executed would not bind a party who had done nothing to recognise it, though at one time it was apparent that he was willing to execute it.—*FOLIGNO v. 188. Assignment for benefit of creditors—Debtor carrying on business under control of trustees—Not agent of trustees.—[P. executed a deed of inspectorship under Bkpcy. Act, 1861 (c. 134), by which he assigned all his property, but not his business, to trustees, upon trust for the benefit of his creditors. The deed contained a covenant by P. to carry on his business to the best of his ability under the inspection & control of the trustees, to whom he was to pay all moneys received by him, & a provision that the trustees should be liable as against each other for his own defaults only, & an express declaration that the deed was intended to operate as a deed of inspectorship & composition under the Act. The trustees derived no benefit under the deed other than that which they shared in common with the other creditors. After the deed was registered, pltf. supplied goods upon written orders expressed to be "for P." to the place where he had carried on his business previous to the execution of the deed, & where the business was still being carried on under his management. The trustees regularly supplied him with money for current expenses weekly in advance, & they had no personal knowledge of orders given to pltf., who, on the other hand, were not shown to have had any knowledge of the deed:—Held: (1) the real intention of the parties as appearing by the deed was that P. should carry on the business as his own, subject to the inspection & control of the trustees; (2) the relation of principal & agent did not exist between them & him; (3) they were not liable to pltf. for the price of the goods supplied on his orders.—*EASTERBROOK v. Assumption of agency.—[The mere fact of a chief of an Indian tribe assuming to act as a duly authorised agent in the name & on behalf of the tribe shows no power in him so to act; & a lessee under a lease signed by him as agent has no estate which, on his being subsequently attainted of high treason, could be forfeited to the Crown, & vested in comrs. of forfeited estates, under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12.—*Doe d. In an action for an account, defts. claimed to be principals & to be dealing as sellers with pltfs.:—Held: (1) defts. were agents, seeing that legal commission was not a mode of payment adopted between seller & buyer, & that the facts & correspondence pointed to evidence of the relation of principal & agent; (2) defts. must account to pltfs.—*HYMAN v. The jury found a verdict for pltf. & awarded a penalty of £2 for each occasion on which the song was sung. Upon motion for a new trial:—Held: (1) inasmuch as the singer was hired by deft. to sing what songs he liked & no supervision or control was exercised as to copyright, there was evidence of agency & authority to sing the song complained of; (2) there was no ground for disturbing the verdict.—*MONAGHAN v. In an action for breach of contract defts. pleaded that their contract for sale was not with pltf. co., but with G., who agreed to resell to pltf. co. at a higher price:—Held: defts. had notice of all the terms of the agreement made between G. & pltf. co., & of the fact that G. was professing to act on their behalf & if they proposed to take the position that he had no right so to act they were, in the circumstances, bound instantly to notify pltf. co. to that effect, & not having done so became bound by the contract he had made; defts. were therefore liable to pltf. in damages for breach of contract.—EDMONTON STREAM SHOVELLERS, LTD. v. between us; we will engage the services of C. to examine all cargoes shipped, & his charge at the rate of 5 per cent. per twenty-four feet will go to the debit of the joint account," & the other from L. to N. & Co., accepting the offer contained in their letter:—Held: (1) these letters did not constitute an agency, but a partnership; (2) even if there was an agency capable of being assigned, the contract did not sufficiently disclose the nature of the agency & did not comply sufficiently with *Com. The negotiations for forming a co. fell through, & just before the expiration of the six months M. & W. accepted deft.'s offer by telegram & confirmed the telegram by letter:—Held: deft.'s letter constituted M. & W. agents of deft. & was not an offer to sell at a price per acre.—PIGEON v. 201. ——— To prove agency in matters to which they relate.]—In debt against an exor. for a legacy, which, it was alleged, he was, by agreement with the legatee, to retain & to pay interest upon, deft. pleaded Stat. Limitations. It was proposed to take the case out of Stat. Limitations by putting in letters written by deft.'s son, who assisted him in his trade, & received for him money due to him in the way of his business as a shoe manufacturer:—Held: though this would be good evidence to show that the son was his father's agent in matters relating to the father's trade, it was not such evidence of agency as would render the letters of the son admissible in evidence in this case, as it was not evidence to show that the son was authorised to make admissions as to a legacy or exorship, accounts. To show agency as to accounts, evidence must be given of some authority pointing to such accounts.—WHITEHOUSE v. ABBERLEY (1845), 1 Car. & Kir. 642.

The diggers were not registered claimholders & could not themselves legally sell, but brought all diamonds found by them to the offices of the co. which sold the diamonds & paid the diggers a percentage of the proceeds:—Held: the co. worked the estate by means of the diggers as its agents or servants & was responsible for the acts of such agents in the course of their employment, such as the felling of trees.—*PINEL D. In pursuance of the instructions, the clerk offered the premises to pltf., who paid a deposit of £25. The clerk gave a receipt for this £25, signed in the name of the firm. In an action for specific performance:—Held: deft. had agreed that the clerk should be his agent to sign the receipt.—KEBLEY v. KAVANAGH (1898), 17 N. Z. L. R. 149.—N.Z.

These receipts remained in the custody of mtgee.'s agent. In a subsequent ranking & sale of the lands, a disposition & assignment was granted by mtgee. in favour of his agent, to enable him to obtain the interest advanced by him:—Held: (1) the terms of the receipts did not prevent the agent from taking full benefit of the disposition & assignment, the receipts never having been delivered to debtor; (2) there was no evidence that mtgee.'s agent had ever acted as agent for the mtgor.—NORTHERN REVERSION CO. v. MALCOLM & DICKSON & STEWART (1848), 21 J. 67.—SCOT.

g. Payment by under-tenant to head landlord.]—Payment by an under-tenant, C., to the head landlord, A., with the assent of B., the intermediate landlord, of the head rent does not per se make C. such an agent of B. as to induce the ct. to decree a reversionary lease of the premises, obtained by C. from A., a trust for B.—MAUNSELL v. O'BRIEN (1835), 1 Jones, 176 (E. E.).—IR.

h. Place of payment of note.]—A promissory note was, in the body of the document, made payable at the office of S., a broker & financial agent. On the holder presenting the note at S.'s office, S., on behalf of the maker, asked for a fortnight's grace, which was granted. Within the fortnight the maker paid the amount to S., who absconded without paying the payee:—Held: the fact that the note was payable at S.'s office did not constitute S. the holder's agent to receive payment, & the maker was liable to the holder, notwithstanding the payment to S.—HEYDENRYCH v. JEFFREY (1905), 2 Bush. A. C. 162; 14 C. T. R. 691.—S. AF.

W., another son of B., also a solr., lived in the same house with him, & prepared the assignment. Agency was denied both by B. & W., the latter saying that in preparing the assignment he acted only for X.:—Held: the circumstances implied agency to A. in B. & W.; & service of notice of the cause petition on B. & W. was good service on A.—WESTBY v. FORD (1854), 6 Ir. Jur. 165 (R.).—IR.

l. 206. Railway company—Directors & solicitors.]—In order to prove that land was sold by a ry. co., it is not sufficient to prove by an auctioneer that he received directions for the sale from one of the directors, & that he received the conditions of sale from the solr. of the co., by whom he had been employed in former sales for the co., & who attended the sale. Some evidence ought to be given to show that the director or the solr. was authorised by the co. to offer the particular land for sale.—Moony v. L. B. & S. C. Ry. Co., No. 805, post.

207. Reference for information—Inquirer referred to third party—Third party constituted agent.]—If a party, on being applied to on a particular subject, writes in answer, mentioning another party & saying on one occasion, "He is in possession of my sentiments," & on another, "I have written to him, & I refer you to him thereon," such letters are sufficient to constitute the party referred to agent in the business; & what he said at a meeting on the subject may be given in evidence against the principal.—Hoon v. Reeve (1828), 3 C. & P. 532.

208. Reference for instructions.]—Deft., in London, purchased of pltf., at D., a quantity of Polish wheat, upon terms of paying for one third immediately, & for the remainder by bills at 3 months, "on handing the shipping documents." Deft. afterwards sold to L. & Co. one half of that wheat, & informed pltf. of the sale, & of the co.'s desire to have the wheat sent by a particular ship, adding, "You will please to follow instructions of those gentlemen as respects shipment." The wheat was shipped & the bills of lading delivered to L. & Co., who gave their acceptance for the price; but, the co. failing shortly afterwards, the bill was dishonoured:—Held: (1) deft. had made L. & Co. his agents in respect to the shipment of the wheat; (2) the delivery of the bills of lading to them was "handing the shipping documents," according to the contract.—BAUM v. RICKETTS (1849), 13 L. T. O. S. 425.

209. Reference for advice.]—Where, when a writ was delivered to a sheriff, he was told A. could give him advice & information as to the best mode of effecting a caption:—Held: A. was not thereby constituted an agent of pltf.—WILLIAMS v. GRIFFITHS (1849), 13 J. P. 397.

210. Referees for assured on insurance contract.]—Where, on a proposal for an insurance upon the life of another, the insurers were referred for information to the life proposed to be insured, to his usual medical attendant & to a friend:—Held: the life insured, the medical referee, & the private referee were not agents of the assured so as to make their fraud or concealment the fraud or concealment of the assured, in absence of a condition to that effect.—WHEELTON v. HARDISTY (1857), 8 E. & B. 232; 26 L. J. Q. B. 265; 29 L. T. O. S. 385; 3 Jur. N. S. 1169; 5 W. R. 784; 120 E. R. 86; reversd. on another point, 8 E. & B. 285, Ex. Ch.

211. Representations by alleged agent.]—In an action for the price of goods sold, the fact that the person who took the order from deft. called himself a "commission agent" & exhibited pltf.'s prospectus, there being no evidence that pltf. sent an invoice to deft., or that deft. sent any order to pltf., will not be any evidence of a liability to pltf. If the person who took the order agreed he would allow deft. a certain discount off the prices specified, this will tend to show the contract was with him as principal.—BURTON v. FURNESS (1858), 27 L. J. Ex. 139.

212. Standing by—Bill of sale.]—A., living in the same house with B., was the owner of certain goods therein, which A., for a fraudulent purpose, permitted B. to raise & receive money upon by way of a bill of sale in his own name to C., who believed the goods to be goods of B.; they being afterwards seized upon a fi. fa. against A.:—Held: the sale of the goods to C. was valid, B. being in effect agent of A. in the transaction.—Low v. McGill (1864), 4 New Rep. 145; 10 L. T. 495; 12 W. R. 826.

213. —Sale of goods.]—Where A., a married man, sells, with her concurrence, goods belonging was commenced, & defts. immediately afterwards paid into the Justice's hands the amount of the note & costs. Pltf. was J.'s son, living in the house with him, & there was no proof of any actual transfer of the note by J.:—Held: it might be inferred that pltf. was only the agent of J., & that the jury were justified in finding a verdict for defts. — JORDAN v. COATES, 2 All. 107. — CAN.

211 i. Representations by alleged agent.]—Where a party negotiating between two persons, the one desiring to sell, the other to buy, certain land, gave the former to understand that he was acting in her interest:—Held: there might be agency & its duties & liabilities without express words of appointment or acceptance.—*WRIGHT v. 211 iii. —.]—The holder of a policy of insurance issued by R., as the agent of a foreign co., went to what purported to be the head office of the co. in Philadelphia, to inquire about payment for a loss under the policy, & conversed with H., who was represented to him as the president of the co., & who produced a paper which he said was a copy of the policy, & spoke about the loss & payment of it by R., the co.'s agent:—Held: H.'s declaration was evidence of the agency of R.—CHAPMAN v. DELAWARE MUTUAL INSURANCE CO. (1883) 23 N. B. R. 121.—CAN.

n. Reputation—Collection of money on one occasion.]—In an action for demurrage, the shipping bill of certain staves, forming the contract on which pltf. relied, was signed "A., agent"; & the only evidence to prove his agency was that of a witness who swore that A. had been the generally reputed agent of deft. in the stave business at the port of shipment for several years, & once collected money from the witness for deft., but neither this nor any other act of agency was shown to have come to deft.'s knowledge:—Held: evidence not sufficient to go to the jury, & pltf. was properly nonsuited.—MYLER v. THOMPSON (1863) 23 U. C. R. 553.—CAN.

o. Request from vendee to vendor to take back goods & sell on his behalf.]—Upon a conditional sale of chattels, the property was not to pass to the vendee until payment. Default having been made, the vendor under the terms of the contract resumed possession & sold the goods:—Held: a request from the vendee "to take the engine back & sell same & apply the proceeds, less the expenses, towards paying my indebtedness to you," did not constitute the vendor the agent of the vendee to re-sell the goods, which were never the property of the vendee.—ABELL v. CAMPBELL, 21 C. L. T. 303.—CAN.

213 i. Standing by—Sale of goods.]—Pltf. shipped grain from P., consigned to B., a woman whom he has bigamously married, B. cannot afterwards, on discovering that her marriage was void, dispute the sale, as against a bona fide purchaser, inasmuch as she had constituted A. her agent to sell.—WALLER v. DRAKE-FORD, No. 843, post.

214. Surrender of lease—Key delivered up by tenant's wife—Accepted by one of lessors.]—A. & B. demised a house by a lease in writing to C., at a rent payable quarterly. The key was delivered to C.'s wife. C. entered into possession, but before the first quarter's rent became due, there having been some dispute as to arrears of rent & taxes, C.'s wife delivered the key back to A., who accepted it. B., after signing the lease, had never interfered:—Held: (1) the delivering back of the key by the tenant, animo sursum reddendi, & acceptance by the landlords, amounted to a surrender of the term by act & operation of law, within Stat. Frauds; (2) the jury was, upon the facts, warranted in finding that C.'s wife acted as his agent in surrendering the term, & A. acted as agent for B. in accepting such surrender; (3) B. was bound by such surrender & acceptance.—DODD v. ACKLOM (1843), 6 Man. & G. 672; 7 Scott, N. R. 415; 2 L. T. O. S. 121; 134 E. R. 1063.

217. Authority to pay calls.]—Notice being given to pltf. of a call on certain mining shares which he had transferred to deft., his attorney wrote to deft.'s attorney to inquire whether deft. was desirous of avoiding a forfeiture of the shares by authorising pltf. to pay the amount of the call. Deft.'s attorney wrote in reply authorising pltf. to pay the call:—Held: these letters were not a contract, nor evidence of a contract, & did not require a stamp.—PARKER v. DUBOIS (1836), 1 M. & W. 30; 1 Gale, 306; Tyr. & Gr. 243; 5 L. J. Ex. 90.

In common assumpsit by C. against B. for the sum mentioned in the paper:—Held: the paper neither required a stamp, nor ought to have been declared upon specially.—HUMPHREYS v. BRIANT (1829), 4 C. & P. 157.

Broker's note sent to principal.]—A note in these words, "Bought for Mr. T. fifty Continental (Gas shares, at £2 premium (£8 already paid) £500; commission £6 5s.:—£506 5s.," sent by a broker to his principal, is not a contract nor evidence of a contract; but it is admissible to show a representation made by the broker to the principal without any stamp. Brokers' notes are not contracts nor evidence of contracts; they may be evidence that the broker has performed the transaction mentioned in the note, but nothing more.—TOMKINS v. SAVORY (1829), 9 B. & C. 704; 4 Man. & Ry. K. B. 538; 7 L. J. O. S. K. B. 334; 109 E. R. 262.

The consignee obtained advances at O. on the grain, & it was sold to repay them:—Held: deft. were not liable to pltf. for such sale, for there was no evidence to show the consignee was their agent, & they had acquired no control over the goods.—WILSON v. BANK OF MONTREAL (1870), 20 C. P. 411.—CAN.

Bros. during the period covered by the agreement

did not constitute him the agent of the banks.—UNION BANK & QUEBEC BANK (1887), 14 Q. J. R. 69.—CAN.

225. Power of attorney—Co-principals—Common purpose but not entirely common interest.]—A deed, in which several persons combine to effect a common purpose, requires only a single stamp. A power of attorney, whereby the several members of a mutual insurance club authorise the subscription of policies in their respective names, requires only one stamp; there being a community of purpose though (from each insurer being excluded from the policy upon his own ship) not an entire community of interest.—ALLEN v. MORRISON (1828), 8 B. & C. 565; 3 Man. & Ry. K. B. 70; 108 E. R. 1152.

226. ——— Written authority to indorse specific bills—Immaterial additions.]—A written authority in the following terms: "I authorise you to indorse my name to three several bills of exchange now in your possession," describing them:—Held: a letter or power of attorney, requiring a 30s. stamp under Stamp Act, 1815 (c. 184), Sched. 1, Part 1, although it went on to say, " & which indorsement I undertake shall be binding upon me; & I undertake to pay you the amount of the several bills as they respectively become due, should they not be duly honoured when mature."—*WALKER v. 225 i. Power of attorney—To receive rents & serve notices to quit.]—A power of attorney to receive rents, serve notices to quit, etc., must bear a 25 10s. stamp; the stamp required on a power of attorney to receive rents merely will not be sufficient.—*BOORN v. 229. ——— Proxy under local Act—Effect of directions to vote in a particular way.]—An Act of Parliament for embanking & draining lands in a county provided "that the proprietors of certain lands & grounds" should appoint comrs. for that purpose; & it also enacted "that it should be lawful for the known agent, for the time being, of each & every proprietor entitled to vote in the election of any original or special comr., or for any other person authorised & empowered by any note in writing, signed by such proprietor, to act in the nomination & appointment of such comr., as fully & effectually as if such proprietor, on whose behalf he should act, was present at any meeting to be held for that purpose." In pursuance of this provision the following authority in writing was given: "We, the undersigned, being the major part of the trustees of the shares of the estate of M., deceased, lying & being, etc., do, by this note or writing, under our hands, & in pursuance of the Act in this behalf made & provided, authorise & empower B., O., & T., all of, etc., & any one of them, to act for us in the nomination & appointment of a special comr. for the township of E. & S., at a meeting appointed to be held, on etc., at etc., for the purpose of appointing a special comr. for the said township." Signed by the several parties:—Held: under Stamp Act, 1815 (c. 184), Sched. 1, Part 1, tit. Letter or Power of Attorney, & Procuration, this authority required a stamp. Qu.: whether directions to vote in a particular way, if contained in the authority, would exempt it from a stamp.—*R. v. 231. Construed strictly—Necessary powers to be implied.]—A power of attorney must be pursued strictly, but so as to include the necessary means of executing it with effect. An express power includes all powers, though not expressed, necessary to be used in order to accomplish the object of the principal power (Eyre, C.J.).—HOWARD v. BAILLIE, No. 264, post.

234. — No authority to co-partner.]—From a general power of attorney granted to one of two partners the other can derive no authority.—EDMISTON v. WRIGHT (1807), 1 Camp. 88, N. P.

235. — But may be to two persons in the alternative.]—A power of attorney to A. or B. to make livery is not void for uncertainty.—LEEDERS & CROMPTON'S CASE (1587), Godb. 93; 78 E. R. 57.

For full anns., see LANDLORD & TENANT.

236. Limited to occasion for which power given.]—At first choice of assignees a great number of powers of attorney from creditors to vote in the choice, for which there was a strong contest, had been presented & acted upon. The assignees chosen were removed by the comr., & a second choice was about to take place, at which it was attempted to use those powers again by the attorneys named in them; & they claimed to vote under the powers at such second choice:—Held (1) they were not entitled so to do; (2) the powers extended only to one occasion; (3) having been once acted on, they were spent, & not available for any subsequent service.—Re WILLIAMS & SONS (1854), 23 L. T. O. S. 11.

237. —.]—A proxy is a delegation of authority for a particular purpose then in contemplation of the person giving it.

Proxies were given in Nov. & Dec., 1886, by the governors of an infirmary for a contemplated election between A. & B. for the post of surgeon. The particular election did not take place, owing to the retirement of B.:—Held: the proxies so given were properly rejected at a subsequent election in April, 1887, between A. & C.—HOWARD v. HILL (1888), 59 L. T. 818; 37 W. R. 219.

238. Limited by capacity in which principal acted when granting power.]—Several members of a mutual insurance assocn., on entering the assocn. executed a power of attorney to the secretary, authorising him to sign & underwrite for them policies of insurance not exceeding a certain sum in any one risk; to demand, sue for, & recover such sums as might be due to them; & also to pay such expenses for losses as might become due from them, & generally to do all such things as might be necessary for the purposes of the assocn., the members respectively agreeing to confirm same, & covenanting with the secretary to accept, & when due, to pay, all such drafts or bills as might be ordered by the committee of the assocn., in pursuance of the rules thereof, & also to pay to the secretary or the committee all the expenses & contributions to which they might become liable. On the co. being wound up, several members paid what was due from them to the secretary, but the secretary becoming bkpt., the moneys so paid never reached the persons to whom they were due:—Held: (1) the power of attorney was not a power of attorney of the paying members in that character, but of the receiving members; (2) on payment to the secretary by a contributing member of the sum due from him, his liability entirely ceased.—ANDREWS & ALEXANDER'S CASE, CHATT'S CASE, COOK'S CASE, CREW'S CASE (1869), L. D. wrote to G. with respect to the investment of certain money when received & G. pledged the property before the letter was received. The question being whether general words authorised the attorney to bind the principal by what he did although the act was done before further instructions arrived:—Held: the power authorised the execution of the mtge., although as between D. & G. the mtge. was unauthorised.—DAVY v. during her life, notwithstanding her coverture, & whether sole or covert, should from time to time, by any writing or writings under her hand, direct or appoint to receive same, & in default of such direction or appointment into the proper hands of the wife for her separate use. The moneys in the funds were transferred to the husband by virtue of powers of attorney, under the hand & seal of the wife, with the consent of the husband under his hand & seal, & attested by two witnesses, & the mtge. money was received & a receipt given by husband & wife, & the premises reconveyed, & the receipt & reconveyance also so attested:—Held: (1) the powers of attorney were not directions, but were merely authorities to the bankers by the wife to assign the stock to her husband, & only enabled the bankers, to do for her what she might have done for herself, without their intervention; (2) as the directions must follow on the authorities before the authorities could be acted on, it still remained to make the appointment after the execution of the powers of attorney; (3) the transfer made subsequently to such execution, being unaccompanied by any of the formalities required by the settlement, could not have the effect of converting instruments of substitution into instruments of alienation & could not operate as executions of the power of appointment.—HUGHES v. 246. Conflict of laws—Foreign power of attorney—Power to be used in England—Construed by English laws.]—Where a power of attorney is executed in a foreign country in the language of that country, the intention of the writer is to be ascertained by evidence of competent translators & experts, including, if necessary, lawyers of the country, as to the meaning of the language used; & if, according to such evidence, the intention appears to be that the authority shall be acted upon in other countries, the extent of the authority in any country in which the authority is acted upon must be determined by the law of that country.

Pltf., who carried on business in Brazil, executed there a power of attorney giving a London stock-broker power to buy & sell shares for him. The document was drawn up in the Portuguese language 240 i. Construction—May be construed with other documents.]—A. executed a power of attorney authorising the agent to sell or mtge. land. In the course of correspondence A. expressed a willingness to accept £1,000 for it. The agent sold for £628:—Held: the sale was made at a price not warranted by the agent's authority & must be set aside.—KERR v. LEFFERTY (1859), 7 Gr. 412.—CAN.

240 ii. — — — — — Surrounding circumstances to be considered.]—A contract made with a person purporting to contract as attorney was made subsequent to the execution of, but was not within the powers conferred by, a power of attorney. Evidence of a prior collateral parol authority was rejected:—Held: (1) where a preliminary contract is followed by execution of a formal instrument, & it is not clear on the construction of the latter document that it is to be regarded as the final & sole agreement between the parties, the ct. must take into consideration the preliminary contract & all surrounding circumstances in order to determine whether the latter instrument was intended to supersede the prior contract or cover part of the ground only; (2) the evidence was wrongly rejected. Dicta in Lindley v. Lacey, 17 C. B. N. 240 iii. — — — — — May be construed with verbal instructions.]—A covenant for payment by the mtgr. of a mtge. to deft., assigned by deft. to pltf., had been executed by C. as attorney for deft., during his absence from the country, under a power which authorised him only to collect debts & to execute all such deeds & perform all such acts as might be considered necessary & proper concerning the business of deft.; but it was proved that deft., before leaving, agreed to give this covenant, & told the attorney of it, in consequence of which the latter executed the deed, & received the money:—Held: in the circumstances the authority was sufficient, & deft. could not refuse to be bound by

240 iv. — — — — — May be construed along with other evidence.]—A married woman employed her husband, J. B., to carry on a business which she had purchased from his assignee in bkcy., & by a power of attorney she authorised him to manage it under the name of B. & Co. & to make promissory notes in & about her said business. The husband gave to one of his own creditors who was pressing for payment notes signed per pro B. & Co., J. B. In an action on the notes against the wife she denied that J. B. had any authority to give the notes, & he would not swear that he did not tell her that he had given them. The wife, on the advice of her counsel, refused to answer questions as to the business:—Held: affirming the judgment of the county ct., there was evidence on which a jury could reasonably find that the husband had authority to sign the notes.—COOPER v. BLACKLOCK (1880), 5 A. R. 533.—CAN.

& made in compliance with the forms of Brazilian law. The broker having sold certain shares of pltf. in deft. co., an action was brought by pltf. for rectification of the register of shareholders, on the ground that the power of attorney did not authorise the sale. General powers—Limited by recital.—A power of attorney contained a recital that the donor was about to return to Australia, & was "desirous of appointing an attorney or attorneys to act for him during his absence from England." The operative part of the deed, which gave the attorney large powers of mtgng. the donor's property, contained no mention of the duration of those powers:—Held: (1) the operative part of the deed was controlled by the recital; (2) charges effected by the attorney upon the property of donor while he was in England were invalid as against him.—DANBY v. COUTTS & Co. (1885), 29 Ch. D. 500; 54 L. J. Ch. 577; 52 L. T. 401; 33 W. R. 559; 1 T. L. R. 313.

248 i. General powers—Rule of ejusdem generis.—H. was authorised by power of attorney from W., the administrator of J., "to take into possession all chattels belonging to" an intestate " & recover & receive all moneys due " to him:—Held: the power was confined to matters connected with the collection & management of the estate, & it was doubtful whether, on the application of the rule moscitur a sociis, H. could bring ejectment in W.'s name.—Re BAXTER (No. 2) (1863), 1 Q. 248 ii. ———.—The authority conferred by general words in a power of attorney is restricted to what is necessary for the proper execution of the special powers contained therein, & general words are construed as enlarging the special powers where necessary, & only where necessary, for the accomplishment of the purposes for which the authority is given.—Re HOAREY (1906), V. L. R. 437.—AUS.

248 iii. ———.—A general power of attorney is nothing more than a bundle or collection of special powers enumerated in one instrument. Yet, if there are any general words which appear to govern the whole instrument, the ct. must so far regard the power as a whole, unless there is something to show that one or more clauses should be read apart from the rest.

A general power of attorney by which the principal gives the agent power "for me & in my name, & for my account & benefit," to indorse negotiable securities in satisfaction or on account of any debt or claim due, receivable, or payable to or by the principal does not empower the agent to indorse in the principal's name promissory notes made by himself in favour of a third party for a consideration in which the principal has had no share or benefit. Such power is governed & limited throughout by the words "for my account & benefit."—(GROBBELAAR v. COCKCROFT (1906), E. D. C. 109.—S.A.F.

248 iv. ———.—D., being about to leave the country, executed a general power of attorney authorising G. to buy for him, & in his name, & to his use, "any freehold lands, or any ships, vessels, or steamboats, or any shares therein, as the said G. may think expedient, & for my benefit." During D.'s absence G. purchased a leasehold property known as the "N. Saloon," together with the furniture, provisions, & business therein, for the payment of which he gave his own notes, indorsed by him in D.'s name, under a clause in the power of attorney authorising him to make & indorse notes, etc., in the course of business, alleging that he had made the purchase for the joint benefit of himself, his principal, & a third person, who also indorsed these promissory notes:—Held: this was an unauthorised purchase. DICK v. GORDON (1858), 6 Gr. 391.—CAN.

248 vi. ———.—In construing a power of attorney, the special purpose for which the power is given is first to be regarded, & the most general words following the declaration of that special purpose will be construed to be merely all such powers as are needed for its effectuation. The owner of a ship by power of attorney constituted the master his agent, & authorised him to raise or borrow upon the ship's papers such sums of money as he should deem necessary for the repair of the ship, " & to act in the premises as fully & effectually to all intents & purposes as I might or could do if personally present." In a suit for the amount of a mtge.-bond upon the ship executed by the master:—Held: the master had no authority to sell or mtge. the ship.—*JUDAH v. lessee's attorneys. The authority was in three branches. The first gave the attorneys power to give all notices & to execute all writings necessary in the application for renewal of a licence; the second was a general power "to do, execute, & perform all such further acts, deeds, matters & things as may be necessary or expedient to be done, executed, or performed to enable the lessor to obtain a renewal of any licence," etc.; the third was an authority to the lessors "to do, execute, & perform all acts, deeds, & things necessary to comply with the requirements of any Licensing Committee," etc. The clause concluded with a covenant by the lessee to pay upon demand to the lessors "all moneys expended by the lessors for any such purpose during the continuance of the term," etc. The Licensing Committee required certain repairs as a condition to the renewal of the licence:—Held: (1) the second & third branches of the authority conferred by the clause were not restricted to the particular matters referred to in the first branch; (2) the attorneys were authorised to effect repairs & to recover the price thereof from the lessee.—MESSEYER v. WOLLERMAN & FREEMAN (1907), 27 N. Z. L. R. 589.—N.Z.

248 viii. ———. General words preceding specific powers.—A power of attorney was given by deft. to her husband on a form supplied by a bank; it contained power & authority to do for deft., & in her name, five separate & distinct classes of business, & proceeded, " & further, to manage & transact all manner of business whatsoever with the branch of the Bank of British North America in Winnipeg, their manager or other officer duly authorised." The note sued on was signed by deft.'s husband under this power:—Held: the clause in the power, "for me & in my name to make, draw, accept, transfer & indorse in favour of all parties whomsoever, all promissory notes, bills of exchange," etc., conferred a general power that was not limited or restricted by the subsequent clauses that referred specially to the bank.—*VELIE v. 253. — Administration suit—Power to institute.—Where a married woman, entitled to the income of property held on trust for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation, joined with her husband in a power of attorney to receive & sue for any moneys due to them or either of them:—Held: the power did not entitle the attorney to institute an administration suit in the name of the wife by himself as next friend.—KENRICK v. WOOD, No. 284, post.

For full anns., see S. C. No. 284, post.

254. — Administration grant—Power to take.—An exor., absent from the country & expected to be absent for two years, had before his departure executed a power of attorney, in general terms, enabling the persons named in it to act for him about all his concerns or business of every kind whatsoever as fully & effectually as he himself could do, & also to appear for him in any ct. of justice in any action or proceeding to which he might be a party:—Held: the power was sufficiently wide to justify the ct. in making a grant with the will annexed to the parties named in it for the use & benefit of the exor.—In the Goods of BARKER, [1891] P. 251; 60 L. J. P. 87; 39 W. R. 560.

255. — Arbitration—Power to submit to.—In 1707 A. & B. assigned to plff. all debts due to them & gave him a power of attorney to receive & compound for the same:—Held: (1) plff. under the above power was entitled to refer to arbn. the matters in difference subsisting between his principals & defts.; (2) the ct. would not presume the matters in difference submitted to arbn. arose subsequent to the assignment & power of attorney, but such matters might be pleaded by way of defence to an action on the award.—BANKHILL v. LEIGH (1800), 8 Term Rep. 571; 101 E. R. 1552.

257. — — — — —.—J.—W. & M., who had contracted to cover wires with gutta percha for R., who supplied the wires, afterwards assigned their business to C. & gave him a power of attorney authorising him in their names to bring any action or suit or other proceedings to enforce any existing contracts, & otherwise to as he might think proper. C. himself, after the assignment, covered wires with gutta percha for R. Afterwards C. brought two actions for debt against R., one in his own name, the other in the name of W. & M. to recover the balance due for covering the wires. Deft. pleaded in each action the general issue, payment & set-off. Issue was not joied in the second action. On the trial of the first action, an order of reference by consent of C. & R. was made in the cause C. v. R. & professed to refer "this cause, & all matters in difference in this cause, & in the cause of W. & M. v. R., & all matters in difference between the parties, & all matters in difference in the cause of W. & M. v. R. between those parties." After the reference, a rule for a discontinuance having been obtained in the action of W. & M. v. R., the order of reference was amended by consent, & it was ordered "that the rule for a discontinuance should be suspended, & left to the decision of the arbitrator." R., before the arbitrator, made a claim for damages in respect of some wires spoilt by W. & M. in covering them. The award, among other things, decided the claim was not valid, & awarded a discontinuance in the action of W. & M. v. R. M. was called by R. as a witness before the arbn.:—Held: (1) the order of reference was good although it did not appear on the face of the document that W. & M. consented to the reference & although W. & M. did not, in fact, consent to it, as the power of attorney from W. & M. gave C. power to refer all matters arising out of the contract, & the order of reference referred nothing in the names of W. & M. except the matters in the action W. & M. v. R.; (2) there was no excess of jurisdiction in awarding on the claim by R. against W. & M. for spoilt wires, as it was a cross-claim under the contract, & consequently one which C. had authority to settle by virtue of the power of attorney.—Re HANCOCK & REID, (1851), 2 L. 259. — Power to prove debt & vote.—A person authorised by the Bank of England by a general power of attorney may prove a debt due to them under a commission of bkpcy.; & a person authorised by them by a special power of attorney for that purpose may vote for them in the choice of assignees.—Re STEPHENS, Ex p. BANK OF ENGLAND (1818), 1 Wils. Ch. 296; 1 Swan. 10; 37 E. R. 129.

260. — Though power not under seal.—A power of attorney not under seal, but which the party giving it had signed, & then, placing his finger upon his signature, had said, "I seal & deliver this as my act & deed":—Held: sufficient to enable his attorney, to whom the power was given, to prove in respect of the debt of his principal, & vote in the choice of assignees.—Re KNIGHT, Ex p. WELCH (1857), 28 L. T. O. S. 223.

261. — Further effect of.—A power contained in a letter of attorney to vote in the choice of assignees implies in itself an acceptance of the office of assignee by the principal executing the power in the event of the choice of the creditors falling upon him.—Re JEWRY & JEWRY (1862), 6 L. T. 340.

262. — Power to grant release.—A general authority from one of several assignees of a bkpt.'s estate to the others to act for him, & use his name, is not sufficient to enable the others to execute a release by deed; there must be a special authority for that purpose.—WILLIAMS v. WALSBY (1802), 4 Esp. 220.

263. — Bills of exchange—Power to accept.—A power of attorney given by an extrix. to act for her as extrix. does not authorise the accepting of bills of exchange to charge her in her own right, though for debts due from her testator.—GARDNER v. BAILLIE (1795), 6 Term Rep. 501; 101 E. R. 720.

264. — Semble: a letter of attorney given by an exor. to A., enabling him to transact the affairs of testator in the name of the exor. & to pay, discharge & satisfy all debts due from testator, conveys sufficient authority to A. to accept a bill of exchange in the name of the exor. drawn by a creditor for the amount of a debt due from testator so as to make the exor. personally liable. But if the exor. admits that such a bill so accepted by A. with the knowledge of the exor. is for a just debt & ought to be paid, it affords sufficient evidence of an authority given by him to A.

attorney authorised the bringing of "any action, suit, or other proceeding for recovering or compelling payment" of any sum of money due to the donor:—Held: the attorney was authorised to present a petition for the sequestration of the estate of a debtor of his principal.—Re ANDERSON (1909), V. L. R. 465.—AUS.

258 ii. — Power to postpone realisation of property.—A mtgee. authorised his agent by a power of attorney to appeal at meetings of creditors of his mtgor., etc., & to represent him in all matters relating to the insolvent estate:—Held: the general words in the power must be restricted to matters ejusdem generis & did not authorise the agent to vote for a resolution indefinitely postponing realisation of the mtged. property to the prejudice of his principal.—MARSHALL BROTHERS' TRUSTEE v. TRANSVAALSCHER BANK (1907), T. S. 1060.—S. AF.

263 i. — Bills of exchange, etc.—Power to accept.—Where by a document indorsed "procuracion générale et spéciale" a wife being sole owner constituted her husband "son procureur général et spécial" to administer her affairs, specifying such acts as drawing bills of exchange & making promissory notes:—Held: the wife's liability extended to all promissory notes granted by the husband, & was not limited by art. 181 of the Civil Code to accept that particular bill without resorting to the letter of attorney.—HOWARD v. BAILLIE (1796), 2 Hy. Bl. 618; 126 E. R. 737.

265. ——A power of attorney "for me, & on my behalf, to pay & accept such bills of exchange as shall be drawn or charged on me, by my agents or correspondents, as occasion shall require," authorises the attorney to accept such bills only as are drawn upon the principal, by his agents or correspondents, in that character, & in respect of private transactions, & on the individual account of the principal. A power of attorney to pay & receive money, buy & sell lands, bring & defend actions, give & take releases, indorse & negotiate bills of exchange payable to the principal, & generally to perform all other affairs & concerns of the principal, does not authorise the attorney to accept bills drawn on the principal.

Deft., a merchant engaged in extensive mercantile business, & also in joint speculations to a considerable amount with A., B. & C., gave two powers of attorney, one to his wife & A. to pay & receive money, buy & sell lands, bring & defend actions, give & take releases, indorse & negotiate bills of exchange payable, & generally perform all other affairs & concerns, & one to his wife "for me, & on my behalf, to pay & accept such bills of exchange as shall be drawn or charged on me, by my agents or correspondents, as occasion shall require, & generally to do, negotiate, & transact my affairs & business during my absence, as fully & effectually as if I were present & acting therein." During the absence of deft., A., for the purpose of raising money to pay to creditors of the joint concern, drew four bills of exchange upon deft. They were accepted by deft. by procuration of his wife:—Held: his wife had no authority to accept the bills.—ATTWOOD v. MUNNINGS (1827), 7 B. & C. 278; 1 Man. & Ry. K. B. 60; 6 L. J. O. S. K. B. 9; 108 E. R. 727.

266. — Power to indorse.—Where one gives a power of attorney to another, to demand & receive all moneys due to him, on any account whatsoever, & to appoint attorneys for the purpose of bringing actions, & to revoke the same, " & to do all other business," the latter words must be understood to such notes as were required for purposes of the administration.—LA BANQUE D'HOCHELAGA v. JODOIN, [1895] A. C. 612, P. C.—CAN.

266 i. — Power to indorse.—A general power to an agent to sign bills, notes, etc., & to superintend, manage, & direct all the affairs of the principal, gives him a power to indorse notes.—ALBJO v. McDougall (1850), 3 O. S. 199.—CAN.

266 ii. ——Exors. authorised B. by power of attorney to make & indorse all such notes as might be requisite in the management of the estate. Certain notes were received by B. for debts due to the estate, & indorsed to M., one of the exors., who was largely indebted to the estate, & was in difficulties. They were dis- counted by plffs. to whom M. owed a large sum:—Held: the indorsements not being for the purposes of the estate, were not within the authority given to B.—GORE BANK v. CROOKS (1868), 26 U. C. R. 251.—CAN.

266 iii. ———.—]—Def't. exe- cuted a power of attorney giving A. a general authority to manage her per- sonal affairs:—Held: a promissory note indorsed by A. to plff. for a purpose not necessary for the administration of def't.'s affairs was outside the power conferred on A., & was not binding on def't.—POTRIER v. JOBIN (1881), 12 R. L. 61, S. C.—CAN.

266 iv. ———.—]—Power to indorse accommodation note.—A power of attorney given by one person to another authorising the latter to attend to the affairs of the former, does not empower the attorney to indorse a promissory note for the accommodation of the maker thereof, although such note may be a renewal of an accommodation note indorsed by his principal.—MOLSON'S BANK v. COOKE (1905) Q. R. 27 S. C. 130.—CAN.

266 v. ———.—]—Def't., who was illiterate, gave her husband a power of attorney for her & in her name to draw, accept, sign or satisfy bills of exchange & promissory notes. One of her sons applied to plff. to obtain exten- sion of time for the payment of a note given with the security of an indorser, & plff. wrote to def't. asking her whether she would indorse the note. In reply he received a letter that the arrange- ment was satisfactory & the note would be indorsed by def't. The letter was written without def't.'s knowledge. The note was indorsed by the husband as attorney for def't., but he knew nothing about the circumstances or the corre- spondence.—Held: def't. by allowing her letter to be opened & answered by others had condoned to the acceptance by the indorser of her attorney & that she was liable on the bill.—ROBINSON v. GREEN (1917) 15 N. S. R. 204; 36 D. L. R. 631.—CAN.

266 vi. ———.—]—Power to indorse cheque.—The active partner in a partner- ship for dealing in land authorised to borrow money on mtrc. was paid by cheque to the order of all the partners by name. He was authorised by power of attorney to sign his partners' names to all deeds requisite to carry on the busi- ness, but had no express authority to indorse cheques:—Held: having author- ity to effect the loan & receive the amount in cash, he could indorse his partners' names on the cheque.—MANI- TOBA MFG. ELLIS (1892), 10 L. R. 450, N.Z.—N.Z.

f. ———.—]—Credit—Power to pledge.—Def't. gave to H. a power of attorney to carry on a general trading business, for cash only, or barter, or exchange of goods, with moneys supplied by def't., but giving H. no right to negotiate any promissory note for def't., or to pledge his credit. Subsequently def't. instructed H. that he was not to pur- chase any goods from plff. H. pur- chased goods from plff. & gave a note for the amount. In an action by plff. seeking to recover from def't. the amount claimed for the goods sold, evidence was given by H. to the effect that def't. must have found out that he was dealing with plff. There was also some evidence of def't. from which it might be inferred that H. could purchase goods on credit provided def't. knew of it. On the question of def't.'s liability:—Held: (1) the trial judge was justified in coming to the conclusion that the purchase of goods on credit was within apparent scope of the powers of H. (GRAHAM, E.J., & HENRY, J.); (2) the evidence of H. that def't. must have known of his dealings with plff., being mere matter of opinion, greater effect must be given to the positive evidence of def't. that he had no such knowledge, there being nothing to show that the testimony of def't. was discredited by the trial judge, & the evidence showed that the credit was given to H., & not to def't. (MEAGHER & RITCHIE, J.J.).—KENNY v. HARRINGTON (1899) 31 N. S. R. 290.—CAN.

g. ———.—]—Executor—Power to acknow- ledge statute-barred debts.—An exor. executed a power of attorney to def't. to do all that was legally requisite necessary for proving & carrying out the will of A. Plff., believing that def't. was A.'s exor., wrote to him regarding a promissory note, the amount of which he claimed against A.'s estate. The note was stat.-barred at the date of A.'s death:—Held: the discretionary function of the exor. was not transferred to the attorney so as to authorise him to acknowledge the claim. *Midgley v. The agent pledged the credit of def't.'s firm by giving a letter of guarantee on behalf of his principal to a bank to secure advances made by the latter to a client of the firm, & also indorsed to the bank a promissory note made by the client in def't.'s favour. passage in the judgment delivered by Lord Brougham in Bank of Bengal v. Fagan. He said: 'But it is said that the power was given to do the acts in question on the donor's behalf. That is really only saying that, what the agent is to do, he is to do as representing the principal, as doing it on behalf of, or in the place & in the right of, the principal. But it is further said that, even if the expression be read as only amounting to this, the indorsement is to be only made for the benefit of the principal, & not for the purposes of the agent. We do not see how this very materially affects the case, for it only refers to the use to be made of the funds obtained from the indorsement, not to the power; it relates to the purpose of the execution, not to the limits of the power itself; & though the indorser's title must depend upon the authority of the indorser, it cannot be made to depend upon the purposes for which the indorser performs his act under the power.' That passage seems to deal with the very point in this case. (COLLINS, M.R.). Consd. Ruben v. Great Fingall (consolidated (1904), 73 L. J. K. B. 872, C. A. Mentd. Raphael v. There was a power of attorney authorising certain persons to commence proceedings on the part of the husband, ratifying & confirming what the attorneys had done, & agreeing to ratify & confirm what they should do:—Held: a sufficient authority.—*SEWELL v. B., another agent, had a power of attorney, authorising him to act for another college under certain specified Acts, & to attend any vestry or meeting under any Act of Parliament relating to the lands:—Held: under these authorities A. & B. were sufficiently authorised in that behalf to attend & vote for the owners respectively.—*R. v. T. was co-trustee with pltf. of a marriage settlement, & proposed to him that Consols belonging to the trust should be sold out,

& the proceeds advanced on security of a charge on D.'s property. Pltf. assented, & the Consols were sold & proceeds paid to T., who produced to pltf. a document purporting to be a memorandum of deposit of the assignment & power of attorney, equitable charge to secure the advance. The ct. held on the evidence that P. knew of the charge, & either actually authorised it, or left T. to do as he liked:—Held: (1) the money had been advanced upon faith of an agreement to charge the property of D.; (2) such an agreement was within the powers of P. & T.; (3) if the agreement had not been fully carried out, pltf. was entitled to have the charge carried into effect.—*PARISH v. C., after he had raised £10,000 under the letter of authority, obtained of pltf. in America £1,500, which he applied to defts.' use, & for the amount drew bills on defts., which he indorsed to pltf. He did not show the letter of authority to pltf.; there were no indorsements on it of sums previously raised, & it did not appear that pltf. knew any money had been raised before by C. 282. ————.]—Pltf. was sole partner in an Australian firm. Defts. had dealt with his firm since 1889. In Jan., 1899, pltf. gave to his agent in England a power of attorney to purchase goods in connection with pltf.'s business, & either for cash or on credit, " & for me & on my behalf, & where necessary in connection with any purchases made on my behalf as aforesaid or in connection with my business," to make, draw, sign, accept, or indorse any bills of exchange or promissory notes which should be requisite or proper, & to sign pltf.'s name, or his trading name, to any cheques on his banking account in London. The attorney, purporting to act under the power, obtained from defts. a loan of £4,000, & accepted bills of exchange for that in the name of the firm per pro himself. He represented to defts. that he had full power to borrow, & produced the power, but they accepted his word, & did not read the power. The £4,000 was paid by two cheques of defts. in favour of pltf.'s firm. The attorney indorsed these cheques, & paid them into the London banking account of pltf.'s firm. He afterwards drew out the whole sum, & applied it to his own purposes. Pltf. brought this action to restrain negotiation of the bills. Defts. counterclaimed for payment of the money due on the bills, or, in the alternative, for the £4,000 as money had & received by pltf. to their use. The judge found that pltf. had no knowledge of the borrowing by the attorney, & got no benefit from it:—Held: (1) the power of attorney conferred no general power to borrow, & the claim for the money due on the bills of exchange failed; (2) defts. must be taken to have had notice of the terms of the power & that the attorney had no general power to borrow; (3) they could not recover the £4,000 as money had & received by pltf. to their use.—*JACOBS v. The solr. for that purpose must be authorised by the trustee himself to produce the deed.

A contract for sale provided for payment of interest by the purchaser if from any cause whatever other than the wilful default of vendors the purchase should not be completed by a day named. One of the necessary parties to the conveyance was a trustee-mtgee. who was abroad, & was difficult to communicate with. Vendors were aware of that, but relied upon a general power of

286. ——— Not an act of forfeiture under will.]—S. was entitled for life to the income bequeathed by a will which provided that if he should commit or suffer any act, default, or process whatsoever which, but for that proviso, would have the effect of vesting the right to receive the interest in any other person whomsoever, the life interest of S. should cease & be void & the income be paid as on his death. S., being about to go abroad, executed a general power of attorney to his solr., W., a trustee of testator's will, & on W.'s going abroad & retiring from the trusteeship in 1906 executed a power of attorney appointing his then solr., K., in his name & behalf to recover & receive all sums of money in respect of the interest under the will:—Held: (1) the power of attorney was a mere authority to receive the income of S.'s interest under the will & apply it for his benefit, & not a colourable transaction giving his creditors an equitable charge; (2) it did not constitute a forfeiture within the meaning of the will.—*Re SWANNELL, MORICE v. 287. ——— Mortgage — Passage money.]—The owners of a ship gave a power of attorney authorising their agent (inter alia) "to sign any bottomry bond or instrument of hypothecation on the vessel or her cargo, & sell & dispose of, either absolutely or by way of mtge. or otherwise as he should think proper, the vessel or any share thereof, & execute all instruments, & do all acts which would be requisite & necessary for completing such sales, transfers, mtges. or any of them, & generally do all acts about the business & affairs aforesaid which the owners, if present, could have done." Under this power, the agent, by deed—reciting a mtge. of the ship, & the necessity for a further advance to enable the ship to set sail, & the advance of £4,000 for that purpose by pl'tfs.—assigned all the freight, hire, & passage-money, & earnings of the ship in her intended voyage from Port Jackson to Liverpool, with a proviso for redemption if within 10 days after arrival the £4,000 should be repaid. The ship sailed, & arrived at Liverpool; but the £4,000 was not paid. After the ship had sailed, the agent of the owners received the passage-money of certain passengers by bills on England, payable at sight, which were remitted to the owners in England, & the amounts received by them before arrival of the ship:—Held: (1) the power of attorney authorised the assignment of the passage-money, & gave the mtgees. an immediate right to it before they took possession of the ship; (2) they were entitled to recover back the amount so received.—*WILLIS v. Soon afterwards he gave the secretary of the co. a general power of attorney to execute for him all deeds that might be necessary, & in Aug. left the country & never returned. On Nov. 1, 1872, the secretary, purporting to act under the power, executed a mtge. to the co. to secure the sum borrowed by the chairman. In the following month the chairman was adjudicated bkpt.:—Held: (1) the mtge. was invalid as not being authorised by the power of attorney; (2) it was not necessary to decide whether it was so as a fraudulent preference.—Re BOWLES' MORTGAGE TRUST (1874), 31 L. He then sold it, and indorsed it as attorney for M. The question being whether M. was bound:—Held: in the Ct. of K. B. E. as B.'s attorney agreed to sell a portion of the land comprised in the settlement to deft.; & deft. contracted to sell same to pltfs. The title was objected to by pltfs. on the ground that the power of attorney did not authorise the sale to deft.:—Held: (1) the power of attorney did not authorise E. to sell to deft. any portion of the land comprised in the settlement; (2) such sale power did not authorise the husband to take property in exchange, or in part payment, for deft.'s lands subject to a mtg. which fixed on her a liability to indemnify the mtgor. against such incumbrances.—*Palliser v. C., acting for himself as a partner, & also under his power of attorney on behalf of A., joined with the other partners of the firm in executing a contract for sale of the business to D. Amongst other things it was agreed that D. should pay the debts of the business, which were estimated at £15,000; if they did not exceed that amount the vendors were to be entitled to a share of profits calculated on £5,000 "deferred capital"; if the debts exceeded £15,000, £5 for every £2 of the excess was to be deducted from the £5,000 deferred capital; vendors might require D. to take over their deferred capital, paying in cash two-fifths of its nominal amount; if the concern was converted into a limited co. vendors were to receive shares for their deferred capital, & if the debts were less than £15,000, D. was to pay the difference in cash at the end of two years. It was agreed that D. might carry on the business under the style of A. & Co., & that vendors should not carry on any like business within 50 miles of B. D. brought an action for specific performance.—Held: (1) the agreement was not void against A. on the ground that the power of attorney did not authorise an agreement for a partnership; (2) if the power of attorney did not authorise C. to give the purchaser power to trade under the name of A. & Co., or to agree not to trade within 50 miles of B., they were stipulations for the benefit of D., which he could waive. Semble: C. was authorised by the power of attorney to enter into the agreement not to carry on business of a similar character within 50 miles of B., as a going concern co. ld not be sold advantageously without

In an action by the master against the owners for wages, secondary evidence was given of the contents of such power of attorney, in absence of the document, which was lost, & the judge ruled that it gave A. power to dismiss the master.—Held: (1) the construction of the contents of such document was properly with the judge, & not the jury; (2) his decision on such construction was right; (3) the dismissal being with the authority of the owners, the master could not claim wages subsequently thereto.—BERWICK v. HORSFALL (1858), 4 C. B. N. S. 450; 27 L. J. C. P. 193; 31 L. T. O. S. 117; 22 J. P. 659; 4 Jur. N. S. 615; 6 W. R. 471; 140 E. R. 1160.

Upon these questions being submitted for the opinion of the ct. upon a special case.—Held: as the power would be revoked by the death of vendor, the ct. could only answer the questions in favour of purchaser.—BAILEY v. 302. Agent inserting principals' name in registries as mortgagees.—Authority to see that security effectual.]—A. & Co. being indebted to B. & Co., it was agreed that as security for the debt B. & Co. should be interested in a moiety of certain ships owned by A. & Co. The names of the partners in B. & Co. were inserted in the respective registries with those of A. & Co. by an agent employed by B. & Co. to see that their security was effectual, but (as they alleged) without their personal knowledge or direction. Petitioner afterwards supplied the ships with articles for their use on orders from A. & Co., & without knowing B. & Co. were interested. The ships were sold & the proceeds divided before bkpy. There were no joint effects of A. & Co. & B. & Co.:—Held: (1) in inserting the names of the mtgees. their agent performed a necessary duty; (2) he must be taken to have inserted their names with their knowledge & by their direction; (3) prima facie the individuals whose names appeared on the registries were liable.—*Re DAWES & Co., Re WILLIAMS, WILSON & Co., Exp. While B. was manager he ordered cigars from C., who supplied them to B., & C. credited B. alone; but afterwards discovering that B. was only a servant of A., sued A. for the price:—Held: as the cigars were such as a manager of such business would have power to order as incident to the management, A. was liable for the price.—WATTEAU v. FENWICK, [1893] 1 Q. A. employed B., a Stock Exchange broker, to buy shares for him. At the time of the purchase, a call had been made, but was not then payable. The seller having paid the call, in order to enable him to make a transfer of the shares, B., who, by the rules of the Stock Exchange, was personally responsible for it, paid the money:—Held: B. entitled to recover from A. the sum so paid, as money paid to his use.—BAYLEY v. WILKINS (1849), 7 C. Agent accepting notice of renewal of charterparty.—Special authority to make original charterparty.]—A charterparty made between plft. & deft. oos, provided that plfts. should have the right of renewal, upon giving notice on or before a specified date. On the date specified plfts. gave notice of renewal to M. K. & Co., who had acted as agents of defts. in connection with the negotiation of the charterparty, & the receipt & remittance of the hire of the vessel. Defts. refused to renew, on the ground that the notice required had not been given:—Held: the authority given by defts. to M. K. & Co. was a special authority, & the duty devolved upon plfts. of showing that, by usage or otherwise, they had authority to receive notice in connection with the extension of the time, such notice not being incidental or necessary to their original authority.

The trial judge having refused to submit to the jury a question tendered on behalf of plfts. as to the authority of M. Negotiations took place between the surveyors employed by pltf. & by the ry. co. Pltf.'s surveyor suggested alterations by which it would become unnecessary to take all the lands in question, & he prepared draft proposals of agreement which involved inter alia the payment of £2,000 as purchase-money. The ry. co. paid £2,000 into ct., & executed a bond for £2,000 in the statutory form required by the above sect. In an action to restrain the ry. co. from inter alia entering & doing works on pltf.'s land:—Held: (1) pltf. had made no claim for purchase-money as to enable the ry. co. to enter under the above sect. on payment of the amount claimed & delivery of a bond; (2) pltf.'s surveyor was not his agent to make the claim.—FORD v. 334. Clerk—Express authority from firm—Bill drawn to individual partner.]—Two of six partners, who had given a confidential clerk general authority in writing to sign bills & notes on behalf of the firm, directed the clerk to sign four promissory notes, in the name of the firm, payable respectively to one or the other of the two partners, who claimed to be creditors of the aggregate firm, in respect of an excess of capital advanced by them for the purposes of the partnership. The two partners afterwards indorsed the notes to a separate creditor for a private debt of one of the two:—Held: although, as between these two partners & the other members of the firm, the notes were unjustifiably created & possessed by the two, yet, in the absence of all fraud or connivance in the transaction by the party to whom the notes were indorsed, the aggregate firm were liable for the amount, & on the firm's bkpy. the holder of the notes had a right to prove the amount of them against the joint estate.—

due by him to his principal to the payment of the cargo of fish, so far as same would go, & to draw bills upon her for the balance. The agent drew for the whole sum:—Held: with respect to that part of the price of the fish which was to be paid in bills, there could be no doubt that the seller of the fish might successfully sue the foreign principal for it, & though with regard to the other part of the price the agent was guilty of a breach of his instructions, yet as the fish was shipped on board the vessel of the principal under the expectation that he was to pay for it & was actually there for his benefit he was liable to pay the seller for it, since he was clearly bound either to do so or to return the article.—BALNE, JOHNSTON & Co. v. h. Commission agent—Trade custom.]—A commission agent in Scotland drew & indorsed a bill per pro. his employer, a worsted spinner in England. A banker, who discounted the bill, raised action for payment against the constituent, averring that it was the general practice of his trade for commission agents, without special mandate, to draw & indorse bills of the purchasers per pro. their principal, that the bill was so drawn & indorsed in the exercise of the usual powers, & its proceeds received by the principal, who was well aware not only of the general practice of the trade, but also that his agent exercised the usual powers of commission agent, without objection from him:—Held: these averments warranted an issue, whether the commission agent was authorised to draw & indorse the bill per pro. defender & whether he was resting owing to pursuer the sum in the bill, or any part thereof,

335. Consignee—Express authority—Subject to conditions.]—Documents in the form of letters of credit were addressed by defts. to S. & Co., authorising them to draw bills on defts. against shipments. To the documents certain conditions were appended. S. & Co. drew bills upon defts. under the credit so opened without performing the conditions. Pltf. having notice of the conditions & knowing that they were unfulfilled advanced money on the bills so drawn which defts. refused to accept. In an action for not accepting the bills:—Held: if the documents created a contract between pltf. & defts., that contract was subject to such of the conditions as were not necessarily subsequent to the advance.—UNION BANK OF CANADA v. 336. Farm bailiff—Authority to make & receive payments.]—The bailiff of a large farming establishment, through whose hands all payments & receipts take place, has no implied authority to pledge the credit of his employer by drawing & indorsing bills of exchange in the name of the latter. Nor, in absence of all direct evidence of authority, does the nature of the employment of such a bailiff furnish any ground for inferring the existence of such an authority upon slight, or upon any other than distinct, evidence of assent or acquiescence. To fix the principal the evidence should distinctly show that he knew, or had the means of knowing, the acts done in his name.—DAVIDSON v. STANLEY (1841), 2 Man. & G. 721; 3 Scott, N. R. 49; 133 E. R. 936.

337. Manager—Entire charge of company's interests abroad.]—A co. which carried on business as importers of tinned ox-tongues & other provisions appointed H., one of the directors, manager of the co. to take entire charge of its interests in South America. H. sailed to South America, & there arranged with L. for the supply of meat to the co., but L. refused to sign the contract unless its performance was guaranteed. S. agreed to guarantee performance of the contract by placing a sum of money to the credit of L. in a bank upon being given a promise to pay signed by H. on behalf of the co. H. signed a promissory note on behalf of the co., & S. deposited the money. Default was made by the co. in carrying out the contract, & the sum deposited by S. became forfeited to L. The note given to S. was dishonoured, & he made a claim against the co. in its winding up in respect thereof:—Held: (1) as it was not shown that the giving of the promissory note was necessary for carrying on the business of the co. or was usual in

k. Factor—General authority as such—Similar acts on previous occasions.]—A factor under a general power of agency having in his own name drawn bills on a purchaser of goods from his principal, which purchaser accepted, & having discounted them with a banker, by indorsing them also in his individual name, & he & purchaser having become bkpt.:—Held: although the agent was in the practice of drawing & discounting bills, sometimes in his own name, & at others per pro. his principal, who settled with purchaser on the footing of his acceptance, yet, as the principal's name was not on the bills, he was not liable.—TELFORD v. A. gave def't. in payment of certain racing debts cheques signed by him per pro. pltf's.:—Held: (1) A. had only authority to draw cheques for purposes of pltf's.' business; (2) def't. must be taken to have had notice that the cheques were signed for purposes outside that business; (3) there was no evidence pltf's. had held out A. as having authority to sign the cheques in question; (4) pltf's. were entitled to recover the amount of the cheques from def't.—*MORISON v. Traveller—Holding out.]—Pltf's. supplied def't. with goods ordered through A., the traveller of pltf's., & def't. by way of payment accepted a bill drawn by A. upon them, & made payable to his own order. A. absconded having cashed the bill, & the value thereof did not reach pltf's., who sued def't. for the price of the goods. It was proved in support of the plea of payment that A. had on a prior occasion taken payment by a bill drawn in blank & accepted by def't., which pltf's. had afterwards filled up & cashed, & also that pltf's. had written a letter to A., which was shown to def't., in which they intimated a wish to draw upon him for an amount due:—Held: neither the previous dealing, nor pltf's.' letter to A., were evidence of an authority to A. to draw a bill in his own favour, & a rule to enter a verdict for def't. must be discharged.—HOGARTH v. WHERLEY (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 630; 44 L. J. C. P. 330; 32 L. T. 800.

342. Agent—Authority to liquidate partnership business.]—Def't., a partner in a firm of A. Bros., agreed with her co-partners that the partnership should be dissolved, & the affairs of the firm liquidated by an agent, who should realise the assets & pay the creditors, & the business carried on by def't. Def't. & the agent opened a joint banking account, & requested the bank to honour drafts signed by either of them. Cheques were drawn on joint account signed by the agent in the names of def't. & himself, & bills were drawn on A. Bros., & accepted by the agent in the names of def't. & himself, & honoured. Def't. knew nothing of these cheques & bills. Pltf. sued as indorsee for value of a bill of exchange drawn on A. Bros., accepted by the agent in the names of himself & def't. & made payable at the bank where the joint account was opened:—Held: (1) the agent had no authority to accept the bill in def't.'s name so as to bind her; (2) not being a partner in the firm of A. Bros., he had no authority to accept bills drawn on the firm, & def't. was not liable.—ODELL v. CORMACK BROTHERS (1887), 19 Q. B. D. 223.

343. — General authority to accept given on previous occasion.]—The holder of a bill purporting to be, but not in fact, accepted by the person to whom it is addressed, cannot recover against the apparent acceptor, by proving a fact subsequently discovered, that on a former occasion def't. had given a general authority to the person who accepted in his name to accept bills for him. To make such authority available for such purpose, he must show, either that the authority remained unrevoked at the time of the acceptance, or that he took the bill on the faith of such authority.—*CASH v. some of these bills, in one case after the bill was protested; she had never given authority to A. to sign them for her, & there was evidence that she had expressly denied having done so. A creditor, who was the bonâ fide holder of a bill signed by A. for B., filed a claim for recovery of the amount due upon it, & insisted that he was entitled to recover, on the ground that A. had an implied authority from B., who had paid the former bills, in attaching her name to the bill in question:—Held: the creditor was not entitled to recovery, or even an inquiry as to whether he was a creditor on the estate.—LEONARD v. MATHEWS (1851), 18 L. T. O. S. 83.

345. ———.]—The fact that deft. admitted a former bill does not prove he authorised the drawer to accept bills in his name, unless the former bill was accepted by his hand. Even so, a single instance would be no evidence of a general authority.—PHILPOT v. STOCK (1860), 2 F. & F. 180.

It was proved that when the bill was presented for payment he had without looking at it promised to pay in a short time, & further that he had in fact on previous occasions paid similar bills by the drawer of this bill, to which (as it was supposed) the drawer had written deft.'s acceptance:—Held: a sufficient answer to the defence of forgery, for it showed that deft. had adopted the acceptance.—BARBER v. Temperance Hall, Liverpool," & accepted thus: "Accepted M." A., B., & C. with M. & another were the five trustees of a body of persons associated for the purpose of building the Temperance Hall. M. had authority from all the trustees to accept the bill on their behalf:—Held: defts. were bound by the acceptance, though it did not show on the face of it that M. intended to accept not individually, but for himself & four others.—JENKINS v. A. delivered it to B. for the same purpose, informing him to whom it belonged. B., finding he could not dispose of it without indorsing it, was prevailed upon so to do by A.'s telling him he would indemnify him; but the indorsee took it upon the credit of the names on the bill without knowledge of the real owner. The original holder afterwards promised to pay the bill:—Held: such promise could not support the action brought against him by the indorsee, it being nudum pactum; for as A. was a special agent under a limited authority, he could not bind his principal by any act beyond the scope of such limited authority.—FENN v. ■ r. Agent—Authority to sign mortgage—Paper "similarly indorsed."]—By a mtge. reciting that H. B. & Co. were indebted to pltf. for money lent to them on promissory notes made by H., indorsed by the co. & by deft., deft. covenanted with pltf. that he or H. or the co. should pay the indebtedness represented by notes or by renewed or substituted notes. For several years H. had been presenting notes for discount purporting to be indorsed by deft., & had always written his name as in-dorser, as he alleged, with his assent, & gave evidence that on deft. objecting to signing the mtge. as pltf. would notice the difference in signatures, he signed deft.'s name in his presence, & that deft. acknowledged the mtge. as his act & deed. In an action against deft. under the mtge. & on promissory notes made by H. indorsed by the co. & by deft. the judge told the jury they might infer from the evidence & deft.'s conduct that he consented to his name being used & that as the mtge. contemplated renewals of the notes & there was no evidence from which it might be considered the renewal notes were payment of the mtge. was clear pltf. were not paid, & the jury found for pltf. as regards the mtge. & for deft. as regards the promissory notes. On appeal:—Held: (1) there was no ground for disturbing the verdict as regards the mtge.; (2) pltf. ought to be allowed a new trial as regards the promissory notes, & a distinct direction should be given the jury that in the undoubted absence of any notice to pltf. of the indorsements not being genuine, they were clearly warranted in accepting paper "similarly indorsed," & deft. should

352. — Express authority — Accommodation bill.—A letter written by A. & Co. inclosed a bill of exchange, accepted & specially indorsed to B. & Co., & stated, "We have drawn upon you for £300; against this we remit you inclosed for £300." B. & Co. had absconded when this letter arrived, but had left the following letter with C: "In our absence we authorise you to open our letters, & for us & in our name to indorse any bills of exchange which may be remitted to us, & to deliver such bills to D. or to negotiate such bills, & deliver the proceeds to D., against any liability he may be under for our account." C. having indorsed the inclosed bill in the name of B. & Co., on the supposed authority contained in the second letter:—Held: (1) the second letter gave an authority to indorse those bills only of which B. & Co. were bond fide holders, "not a bill received upon the terms of the first letter; (2) a subsequent indorsee for value, without notice of the circumstances, could not recover against the acceptor of the bill.—*FEARN v. P., whom he understood to be the son of a Mrs. P., whom he had never seen, but with whose house the house of his employers had dealings, & that he had seen bills drawn & accepted in the same form as the bill in question, some of which bills had been paid:—Held: sufficient proof as against deft. of an authority to indorse.—*JONES v. While it was still in C.'s possession C. was pressed by pltf. for a debt due to him & handed him the note, which pltf. received on account of his debt, making no inquiry respecting C.'s title to the note or his authority so to deal with it. In an action on the note against B.:—Held: the note was none the less current because C. in fraud of the purpose for which it had been intrusted to him had used it for another purpose, & the wrongful diversion from the purpose for which it had been intrusted to C. could not destroy the apparent title of a bond fide holder for value, & pltf. was entitled to recover.—CROSS v. CURRIE (1880), 43 U. C. R. 599; 5 A. R. 31.—CAN.

K., without express authority, indorsed the cheque in plffs.' name, adding "per K., agent." The bankers paid, & K. failed to account to plffs. Plffs. sued defts. for the money & in trover for the cheque:—Held: there was evidence that K. had implied authority to indorse the cheque, or that plffs. had held him out as their agent so as to justify payment on his indorsement.—*CHARLES v. Manager—Express authority to indorse pro. for particular purpose.—A., manager of the firm of B. & Co., debt collectors, had authority inter alia to indorse bills & cheques sent in payment to B. & Co. "per pro. B. & Co., A." for the purpose of paying them into B. & Co.'s banking account. A. took six bills to deft., some being indorsed "B. & Co.," & others "B. & Co. per pro.," & asked deft., who knew A. as B. & Co.'s manager, to obtain cash for them for the purpose of paying wages. Deft. obtained from his bank the full face value of the bills & handed it over to A., who misappropriated it. The jury having found A. had no authority to indorse otherwise than per pro., that B. & Co. had not held out A. as having a general authority to indorse or to cash bills, that the bills indorsed per pro. were so indorsed for the purpose of defrauding B. & Co., & that deft. was a bond fide holder for value:—Held: (1) as to the bills not indorsed per pro., B. & Co. were entitled to recover; (2) as to the bills indorsed per pro., A. had no authority to negotiate them but only to pay them into B. & Co.'s bank, & B. & Co. were entitled to recover.—*GOMPERTZ v. 359. Manager of bank—Express authority—Bill indorsed after bank stopped payment.]—M., manager of a joint-stock bank, having authority to indorse bills in course of business of the bank, but not otherwise, indorsed a bill of exchange four months after the bank had stopped, professedly "per procuracion" for the bank, but without authority from the directors, whose business it was to wind up the affairs of the bank. In an action against the bank upon the bill:—Held: (1) an indorsement "per procuracion" imported that the indorsement was not the act of the bank, but of a person professing to have special authority so to indorse; (2) it was the duty of a person taking the bill to satisfy himself that the indorser had the authority which he pretended to have; (3) pltf. was not entitled to recover.—ALEXANDER v. 361. Agent to sell—Express authority to draw & transmit.]—Where an agent was authorised to draw bills upon sale of goods for pltf. at so many months, which bills were to be transmitted to pltf., & the agent drew bills at a larger credit than that for which he was authorised, & instead of indorsing & transmitting them to pltf., got them discounted by deft. & converted them to his own use:—Held: proof of these facts alone did not afford sufficient evidence of fraud connected with deft. to give pltf. a prima facie right to recover the amount of the bills from him as money had & received & make it incumbent on him to show he gave full value for the bills.—DAVIS v. WILLIS (1836), 1 Har. & W. 679; sub nom. DAVIES v. WILLATS, 5 L. J. K. B. 94.

presented the cheque:—Held: the bailiff was not acting within scope of his authority in discounting the cheque, so as to bind his principal.—WATERS v. BROGDEN (1827), 1 Y. & J. 457; 148 E. R. 750.

363. Financial agent & secretary—Express authority to discount—Forged bills.]—A secretary & financial agent of a co., having authority to get bills discounted, forged bills & got them discounted. He paid the proceeds into a bank to the account of a firm to which he belonged, & in his character of a member of that firm drew cheques on the account in favour of the co., & it was alleged that, out of the amounts so drawn, he actually made payments for the benefit of the co. The bill-discounter had not negotiated the bills. In the winding-up of the co., the discounter asked for an inquiry what amount of proceeds of the bills had thus reached the co. & asking to claim for the amount when ascertained:—Held: (1) an inquiry must be directed what amount of the proceeds of the bills had been applied directly or indirectly for the benefit of the co.; (2) a claim for the amount when ascertained would be good.—Re JAPANESE CURTAINS & PATENT FABRIC CO., LTD., Ex p. SHOOLBRED (1880), 28 W. 365. Agent—Receipt of acceptance blank as to amount—Secret limitations.]—A party giving another his blank acceptance authorises him to fill it up with any sum covered by the stamp & negotiate it, & will be liable thereupon in the hands of a bona fide holder, notwithstanding any limitation of authority, in point of time or otherwise, as between himself & the party to whom he delivers it. In such case the lapse of time is only evidence of a limitation of authority as between the blank acceptor & the party to whom he delivers it, & does not disprove the authority to negotiate the bill after lapse of an unreasonable time, if, upon the face of the bill, no such lapse of time appears. On a plea of Stat. Limitations, lapse of time from the giving of the blank acceptance will be no evidence, for it will not appear when the bill is filled up, as the Act does not run until then.—MONTAGUE (MONTAGUE) v. PERKINS (1853), 22 L. J. C. P. 187; 21 L. T. O. S. 185; 17 Jur. 557; 1 W. R. 437; 1 C. L. R. 579.

v. Manager—Express authority for business purposes.]—N. & Co., managing agents of deft. co., had a general banking account with pltf., & N. & Co. had power to draw, accept, indorse, & negotiate on behalf of deft. co. all cheques, promissory notes, drafts, etc., necessary to enable them to carry on deft. co.'s business. Purporting to act under this power, N. & Co. drew a bill of exchange on deft. co., which was accepted by it, & indorsed by N. & Co. to pltf., who credited the amount to N. & Co.'s general account. N. & Co. personally drew out by cheque the amount without reference to deft. co., & the money was not applied in deft. co.'s business:—Held: deft. co. not liable on the bill.—ORIENTAL BANK CORPN. v. BAREE TEA CO. (1883), 1 L. R. 9 Calc. 880; 13 C. L. R. 412.—IND.

367. — Notation in margin.—Deft. signed an acceptance, the amount in the body of which was then left in blank, but in the margin of which were the figures £14 Os. 6d., that being the sum for which deft. desired to accept. He then handed the acceptance to the drawer, who filled in the blank in the body of the bill for £164 Os. 6d., & fraudulently altered the figures in the margin to that sum. The bill was then indorsed by drawer to pltf., who took it bona fide for value for the larger amount:—Held: deft. was liable on the bill for such larger amount, on the grounds (1) the marginal figures were not an essential part of a bill of exchange; (2) one who gave an acceptance in blank held out the person he intrusted therewith as having authority to fill in the bill as he pleased within the limits of the stamp; (3) no alteration (even if fraudulent & unauthorised) of the marginal figures could vitiate the bill as a bill for the full amount inserted in the body when it reached the hands of a holder for value who was unaware that the marginal figures had been improperly altered.—*GARRARD v. 368. — Receipt of accommodation bill blank as to drawer's name.—In pursuance of an agreement made between pltf. & A. for accommodation in relation to acceptances, pltf. handed A. certain bills, which they had accepted, in which the dates & drawers' names were left blank, which under the agreement were to be provided by A. The bills were to be used by A. to recoup himself for advances to pltf., & for the purpose of raising money for pltf. A. used the bills for his own purposes, & having filled in the dates, handed them to deft., L., who, in good faith, inserted the drawers' names. In an action against L. for conversion:—Held: (1) although L. took the bills in good faith, he was liable, as he took bills with only an acceptor's name but no drawer's name, & so ran the risk that A. had no authority, or only a limited authority, to allow a drawer's name to be put in the instrument; (2) A. had no authority to insert a drawer's name in the circumstances, as the only authority he had to insert a name was that of a drawer who would take the bill for pltf.' benefit; (3) insertion of the words

COOKE*, [1907] 1 K. B. 794; 76 L. J. K. B. 666; 96 L. T. 715; 23 T. L. R. 429, C. A.

After P. had left S. Africa T., without waiting for instructions from P. (which were in fact never given) & in fraud of P., filled in the blanks in the documents so as to make them appear to be promissory notes for considerable sums & sold them to pltf., who took them honestly & in good faith, & without notice of fraud, & gave full value for them. For the purpose of suing in England, the notes were stamped as foreign bills:—Held: (1) as P. handed the notes to

A. agent—Receipt of blank promissory note for delivery to particular parties—Secret limitations as to use.—Deft. wishing to purchase shares in a co. about to be formed, signed & handed over to C. a blank promissory note on the understanding that it would be filled in with the name of the co. as payee & used only in payment of the shares. The co. was never formed, & C. filled in his own name as payee & indorsed the note to pltf. for value:—Held: deft. not liable on the note. Smith v. Prosser, [1907] 2 K. Resp.'s instructions were that in the event of money being required for repairs to the houses, T. was to notify him, & if resp. could not send T. the money, then the latter was to fill up & use the forms for the purpose of raising the necessary sum. T. filled up one of the notes, & issued it for his own private purposes. In an action by the holder of the note, the ct. found on the evidence that the circumstance on which alone T. was authorised to fill up the note never arose, that T.'s act was unauthorised & fraudulent as against resp. On appeal:—Held: (1) the judgment of the ct. affirming this finding was not so clearly wrong as to justify the Supreme Ct. in reversing it; (2) Bills of Exchange Act, R. S. O. 1906, c. 119, ss. 31, 32, did not protect holders in due course where the agent who issued the note was a mere custodian only; (3) T.'s act was not capable of ratification in so far as he was not acting for resp.'s benefit or

372. Clerk—Receipt of cheques blank as to payee & amount.]—Pltf., a stockbroker, employed a confidential clerk. On settling days on the Stock Exchange it was pltf.'s practice to sign a number of blank cheques & to hand them over to the clerk, giving him authority to fill in the names of persons with whom pltf. did business & whose accounts he wished to settle, & the amount of the sums due to him. The authority of the clerk was absolutely limited to this. The clerk had entered into betting transactions with defts. & had incurred debts. To pay these debts he wrongfully filled in seven of the blank cheques with the name of defts., who took them in good faith, & certain sums which he owed them from time to time. Pltf. sued defts. for damages for conversion of the cheques & their proceeds:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover.—PAINE v. BEVAN & BEVAN (1914), 110 L. T. 933; 30 T. L. R. 395, C. A.

Pledgor agent of pledgee—Receipt of delivery warrant blank as to quantity.]—A harbour board furnished owners of goods lying at their warehouses with delivery order forms, which were printed & had three columns, the first headed "Ship," the second "New numbers," & the third "Quantity in words at length." At the bottom of the sheet was a ruled line for signature. In Aug., 1898, N. presented a form to pltf.s for signature referring to one hoghead of tobacco out of 18 pledged by him with pltf.s. In column 2 he placed the number 246, but the third was left blank for N. to fill up, as he told pltf.'s manager he did not know whether it was a tierce or hoghead. After the signature had been placed on the form he drew a line after the number 246 & wrote in the figures 263, & in the third column put the words "eighteen hogheads." In an action against the harbour board for conversion of the 17 hogheads:—Held: (1) pltf.s. could not recover, as N. was their agent to complete the form; (2) they were responsible for his fraudulent act.—*UNION CREDIT BANK, LTD., & DAVIES v. SUB-SECT. 5.—AUTHORITY TO BORROW.

375. Agent—Authority to collect rents & repair houses.]—Deft.'s agent, to whom the collection of rent & keeping of houses, among them pltf.'s house, in repair, was intrusted by deft., landlord thereof, had ordered sewerage work to be done, & had authorised pltf. to pay for beer for the workmen, promising that the amount so paid should be deducted out of the rent. No rent was due at the time of the authority thus given. Pltf. had paid for the beer. In an action for wrongful distress, on the ground that the promised allowance had not been made:—Held: (1) the agent had no authority to borrow money, or to get others to pay for beer; (2) it might have been different if there had been any rent due.—CROOKE v. WILSON, No. 610, post.

376. — Authority to draw on banking account.]—An agent has no right, without authority of his principal, to overdraw a banking account. If it appears the agent has done so with his principal's knowledge the jury will be warranted in inferring from this that the agent had in fact requisite authority.—POTT v. BEVAN (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 335.

S. estate; M. did not enter the amount in his accounts with the S. estate as a loan, but on the contrary in the accounts which he rendered took credit for the amount as a payment by himself. M. had no authority to borrow money:—Held: the E. estate could not hold the S. estate liable for the sum & was not entitled to a lien thereon on the property in respect of which the taxes were payable.—EWART v. STEVEN (1871), 18 Gr. 35.—CAN.

y. — Holding out.]—To prove a course of dealing which would estop a principal from denying an authority which, in fact, he never conferred on his agent & which could not legally be implied from the nature of the agency, it is not sufficient to show that pltf. may possibly have been misled, but pltf. must show that the course of dealing was of such nature that it could reasonably have been expected to mislead, & that it did in fact mislead him. Deft. employed C. as his runner, &

377. — Donee of voluntary bond.]—A person giving a voluntary bond to an agent that money may be raised upon it is bound by his agent's acts, although he may receive no part of the money raised; but an assignee of the bond can only hold it as security for the actual amount advanced by him upon it.—TOTTENHAM v. GREEN (1863), 1 New Rep. 466; 32 L. J. Ch. 201.

378. — Instruction to raise money on collateral security.]—A., having understood from B., his solr., that C. was willing to lend money, by letter authorised B. to obtain a sum on the security of a mtge. & bond, & executed a bond & a transfer of the mtge., referred to in the bond, to C. to secure a less sum. B., having money of C.'s in his hands, gave C. the bond, & represented to him that he had passed the money to A. C. made no inquiry as to B.'s authority, & B. told A. that the loan was not to be obtained, & the bond was rescinded. B. absconded, & C., having recovered against A. at law, was compelled to refund in equity.

The bond expressly refers to another security which was intended to be the principal & the bond the collateral security. The authority to receive money on the bond was only a limited authority, & deft. was not justified in lending his money without being satisfied as to B.'s authority. But the case is stronger, for the money was not paid to B. at the time it was an existing debt of the latter to deft. Deft. clearly is not entitled to the benefit of the bond (LORD LANGDALE, M.R.).—YOUNG v. GUY (1844), 8 Beav. 147; 3 L. T. O. S. 260; 50 E. R. 58.

379. — Limitation as to amount.]—Appl., mtgee. of land, having deposited title-deeds with a bank for an advance, & being desirous of obtaining a larger advance, gave, on two consecutive days, two written authorities to his son to receive the deeds on payment of the amount due to the bank. The first authority was in general terms, but in the second authority he specified the bank which had agreed to make the larger loan & directed payment to be made to that bank. The son, by means of the first authority, obtained possession of the deeds, & procured from a different bank than the one specified in the second authority a loan largely in excess of the amount authorised by his father, paid his father the additional amount he was instructed to raise, & kept the balance. As the bank pressed for payment, the son forged a transfer of mtge. from his father to himself, & having obtained an assignment of the equity of redemption, sold the land to resp. societies, who paid off the bank:—Held: applt. having intrusted his son with control of the deeds for the purpose of raising money, could only redeem the property upon payment of the whole amount advanced by resps. for

380. — ———.]—If a co. intrusts its agent with a certificate of debenture stock issued by itself, it will be assumed in favour of a purchaser or mtgee., in whose name the certificate is made out & who has no notice to the contrary, that the agent had authority to deal with it to the full extent of its face value. A co., desirous of borrowing £3,000, requested its brokers to negotiate the loan. The brokers applied to G. to advance not £3,000 but £6,000, which he agreed to do upon having a debenture-stock certificate for £8,000 deposited at his bank by way of security. The certificate was made out in the name of G. and stated he was the registered holder of £8,000 debenture-stock in the co.; & G. advanced the £6,000 & paid same to the brokers, but only £3,000 of this sum was handed to the co.:—Held: (1) G. was not bound to inquire what were the relations between the brokers & the co., but had a right to assume the brokers had authority from the co. to deal with the certificate; (2) he was as regards the co., & other debenture-holders, in the position of a bond fide purchaser for value to the extent of his advance, & entitled in the liquidation of the co. to prove for the full amount of £8,000 until he obtained dividends not exceeding the amount due in respect of his loan of £6,000.—ROBINSON v. MONTGOMERYSHIRE BREWERY CO., LTD., [1896] 2 Ch. 841; 65 L. J. Ch. 915; 3 Mans. 270.

381. — ———.]—Pltfs., registered holders of shares in a limited co., gave to an agent authority to obtain for them a loan of not less than £250 upon the shares, & handed to him the documents of title to the shares, including a blank transfer, signed by them. The agent handed the documents of title, including the blank transfer, to deft. as security for a loan of £100 from deft. to himself, deft. taking them in good faith & without express notice or knowledge of the limitation of the agent's authority. The agent not having repaid the sum borrowed by him, deft. caused the blank transfer to be filled up with his own name, & by means of that & the other documents of title obtained the certificates for the shares. Pltfs. brought an action against deft. for return of the shares:—Held: (1) the mere fact that the transfer was in blank & not filled up with the name of any transferee did not put deft., on taking it, upon his inquiry as to the extent of the agent's authority; (2) as pltfs. had intrusted the agent, with intention he should deal with them on their behalf, with documents which apparently represented the entire interest in the shares, they were estopped from setting up limitation of the agent's authority as against deft., who had no notice of the limitation.—*FRY & MASON v. C. employed G. as his sub-agent, but neither C. nor G. had any authority to borrow money on behalf of deft. G. borrowed money in his own name from pltfs., who knew that G. was a sub-agent, but they debited C. with amounts borrowed. Deft. on two occasions paid to the credit of pltfs. sums thus borrowed:—Held: the fact of deft. having so paid such sums did not amount to such course of dealing as would estop him from denying that G. was

379 i. — Instruction to raise money on collateral security.—Limitation as to amount.]—Pltf. authorised V. to procure for her a loan of $200 on certain property & for that purpose handed to him her certificate of title & a blank transfer. V. arranged a loan of $500 with deft. in fraud of pltf., to whom he did not hand any money at all:—Held: (1) V. had acted in excess of & not in absence of authority; (2) no fraud being alleged against deft., pltf. was not entitled to a declaration that deft. had no mtge. or lien on the lands, or to an order for delivery to her of the transfer & certificate of title.—*MAHAN v. of authority to the party to whom it is given to borrow the amount on the credit & behalf of the acceptor, even although it is admitted on the part of the acceptor that the money to be raised on the security of the bill was to be lent to the acceptor, & however the latter may be liable on the bill at the suit of an honest holder, the question on a claim for money lent by him to the acceptor will be, whether the money was received by any one as authorised agent of the acceptor in that behalf.—KING v. FORBES, No. 199, ante.

385. Donee of share certificate & blank transfer—Authority as such.]—W. & H. were co-adventurers in speculative transactions. W. signed a blank transfer of certain shares of his, & this, with the certificate of such shares, H. intrusted to pltf., who obtained a personal advance to himself as borrower of £700 for the use of H. from the M. Co. H. not repaying the loan, the co. inserted pltf.'s name in the blank transfer so as to yield it a transfer from W. to pltf. W. wrote to the co. to put a stop to their registering the transfer. Subsequently the shares fell very much in value & were ultimately transferred to pltf. In an action by pltf. against W.:—Held: whether or not W. authorised H. to raise the loan was immaterial, as he had handed him the documents for the purpose of raising a loan, & was estopped from denying the co.'s authority to deal with the blank transfer as they did, & was liable to pltf. in damages, the measure being the difference in value of the shares when pltf.'s name was inserted in the transfer & when pltf. ultimately acquired them.—HOOPER v. HENRY, [1906] 1 Ch. 549; 75 L. J. Ch. 253; 94 L. T. 324; 54 W. R. 350; 50 Sol. Jo. 271; 13 Mans. 85, C. A.

386. Manager of business—Authority to draw on banking account for business purposes—Principal benefited by loan.]—A., defts.' manager, had power to draw on defts.' account for purposes of the business, but not to overdraw or borrow money on defts.' account. He borrowed money from B., stating he wanted it to pay the wages of defts.' men, & gave B. a cheque signed by him by procuration for defts.; A. had overdrawn defts.' account & wanted the money to replace what he had abstracted. He paid B.'s money into defts.' account & used it to pay defts.' men:—Held: (1) as by Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (c. 61), s. 25, B. had notice of A.'s limited authority & defts. could only be bound if A. acted within his authority, an action on the cheque must fail; (2) as the money had found its way into defts.' hands & had been used for defts.' benefit, it was money received for the use of defts.; (3) although defts. did not know A. had borrowed it, B. was entitled to recover.—REID v. RIGBY & Co., [1894] 2 Q. B. 40; 63 L. J. Q. B. 451; 10 T. L. R. 418; 10 R. 280.

387. ———.]—Defts., a country firm, opened a branch of their business in London, & appointed an agent to carry it on. Defts. had an account with a London bank in their name, upon which the agent was entitled to draw. The agent had no authority to borrow money, but, the banking account being low, he borrowed a sum of money of pltf., who was told that it was for the use of the firm & believed that the agent had authority to borrow. The money was paid into the bank, & part of it was used by the agent in the payment of obligations of defts. Subsequently defts. supplied further sums of money, which would have been sufficient to meet their obligations but for the agent's drawing on his own account sums to which he was not entitled. The agent meanwhile borrowed other sums of money of pltf., portions of which were alleged to have been used in discharging further obligations of defts. In an action to recover the amount so borrowed:—Held: to the extent to which the money borrowed should be found on inquiry to have been in fact applied in paying the legal debts of defts., pltf. was entitled in equity to stand in the same position as if that amount had been originally borrowed by them.—BANNATYNE v. MACIVER, [1906] 1 K. B. 103; 75 L. J. K. B. 120; 94 L. T. 150; 54 W. R. 293, C. A.

In an action by the sub-agents against the principal for the amount due to them in respect of the above transaction:—Held: defenders must be satisfied in respect that pursuers had failed to prove (1) that the bills were granted by the manager under the terms of his appointment; (2) that the manager had, subsequent to the appointment, received authority to borrow money; & (3) that the proceeds of the discount of the bills had been applied for the behoof of the principal.—ROSS, SKOLFIELD & Co. v. STATE LINE S.S. Co. (1875), 13 So. L. R. 78; 3 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 134.—SCOT.

The agreement provided that C. was to conduct & manage all matters & affairs of the estates, but nothing was said as to its being done in his own name or in that of the partners of any firm. Money to carry on the business was provided by means of bills drawn by the local manager upon C. in same manner as if he (C.) had been the sole owner, defts. being fully aware of this & finding the funds. 389. Manager of mine—Authority as such.—One of several co-adventurers in a mine has not, as such, any authority to pledge the credit of the general body for money borrowed for the purposes of the concern. And the fact of his having the general management of the mine makes no difference, in the absence of circumstances from which implied authority for that purpose can be inferred.—RICKETTS v. BENNETT & FIELD (1847), 4 C. B. 686; 17 L. J. C. P. 17; 9 L. T. O. S. 267; 11 Jur. 1062; 136 E. R. 678.

390. —Necessity.—The resident manager appointed by the directors of a mining co. to manage the mine has not implied authority from the shareholders of the co. to borrow money on their credit, in order to pay the arrears of wages due to the labourers in the mine, who have obtained warrants of distress upon the materials belonging to the mine for the satisfaction of such arrears, or in any other case of necessity, however pressing. There is no authority in our law for the proposition that every owner who appoints an agent for the management of his property must be taken to have given him authority to borrow money in cases of absolute necessity. The principle is confined to the cases of the master of a ship & of the acceptor of a bill of exchange for the honour of the drawer (PARKE, B.).—HAWTAYNE v. 391 i. Master of ship—Authority as such.—A charterparty stipulated that a sum should be advanced for the ship's disbursements by the charterer's agents to account of freight, but the agents intimated to their principal that they would only make the advance on receiving a bond from the master, which condition was acceded to by the charterer.—Held: the agents were entitled, notwithstanding the stipulation of the charterparty, to recover from the owner an advance made by them for the ship upon the master's obligation to repay the amount.—BENN & CO. v. He did, however, open an account with the bank, & having misapplied the moneys of the council, overdraw that account, without the knowledge or authority of the bank, for the purpose of paying debts due by the county. S. having absconded, the bank sued the council for the amount thus overdrawn, as money paid to their use.—Held: no portion of it could be recovered.—GORE BANK v. COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX (1859), 16 U. C. R. 595.—CAN.

These applications were signed by the agent in the principal's name, & the principal acted upon them & recognised the loans made pursuant thereto. During the progress of work the principal came with the agent & saw the work proceeding, but made no objection to it, & they went frequently to the loan co.'s office together & gave directions as to the buildings.—Held: the agent's authority to enter into the contract on behalf of his principal was sufficiently established by the foregoing facts.—GILLIES v. Advertising agent contracting for magazine proprietors—Holding out.]—Pltf., an advertising agent, arranged with S., who conducted the advertising business of certain magazines belonging to defts., for insertion of a certain advertisement in defts.' magazine for 12 months. Subsequently defts. refused to insert the advertisement on the ground that they disapproved of it:—Held: (1) defts. were bound by the contract made by S., as he had been held out to the public as having a limited authority to treat for defts.; (2) the measure of damages was not the actual loss pltf. had sustained under his contract with the original advertiser, since S., though he knew of the contract, did not know of its terms, but a reasonable sum.—VICKERS v. CHURCH EXTENSION ASSOCN. (1888), 4 T. L. R. 674.

396. Agent chartering ship—Authority to manage business & make similar contracts subject usually to special instructions.]—Where a person permits another to act as his general agent, he is bound by a contract made by the agent, although the latter declares himself as acting "by procuration" & has received special instructions which he exceeds.

Deft., who formerly carried on the business of a corn merchant at Limerick, came to reside in London, & left his brother M. to conduct his business in Limerick. Deft.'s name remained over the door. For the space of 3 years M. purchased large quantities of oats, & chartered numerous ships on account of deft. On these occasions deft. usually sent him special instructions. In the year 1858, a ship in the port of Limerick being about to proceed to Q. for a cargo of timber, M. chartered her to carry on her return from Q. a cargo of oats to London. He signed the charterparty "per procuration." In an action against deft. for not loading a cargo pursuant to the charterparty:—Held: (1) it was properly left to the jury to say whether deft. had allowed M. to act as his general agent; (2) if so, he was liable although M. might have exceeded his authority.—SMITH v. M'GUIRE (1858), 3 H. & N. 554; 1 F. & F. 199; 27 L. J. Ex. 465; 31 L. T. O. S. 248; 6 W. R. 726; 157 E. R. 580.

397. Agent arranging terms—Authority to settle dispute—Secret limitations.]—A dispute having arisen between pltf. & defts. as to whether or not certain granite, which had been prepared by the former for a work which was in course of construction by the latter, was according to contract, getting out of the futlocks, agreeing to receive everything marked off for her by the man she would select, but, on pltf. tendering a quantity which were of inferior size & quality to those set out in the contract, she refused to accept, & pltf. brought an action.—Held: reversing the judgment of the Ct. below, the man sent to mark off the futlocks had no power to bind deft. by marking off futlocks that were of an inferior size & quality to those stipulated in the contract.—VANPELSON v. MANN (1865), 16 L. C. R. 243.—CAN.

397 l. Agent arranging terms—Authority to collect.]—GUENOT v. GIRARDOT (1902), 1 O. W. R. 638.—CAN.

1. Agent contracting for towing—Authority to superintend towing of vessels.]—Steamships brought by deft. from Glasgow to run on the Upper Lakes having to be cut in two to be taken through the St. Lawrence Canals, an arrangement was made by B. (the person who was to manage the vessels) with D. S. & W. Co., that the co. should furnish tugs at specified rates per hour. The terms were contained in a letter which, after specifying the rates per hour for the tugs, & when the time was to begin, stated pltf. should "furnish the main towing hawser free of charge & send D. to superintend the towing & transportation of the vessels, & to use his best endeavours successfully to complete same." D. arranged with the owners of the tugs at certain rates:—Held: D. had authority to make the contract with pltf., & defts. having had the benefit of the work done, should pay therefor.—*CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. He delivered this wheat to its elevators a few days later:—Held: the agent had no authority to contract for future delivery, & pltf. had merely stored his wheat in deft. co.'s elevator.—SLY v.

WESTERN CANADA FLOUR MILLS CO. (1908), 9 W. L. R. 581.—CAN.

h. Agent contracting to pay compensation for loss of easement—Authority to sell.]—In order to make a vendor liable upon an agreement to make compensation for the loss of a quasi-easement made by vendor's agent for sale with a purchaser, it must be shown that the vendor authorised the agent to make such agreement or held him out as having authority to make it.—HAYES v. GODDARD (1915), 31 W. L. R. 424.—CAN.

k. Agent contracting that third party should not bid—Authority to bid at auction.]—When a principal merely authorises an agent to bid at an auction, he is not liable for an agreement entered into by the agent with a third party pledging him to pay to such party a certain sum in consideration that he should abstain from bidding.—ESHAN CHURNER SINGH v. SHAMA CHURN CHURTO (1866), 2 Ind. Jur. N. S. 87; 6 W. R. P. C. 57; 11 Moo. I. A. 7.—IND.

l. Agent filling in blank guarantee bond otherwise than as authorised.]—A. received a blank sheet of paper with a sixpenny stamp upon it from his son with the request to sign across the stamp. He did so on the understanding that his son was to fill in simply a guarantee for £500. The son filled in the guarantee for £500 & added an obligation to pay certain premiums of insurance upon his life of which his father knew nothing:—Held: A. having given his son no authority to fill in this obligation, was not bound to pay the premiums.—WYLLIE & LOCHHEAD, LTD. v. HORNSEY (1889), 26 Sc. L. R. 618.—SCOT.

m. Agent giving option to cancel order—Authority to obtain orders.]—Pltf. employed R. to obtain signed orders for goods on a printed form, which bore thereon the statement that "no conditions, representations, or promises" were authorised except such as were printed "hereon." Deft. signed an order, & simultaneously R. signed & handed deft. a document stating that deft. might cancel the order before a named date:—Held: deft. might cancel the order as arranged by R. although the order had been ratified by pltf.—HOUSE v. WHITELOCK (1911), 13 C. L. R. 334.—AUS.

n. Agent making unusual contract—Authority to manage business.]—An agent to manage & conduct a business generally cannot bind his principal by an unusual contract not strictly relating to the conduct of the business, unless he has express or implied authority therefor. The fact that a third party dealt in good faith with the agent is not sufficient to bind the principal.—MUDARKE JALL v. GILMORE (1868), 3 Agra, 106.—IND.

o. Agent making advertising contract—Authority to manage business.]—T., manager of deft.'s hotel at B., a summer resort, under agreement to pay 15 per cent. of the gross receipts to deft. & have the profits, employed pltf., an advertising co., to puff the hotel. The correspondence between T. & deft. showed that plenty of advertising was necessary & that the cost of it was an "outside expense" falling on the receipts from the business:—Held: T. had implied authority to pledge deft.'s credit for advertising.—*Lane v. Jackson (1855), 20 Beav. 535; Meer Usd-Oallah v. Musumal Beeby Imaman (1836), 1 Moo. Ind. App. 19, 44; Whitehead v. Tuckett (1812), 15 East, 400, 409; Watteau v. Fenwick, [1893] 1 Q. B. 346; Dann v. p. ———.]—Applt., a tailor, left B. to take care temporarily of his place of business & to attend to his customers. B., purporting to act on applt.'s behalf, entered into a contract with reeps. for advertising applt.'s business for the period of one year:—Held: B. had no express authority to enter into a contract, as he was not held out as having such authority & was not applt.'s general agent.—RICHARDSON v. CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY, LTD. (1915), S. A. L. R.—S.A.F.

pltf. wrote to defts., "I have seen E., & he has consented to see you on the subject of the granite, I have authorised him to do so, & if possible come to some amicable arrangement in the matter." E. having agreed with defts. they should have the granite for $50, the contract price being £121 10s. 11d.:—Held: it was not competent to pltf. afterwards to repudiate the act of E., on the ground that he had given him secret instructions not to settle for less than £100.—TRICKETT v. TOMLINSON (1863), 13 C. B. N. S. 663; 1 New Rep. 273; 7 L. T. 678; 143 E. R. 263.

deft. sent his son to meet pltf. & fetch away & pay for the mare, on receipt of a warranty that she was quiet in harness, the limitation of authority being known to pltf. The son fetched her away without making payment or receiving the warranty, & rode her eighteen miles to deft.'s, where she arrived unsound in the legs & was kept two days before return:—Held: (1) the son had no authority to accept the mare without the warranty; (2) the deft. keeping her two days after her arrival in unsound condition was not an adoption of the son's act.—JORDAN v. NORTON (1838), 4 M. & W. 155; 1 Horn & H. 234; 7 L. J. Ex. 281; 150 E. R. 1382.

Agent completing contract otherwise than as agreed upon—Authority to subscribe for shares.]—T., on the understanding that a local board would be formed, of which he was to be a director, signed a power of attorney authorising the manager of an insurance co. to subscribe for shares for him. The manager caused an entry to be made in the co.'s books, debiting T. with the full value of the shares, but the local board was not formed:—Held: T. was not a shareholder, as the authority which he gave to the manager was to be acted upon only in a certain event which had not been fulfilled. Morton's Case (1873), L. R. 16 Eq. 104, cited.—Re STANDARD FIRE INSURANCE CO., TURNER'S CASE, 7 O. R. 448; see, also, 12 A. R. 486; 12 S. C. R. 644.—CAN.

q. Agent varying terms of contract—Authority to take contract to third party.]—An agent who takes a contract written out by his principal to a third party & as a result of conversations alters a term in it, alleging authority so to do, does not thereby bind his principal if there was in fact no authority to vary the written contract, the agent in such case not having, like a broker, general power to enter into a contract.—HOLLAND CHINA TRADING CO. v. TONG TAI TINN (1907), 2 Hong Kong, 54.—HONG KONG.

r. Agent varying date for delivery of goods—Authority to buy.]—Pltf., a cattle owner, agreed in writing to sell O., deft.'s agent, cattle, delivery on or before a named date. Pltf. & O. agreed to vary the date for delivery, & a fresh date was indorsed on the original agreement. The cattle were not delivered until after the date so changed, & deft. refused acceptance. In an action to recover damages for refusal to take delivery:—Held: O. had no actual or apparent authority to vary the written contract by substituting a later date for delivery.—BACON v. BURNELL (1914), 19 C. L. R. 241.—AUS.

s. — Authority for delivery on specified date.]—A principal instructed his agent to enter into a contract for delivery of cotton at the end of Kartik, but the agent entered into a contract for delivery by the middle of that month:—Held: the agent exceeded his authority in such manner as to exempt the principal from liability.—ARLAPA NAYAK v. NARAI KESHAJI & CO. (1871), 8 Bom. A. C. 19.—IND.

t. Agent varying time for payment—Authority to collect.]—Defts. purchased goods of pltf., giving promissory notes for balance of the price. R., pltf.'s collection agent, called on defts. in reference to one of the notes which was overdue, & agreed on pltf.'s behalf to "carry defts. along until the fall" in consideration of their agreeing to give mtges. on their land if they were unable to pay what was due at the fall. R. had authority to make arrangements & get security & upon receiving same to give extensions, & the account had been handed to him to get the money, or do the best he could:—Held: (1) R. was acting within his authority in extending the time; (2) the agreement to give a mtge. on the homestead before the application for patent was null & void under Dominion Lands Act, 1908, s. 31, & pltf. were not bound by the extension.—SAWYER-MASSEY CO. v. DAUG (1911), 4 Sask. L. R. 228; 18 W. L. R. 612.—CAN.

u. Agent varying bill of lading—Usual authority of carrier's agent.]—Defts.' agent at W. received seed for carriage to Liverpool, & issued to pltf. two bills of lading. Pltf. then applied to defts.' agent at T. to have the destination changed to London, & he cancelled the bills of lading for Liverpool, issued fresh ones for London, & notified this to defts.' general agent at N.Y. Owing to a mistake on the part of defts., the consignment went to Liverpool:—Held: the agent at T. had authority to change the destination & grant the new bills of lading. Ashley v. Harrison (1793), 1 Esp. 48; see v. L. & Y. Ry. Co. (1860), 6 H. & N. 211; Hales v. L. & N. W. Ry. Co. (1863), 4 B. & S. 66; Collard v. S. E. Ry. Co. (1861), 7 H. & N. 79; *Borries v. v. — General authority of railway company's agent.]—Resps. entered into a verbal agreement with applts. through their general agent for the carriage of oil from L. to H., the oil to be carried in covered cars with as quick despatch as possible. Afterwards, owing to a difference in the gauge on applts.' railway between L. & S., the agreement was varied, & it was agreed that the oil should be carried from L. to S. in open cars, taking same from L. in the evening so as not to expose the oil to the sun's heat, & that the oil should be transhipped into covered cars at S. The shipping notes & receipts said nothing about covered cars or the freight or mode of carriage, but on the backs of each of them was indorsed a condition that oil would in no circumstances be carried save "at owner's risk." The oil was delayed on the way & exposed to the sun, & in consequence resps. suffered great loss & sought to recover compensation:—Held: (1) the conditions indorsed on the shipping notes & receipts could only be applied to qualify the liability of applts. conditional upon their carrying the oil in accordance with the essential terms of the contract, upon the faith of which alone they were given the oil to carry; (2) oral evidence of the verbal agreement was admissible, such evidence not being in contradiction of anything in the shipping notes & receipts; (3) resps. could not be affected by any private instructions to the agent not to enter into the particular contract; (4) applts. were liable.—GRAND TRUNK RY. CO. & FITZGERALD (1881), 5 S. C. R. 204; 28 U. C. R. 587.—CAN.

w. Agent waiving condition—General authority.]—Subsequent waiver, by an authorised agent, may invalidate a previously written letter forbidding a tradesman to execute orders, except on express personal instructions.—NASH v. MUSKERRY (LORD) (1896), 30 I. L. T. Jo. 37.—IR.

x. — Authority to estimate loss.]—A policy of insurance against fire provided that pltf. should deliver within fifteen days after the fire an account of the loss, & that waiver of any condition of the policy was to be clearly expressed in writing signed by the co.'s manager. A fire having occurred, pltf. did not deliver an account of his loss, & in support of his contention that the condition had been waived by the co., relied on the acts & statements of J., who had been sent by the co. to report, & who had induced pltf. to delay sending in the necessary proofs of loss:—Held: J. had no authority to extend the time limit, as he was merely appointed to make inquiries, investigate, & report to his employers what in his view was the loss sustained.—ATLAS ASSURANCE CO. & BROWNELL (1899), 29 S. C. R. 537.—CAN.

y. — —.]—If a fire insurance adjuster has apparent authority to insist for the co. upon compliance with conditions, it is also within scope of that apparent authority to dispense with their performance.—MARGESON v. COMMERCIAL UNION ASSURANCE CO., LTD. (1899), 29 S. C. R. 601.—CAN.

On the expiry of the contract a letter was written by the Queen's Printer by direction of the Secretary of State, stating that pending future arrangements all the binding work of the Govt. would be given to W. Work was given to other binders, & W. claimed damages in respect thereof:—Held: the letter was not written on behalf of the Crown or of the Govt., & in so far as the Queen's Printer purported to enter into a contract he not only exceeded his authority, but violated the provisions of the above stat.—R. v. WOODBURN (1898), 29 S. C. R. 112.—CAN.

a. Agent of Government.]—Pltf. sued for specific performance of an agreement made between pltf. & C., a Govt. superintendent. The agreement failed to comply with a resolution

399. Broker omitting conditions of purchase from bought note—Authority to complete contract.]—A., having a quantity of wool to dispose of, placed a sample of it at his broker's for sale; B., having examined the sample at the broker's office, purchased from A., in the broker's presence, part of the wool at an agreed price, it being stipulated by B. that the wool was to be delivered in good dry condition. On the same day the broker sent to A. a sold note of the contract, which however omitted mention of the stipulation, & no note was sent to B.:—Held: the broker was not authorised to make the contract set forth in the sold note, omitting the condition.—PITTS v. BECKETT (1845), 13 M. & W. 743; 14 L. J. Ex. 358; 153 E. R. 312.

Annotation:—Refd. Sleevewright v. Archibald (1851), 17 Q. B. 103.

400. Broker varying terms of payment—Authority to buy on advertised conditions.]—A., a merchant at Liverpool, circulated catalogues of certain goods to be sold by auction, subject to the following condition amongst others:—"Payment to be made on delivery of bills of parcels, by good bills on London to the satisfaction of the sellers, not exceeding 3 months' date, to be made equal to cash in 4 months." B., a broker at Liverpool, sent a catalogue to C., a merchant in London, who in return gave him directions to buy certain lots, which B. bought accordingly. Before the sale began the auctioneer stated that payment by known buyers was to be on the usual credit, 2 & 2 months. B., as a known buyer, received the goods without giving bills, & forwarded them to C. in London, with an invoice, stating that payment was to be equal to cash at 4 months; & a few days afterwards B. drew on C. for the amount, at 4 months from the day of the sale, which bill C. accepted & paid at maturity. Within 2 months from the sale B. failed, never having given bills to A. for the price of the goods, & A. finding that C. was B.'s principal, sued him for the value:—Held: he could not recover, as C. would naturally be induced by A.'s catalogue to suppose that B. had given bills for the goods at the time of delivery, & accepted B.'s draft under a mistake occasioned by A.

The broker B. had not any authority from C. to make a contract for goods to be paid for at 2 & 2 months, & consequently C. was not bound by it (PARKE, J.).—HORSFALL v. FAUNTLEROY (1830), 10 B. & C. 755; L. & Welsb. 340; 5 Man. & Ry. K. B. 653; 8 L. J. O. S. K. B. 259; 100 E. R. 630.

Charterer's agent undertaking intermediate voyage—Authority to vary charter.]—Deft. chartered a vessel for a voyage from London to B., at which port she was addressed to A. & Co., deft.'s agents there; & by another charterparty of same date, it was agreed the ship should, after discharging her cargo at B., take in a homeward cargo, for which deft. agreed to pay freight, as to one half the cargo at £3 per ton, & as to the rest at the current rate of freight when the ship should be loading. In this latter charterparty, there was also a stipulation that the master of the vessel (a part owner) & A. & Co. were at liberty to make such alterations in the charterparty as they might mutually think proper, without prejudice to that agreement. Soon after arrival of the ship at B., the master & A. & Co. entered into a written agreement (which was indorsed on the second charterparty) that the ship might proceed to A. with Govt. coals & stores (her outward cargo) & return to B. with all possible despatch, without prejudice to the charterparty. She sailed to A. & there discharged her cargo, & returned to B. The owners received a large sum as freight for this voyage to A.:—Held: (1) deft. was bound by the alteration made in the charterparty as to land allotment. Deft. pleaded that C. had no authority to enter into the contract, & that he was an agent with a special limited authority, known to pltf.:—Held: pltf. could not succeed unless he showed the authority had been strictly complied with. An act of a Govt. officer does not bind the Govt., unless strictly in compliance with his authority.—RUNDLE v. SECRETARY OF STATE (1864), 2 Hyde, 25, 36.—IND.

h. Broker's clerk signing bought & sold notes—Previous instances.]—A broker who three times within three years delivers bought & sold notes to his client, signed by one of his employees for him, thereby gives reasonable cause for the belief that such employee is his agent for that purpose, & is liable upon an irregular & false bought & sold note signed in same manner.—BOLTON v. MACDOUGALL (1911), 20 Que. K. B. 544.—CAN.

i. Debtor signing release on behalf of creditor—Authority by telegram.]—To a claim on an account stated deft. pleaded release by deed. Deft. executed an assignment for the benefit of creditors, of whom pltf. was one. Deft. was authorised by telegram to sign the deed for him. With knowledge of the assignment pltf. continued to supply deft. with goods. Pltf. subsequently wrote expressing his confidence that deft. would protect him. The deed, which deft. relied on as a release, was dated Oct., 1881, & in 1885 deft. wrote expressing the hope to pay pltf. in full:—Held: the execution of the deed by deft. on pltf.'s behalf was without sufficient authority, & pltf. was not bound by the release therein, & never having ratified or adopted it, was not estopped from denying he had executed it. Geere v. Mare (1883), 2 H. & C. 339; McKeown v. Sanderson (1873), L. R. 15 Eq. 229, at p. 234, refd.—LAWRENCE

The railway company acted as bankers for the contractors, & paid the wages of the workmen, cost of transport, etc.:—Held: the co. were the real principals, & they had given pltf. reasonable cause for believing that the contractors were their agents, & the co. were liable for a breach of the contract.—LAPOINTE v. CANADIAN PACIFIC RY. CO. (1883), 7 L. N. 29 C. C.—CAN.

f. Logging superintendent contracting for indefinite time—Authority to contract for specified time.]—The general manager of a lumber co. gave written instructions to a logging superintendent to make contracts for the season of 1912, but the superintendent contracted with pltf. for about three years. Pltf. worked under the contract for three & one-half months, when the co. discharged him. In an action for damages for being denied the right to complete his contract:—Held: the instructions received by the superintendent from the general manager did not authorise the contract made with pltf.—HEIDICAN v. CROW'S NEST PASS LUMBER CO., LTD. (1913), 19 B. C. R. 416; 28 W. L. R. 37.—CAN.

403. Consignee varying master of ship's instructions.]—Deft. chartered pltf.'s ship for the purpose of proceeding to L. & C. An order having been made forbidding vessels to go there, the consignee of the cargo directed the master to dispose of the cargo in a certain manner, whereby the ship was delayed for 75 days. On a claim for demurrage:—Held: the consignee had no authority from deft. to vary the contract.—STRINGER v. GIMMELL (1843), 1 L. T. O. S. 259.

404. Clerk binding principal to execute orders—Authority to obtain orders to be executed or not at option of principal.]—The fact of a principal's allowing an agent to obtain orders for him which he may or may not execute, as he thinks fit—this being well known to the person giving the orders—does not afford any evidence from which the inference of fact can reasonably be drawn that the principal holds out the agent either as having authority to bind him by contracts or as representing that he, the principal, will execute the orders brought to him by the agent.

Defts., a firm of stockbrokers, had in their employ a clerk, to whom they allowed commission upon orders introduced by him to them & accepted by them, but who was not authorised himself to accept orders on their behalf. On three occasions pltf. gave orders to the clerk for purchase of shares by defts. on pltf.'s behalf, which orders were transmitted by the clerk to defts., who executed them, & sent to pltf. bought notes in respect of shares so purchased. No intimation was given by defts. to pltf. that they accepted the orders prior to their execution by defts. In payment of the price of the first two lots of shares purchased pltf. drew a cheque payable to defts.' order which he gave to the clerk, who delivered it to defts. The third lot of shares was paid for by pltf. in a similar manner, with the exception that the cheque was drawn to the order of the clerk. Defts. received the cheques & credited pltf. with the amount of them. Orders for the purchase of other shares by defts. were subsequently given by pltf. to the clerk, who did not transmit them to defts., but made out & handed to pltf. bought notes purporting to show purchases of shares in pursuance of the orders & to be signed by defts., which were forgeries. Pltf. gave him cheques for the supposed prices of the shares, which he misapplied to his own use:—Held: (1) there was no evidence for a jury of a holding out by defts. to pltf. of the clerk as authorised to enter into contracts on their behalf; (2) defts. were not liable in respect of the orders subsequent to the first three.—SPOONER v. BROWNING, [1898] 1 Q. B. 528; 67 L. J. Q. B. 339; 78 L. T. 98; 46 W. R. 369; 14 T. L. R. 245, C. A.

406. Insurance agent varying conditions of insurance—Usual authority as such.]—The agent of an insurance co. obtained from pltf. a proposal for insurance against accident. The proposal form stated that the proposed insurance was not to be binding on the co. until a policy should be issued in respect thereof. Pltf. paid the first year's premium to the agent & received a receipt upon which was printed "Held covered for 14 days from date hereof, subject to conditions of the policy, unless the proposal be previously declined." There was evidence that the agent told pltf. he would be insured right away, & if he did not hear within 14 days he might treat himself as insured. After expiration of 14 days pltf. was injured by an accident. The proposal was, in fact, declined by the co., but no notice of the refusal was sent to pltf.:—Held: (1) the agent had no authority to make the statements to pltf.; (2) pltf. was not insured at the time of the accident.—LEVY v. SCOTTISH EMPLOYERS' INSURANCE CO. (1901), 17 T. L. R. 229.

407. Marine Board acting on behalf of Government—Contract signed by secretary.]—S., master of one of the East India Co.'s ships, was directed by the Govt. Board to place himself under orders of the Marine Board. The Marine Board entered into a treaty with him for the sale to him of a quantity of cotton, the property of the Govt. Board; he made a proposal to the Marine Board for the purchase of it, which proposal was communicated by the Marine Board, through its secretary, to the Govt. Board; the Govt. Board, by a letter of its secretary to the Marine Board, accepted the proposal with this additional term, that the cotton might occupy the tonnage of the ship, or such part of it as S. might please, "he holding himself subject to the payment of such freight as the Honourable Co. shall see fit to demand, for which he must be required to enter into a sufficient agreement." This was communicated to S. by the secretary of the Marine Board, when S. immediately objected to this latter term, & said he would not take the cotton if he was to pay any freight for it. Some days then elapsed, when a bond was presented to him for execution, binding him, amongst other things, to pay freight for the cotton according to the letter of the Govt. Board. He objected to sign this, although the secretary of the Marine Board told him the clause as to freight was inserted as a matter of form only, & it would not be enforced against him, stating also he should have an official letter to that effect. The Marine Board, by its secretary, wrote a letter, inclosing the bond for execution, & containing the following sentence: "You will be allowed the usual privilege tonnage, & no freight will be charged on the cotton purchased by you from the Govt., as it will be laden in a portion of the Honourable Co.'s three-fifths, nearly the whole of which is unoccupied." S. executed the bond:—Held: (1) S. was justified in presuming the Marine Board had the authority of the Govt. Board for writing that letter, & in considering himself safe from the legal effect of the bond; (2) the bond should be controlled by that letter.—SMITH v. EAST INDIA CO. (1848), 10 Sim. 76; 17 L. borrower failing, the scrivener arranged a composition at a rate higher than that paid to other creditors, & said that his clients would be governed by him. They refused to take the composition & sued on the bonds:—Held: the borrower was liable to the clients for the balance due on the bonds with a right of indemnity against the scrivener.—PARROT v. WELLS (1890), 2 Vern. 127; 23 E. R. 691.

409. Secretary of company imposing conditions as to application for shares—Authority to accept application.]—If a person to whom a proposal is made returns an answer by the hand of an agent, & the agent in that answer embodies, whether with or without authority, certain things accompanying the acceptance not warranted by the original proposal, that which the agent has done cannot be repudiated by the principal.

To an application for shares in a co. the secretary answered the shares had been allotted to the applicant, & he must sign the memorandum & articles of assocn., or else the shares & deposit would be forfeited. He did not comply with the condition, but was placed upon the register:—Held: (1) this was not a simple acceptance of the offer to take shares; (2) a bill by the co. to compel applicant to take the shares & pay the calls on them was demurrable.—ORIENTAL INLAND STEAM CO., LTD. v. BRIGGS (1861), 4 De G. F. & J. 191; 31 L. J. Ch. 241; 5 L. T. 477; 10 W. R. 125; 45 E. R. 1157.

410. Ship's agent making salvage agreement with master—Power to act only as agent for ship.]—A large s.s. belonging to defts., laden with sugar from J. to P. for orders, was coaled at C. by pltf's., who acted in the usual way as ship's agents. A few days afterwards the vessel grounded on G. Island in the Maldives & remained fast. Her master sent the chief officer back to C. with a letter to pltf's. acquainting them with the situation, telling them that he wanted a powerful tug, & that they were to draw on defts. for disbursements. He also suggested that a contract for a salvage boat "no cure, no pay," might be advisable. Pltf's., finding that the latter proposition was impracticable, engaged a Govt. tug at a rate working out at about £60 per day, & making themselves personally liable for the payment of the hire, insured the tug for a limited period. The tug proceeded to the vessel with a representative of pltf's. on board. The master, doubting whether his vessel could be got off, declined to accept the services of the tug except on a "no cure, no pay" agreement, & after some discussion with pltf's. representative as to terms, the master signed a letter agreeing on behalf of defts. to pay pltf's. £4,000 if the vessel was successfully floated. The tug then made fast, & in the course of the next day's towage, the vessel came off. Pltf's. claimed £4,000:—Held: pltf's. could not be allowed to ratify the act of their representative, as, in the circumstances, the substituted agreement, insisted upon by the master & assented to by their representative, by which they were constituted salvors, was unreasonable, & pltf's. must be deemed, not only when engaging the tug, but throughout the operations, to have acted as agents of the ship. In that capacity they were only entitled to recover by personal action repayment of their disbursements, together with the

411. Steward making contract with tenants—Usual authority as such.]—A steward has a general authority to make contracts with the tenants, etc., but this will not bind the lord without his consent & approbation, or unless part of the bargain is actually executed.—ANON. (1717), 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 55; 5 Vin. Abr. 522, pl. 35; 22 E. R. 48.

412. Surveyor accepting lowest tender—Authority to receive tenders.]—Defts. requested pltf. & other persons desirous of tendering for certain work to be done to their premises at A. to deliver their tenders at A. at a certain time on a certain day. Pltf. & others delivered their tenders at the time & place fixed to a surveyor whom they found there appointed to receive the tenders. The surveyor opened the tenders, said that pltf.'s was the lowest, & although it was higher than he had expected, the work was his. Thereupon pltf., as was usual for a person whose tender was accepted, paid for refreshment for the persons whose tenders had not been accepted. He proposed to perform his contract, but after part performance was not permitted to proceed. Pltf. sued defts. for the work done, & at the trial proved the facts already stated, & gave evidence that it was the practice of the trade to accept the lowest tender. On the other hand, it was shown that the surveyor had not had authority to accept the lowest tender, & evidence was offered that it was not the practice of the trade to accept the lowest tender. The ct. judge held the case was not one in which a nonsuit ought to be directed, & finding that the evidence affirming the practice to accept the lowest tender preponderated over that in negation of such a practice, found a verdict for pltf. On appeal:—Held: (1) there was evidence to go to a jury; (2) the finding of the judge ought not to be disturbed.—PAULING v. PONTIFEX (1852), Saund. & M. 59; 20 L. T. O. S. 126; 16 J. P. 792; 1 W. B. Authority to receive Tender.

413. Agent—Authority to receive—Payment.]—A tender of money to an agent authorised to receive payment is a good tender to the creditor himself.—GOODLAND v. BLEWITH (1808), 1 Camp. 477.

414. ——— Particular sum.]—A. & B., legal owners of a leasehold interest in a house, claimed £37 from deft. for use & occupation. They authorised him to pay this amount to C., owner of the reversion. C. called on deft., who expressed his willingness to pay the money, though he did not make any actual tender of it, but C. refused to receive it, & demanded more. In an action for use & occupation, claiming £238, deft. paid £37 into ct.:—Held: (1) as soon as deft. expressed to the agent his readiness to pay the £37 there was a concluded agreement between him & pltf's. for that amount, & pltf's. could not recover more; (2) the agent's refusal to receive the £37 was outside his authority, which was only an authority to receive payment of the £37.—GRETTON v. MEES (1878), 7 Ch. D. 839; 38 L. T. 506; 26 W. R. 607.

415. Clerk—Authority as such—Instructions not to receive tender.]—A tender to a managing clerk, before action brought for goods sold & delivered, is good, though the clerk should have received orders not to accept it.—MUFFATT (MOFFAT) v. PARSONS (1814), 1 Marsh. 55; 5 Taunt. 307; 128 E. R. 707.

410 I. Ship's agent hiring barge for salvage purposes—Holding out.]—Deft. authorised R. to act as agent for a ship under the master's instructions. The ship being stranded R. applied for a

Govt. barge, which was hired to assist in floating her, & owing to the negligence of the captain, the barge was lost. Deft. knew of the application for the barge, but did not stop the negotiation:—

Held: the agent had authority under the captain's instructions to hire the barge, & deft. was personally liable.—A. G. v. CHARNOCK (1889), 17 S. A. R. 1. —AUS.

416. — Disclaimers by clerk.]—A tender made to the managing clerk of pltf.'s attorney who at the time disclaims authority from his master to receive the debt, is insufficient.—BINGHAM v. ALLPORT (1833), 1 Nev. & M. 398; 2 L. J. Q. B. 86.

417. — Money payable as a composition on a sum due to a solr. for costs was tendered to a clerk in his office, who, saying the solr. was out, & he, the clerk, had "no instructions," refused the money :—Held : (1) the clerk's statement did not amount to a disclaimer of his authority to receive the money—as he was apparently conducting his master's business in the office, such authority might be implied—and the tender was good (LORD COLERIDGE, C.J.) ; (2) the statement was in effect a disclaimer of authority, & the tender was bad (DENMAN, J.).—*FINCH v. 418. — Demand by principal for money to be paid.]—If an attorney send a letter to demand payment & the debtor make a tender to him, that is a good tender, unless the attorney disclaims his authority at the time; & if the attorney be absent he is bound by the acts of those whom he allows to represent him at his office. Therefore, after such a letter being sent, a tender to the clerk of the attorney at his office (the attorney being absent) is good.—WILMOT (WILMOTT) v. SMITH (1828), 3 C. & P. 453; Mood. & M. 238.

Annotation :—Refd. Pennell v. Stephens (1849), 7 C. B. 987.

419. — Demand by principal for money to be paid at his office.]—Where a person demands payment of money at his office, such demand amounts to special authority for his clerk there to receive it; in his absence a tender to the clerk is a good tender, although he states he is not authorised to receive the money.

Pltf.'s attorney, before bringing the action, wrote to deft. that unless the debt, together with his (the attorney's) charge for that letter, were paid at his office on the Wednesday following, at 12 o'clock, proceedings would be commenced. On Wednesday, at 10 o'clock, an agent of deft. went to the attorney's office, & there saw a boy, to whom he tendered the amount of the debt only. The boy, after referring to the letter-book, refused to accept it, unless the charge for the letter were also paid. It appeared the writ was issued at 11 o'clock on that day :—Held (PARKE, B. dubitante) : a good tender.—*KIRTON (KINTON) v. 420. — Demand by principal for money to be paid to him.]—A., pltf.'s attorney, wrote to deft., stating that a debt due from deft. to pltf. "must be paid to me" on the next day. A tender was made on the next day to a writing clerk of A. in A.'s office, who said he could not take the money, as A. was out, & the person must wait till he came :—Held : not a good tender, as not being made to a person authorised to receive the money; but if A.'s letter had asked for payment "at my office," a tender to any person in the office carrying on business there would have been sufficient.—WATSON v. HETHERINGTON (1813), 1 Car. & Kir. 36.

421. Servant—Ordinary duties of every-day life.]—Tender to a servant may be sufficient. In the common transactions of life, this kind of intercourse, by the intervention of servants, must be allowed, & if money was so brought to pltf.'s house & delivered to his servant, who retired, & appeared to go to the master, it was evidence to be left to the jury, from which they might infer a tender was made (LORD KENYON, C.J.).—ANON. (1795), 1 Esp. 349.

423. Agent—Authority to let for special purpose.]—On a bill for specific performance of an agreement by which A., as agent for B., contracted to let to C. a piece of ground for a term of years at a yearly rent, it appearing from the evidence that B. intended to let the ground for the building of houses of a particular class, & that if he had authorised A. to act as agent in the letting of the ground, which was disputed, he had told him the purposes for which it was to be let :—Held : (1) as the agreement did not contain any reference to building, nor any covenant to build, it was not in the circumstances such an agreement as ought to be performed; (2) decree for specific performance refused.—HELISHAM v. LANGLEY (1841), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 175; 11 L. J. Ch. 17; 62 E. R. 842.

from the lessor the expenses of any litigation with third parties respecting the land leased. MOOKTA SOONDEREE DABEE* (1867), 7 W. R. 419.—IND.

423 iii. — Express authority to let subject to conditions.—Lease granted on other terms.—Mala fides.]—S. & L. were authorised by pltf. to let land to a tenant "who would be able to do it justice," such tenant not to have power to sublet. They obtained an offer rity entitled him to let a lay to co-defts. to do representation work, but, the moment they continued working the claim after sufficient money had been raised to pay for such work & the renewal of claims, they were trespassers, & pltf. was entitled to the surplus.—*Leeds (Duke) v. agent to let lands is bound to let them to the best advantage; but, upon the mere ground of under-value, a bona fide letting, which would be binding on the principal himself, will be equally binding on him when he acts through an agent, if that agent has acted fairly & honestly. 426. Estate & house agent—Authority as such.]—Estate agents as such have no general authority to enter into contracts for their employers. Their business is to find offers & submit them to their employers for acceptance. If any authority to enter into contracts is given in any case it must be proved, & cannot be inferred from the relations existing between the parties.

Deft. instructed G. & B., house agents, that he would be willing to let his flat for a term at £195 per annum. G. & B. wrote to plff. purporting to confirm a conversation for a lease on the terms named & asking for references. References were not forthcoming, & deft. let the flat to another party:—Held: G. & B. had no authority to enter into a binding contract for a lease of the flat.—THUMAN v. BEST (1907), 97 L. T. 239.

427. Land agent & steward—Authority as such.]—The owner of an estate, in answer to an inquiry from an intending lessee, said, "A. B. manages all my affairs & you are to treat with him":—Semble: this did not imply that A. B. had authority to enter into a binding agreement for a lease.—RIDGWAY v. WHARTON (1857), 6 H. L. 428. — Special limitation.]—A steward has no general authority to enter into contracts for granting leases of farms for a term of years; & where a steward & land agent, whose powers were specially limited, had, in the name of the owner, entered into a written agreement with a farmer to grant him a lease for 12 years, but without communicating to him the fact that his power was from C. which plffs. accepted, but they concealed the fact that they held a bill of sale over C.'s effects, & this coming to the knowledge of plffs., they repudiated the agreement. Nevertheless S. & L. affixed their signatures as agents for plffs. to an agreement for a lease to C. which contained no stipulation that the tenant should not sublet, etc.:—Held: plffs. were entitled to a decree directing S., L., & C. to deliver up the agreement to be cancelled, & to cause a release to be executed; & deft. C. was not entitled to specific performance.—CALCUTT v. CAMPBELL, Mac. 1020.—N.Z.

428 i. Estate & house agent—Authority as such.]—An owner of a building who refers an intending lessee to a person as his agent for leasing is bound by any representation made in connection with the leasing of the property.—TAYLOR v. REED (1878), 2 P. & B. 58.—CAN.

428 ii. — Authority to let for lives or years — Agent letting for indefinite period.]—An agent authorised to make agreements for leases for lives or years, made an agreement in which the term of the proposed lease was not mentioned:—Held: not pursuant to his authority, & not binding on his principal.—CLINAN v. COOKE (1802), 1 Sch. & L. 32.—IR.

428 iii. — Authority to receive rents.]—An agent to receive rents desired his principal to send him a power of attorney to let the estate. The principal did not object to the agent's specially limited:—Held: the agreement did not bind the owner.—COLLEN v. GARDNER (1853), 21 Beav. 540; 52 E. R. 968.

430. — Authority to let on ordinary terms & receive rents—Agent letting on unusual terms.]—Where a farm bailiff or agent was used to let farms upon the ordinary terms, & received the rents, etc.:—Held: he had no authority in law to let upon unusual terms unknown to the owner.

A. entered into a farm in Sept., 1850, on an agreement with B. on the part of C., which was in writing, to the effect that at the end of the tenancy A. should be entitled to be paid a valuation for the tenant's property in the farm & premises in accordance with the terms of the valuation he should be subject to on entry. He paid the amount of the valuation to the outgoing tenant in the usual way. He had done repairs to the farm buildings & made substantial improvements in the way of constructing roads, erecting walls, roofing outhouses, etc., consulting B. as to all of them. In Dec., 1858, he received notice to quit. He saw B., who consented to enter into a second agreement embodying the first, & setting forth that B., acting as agent of C., did thereby agree with A. that he was to allow to A. a full & fair compensation for his repairs & improvements on the farm & premises during his tenancy, & also the amount of the valuation of the tenant's property, in accordance with the terms of the valuation which A. had paid on entering, the amount of such valuation to be settled by valuers to be chosen by each party respectively, & the amount to be paid to A. before he was required to give up possession; this agreement was drawn up & signed by B. on the part of deft. B. was a kind of farm bailiff, who allotted timber to tenants for repairs, sold the produce of the farm & let tenants in, on the ordinary terms of tenancies from year to year, & also received rents. Deft. had not appointed any valuer, nor had he been made aware of the agreement entered into by B.:—Held: it was a question of fact for the jury whether B. had express authority or had been held out by deft. as having authority to enter into such an agreement, or whether B. had only authority to let in tenants on the ordinary terms.—TURNER v. HUTCHINSON (1860), 2 F. & F. 185; (1861), 3 L. T. 815; 25 J. P. 149.

Pltf. refused that offer, & his goods were sold. In an action for selling after a tender of the rent, the jury found R. had no authority in fact to receive the rent; that W. had such authority; & that at the time when the tender was made W. was within a reasonable

Before expiration of the term the co. assigned it to five trustees as security in part for a guarantee fund to certain shareholders. The freehold reversion in the demised property at expiration of the lease was vested as to one moiety in three trustees, of whom S. was one, & as to the other moiety in S. for life, with remainder to his wife for life, with remainder to the three trustees. The day before the lease above mentioned would expire H., the secretary to both the insurance co. & the trustees of the guarantee fund, gave notice by letter to S., on behalf of both the co. & the trustees, of their desire to have a renewal of the lease; for this, however, he had only informal instructions. In an action by the trustees of the fund for specific performance of the covenant to renew:—Held: (1) it was a condition precedent that notice should be given of intention to renew before expiration of the term; (2) H. being secretary to both the co. & the trustees, it mattered not on whose behalf instructions were given; (3) it was his duty, although his instructions were informal, to give notice of renewal; (4) the notice given by H. to S. alone was sufficient.—*NICHOLSON v. The contract was—"all rent due to Lady-day being paid, possession to be given immediately." B. let pltf. into possession before any assignment was executed, & the landlord, in July, put in a distress for rent due up to Lady-day, which pltf. paid. An action having been brought by A. against pltf. for the price, & deft. having had notice of same, pltf. compromised such action by returning the goods, & paying a sum of money in discharge of debt & costs:—Held: pltf. had authority from deft. to compromise such action.—*PETTMAN v. Agent contesting adjudication in bankruptcy—Authority to act generally in principal's absence.]—Where a person on leaving England has authorised another, either in writing or verbally, to act for him generally in his absence, the latter has authority to instruct a solr. to appear on behalf of the former to show cause against an adjudication of bkpcy. against him.—Re FRAMPTON, Ex p. 463. EWINGTON (1835), 4 Dowl. 453; 1 Gale, 357; Tyr. & Gr. 29.

464. Bank manager instituting prosecution—General authority as such.]—In an action for malicious prosecution against an incorporated banking co. the jury found that same had been authorised on behalf of the bank by W., the acting manager, & they were directed by the judge that it was to be inferred from W.'s position as manager that he had sufficient power in the circumstances to direct a prosecution:—Held: (1) assuming the prosecution to have been authorised by W., the direction to the jury to the effect that it was to be inferred from W.'s position that he had authority to direct the prosecution was on the evidence incorrect; (2) there must be a new trial.

The arrest, & still less the prosecution of offenders, is not within the ordinary routine of banking business, & not within the ordinary scope of a bank manager's authority. Evidence is required to show that such arrest or prosecution is within the scope of the duties & class of acts such manager is authorised to perform. That authority may be general, or it may be special & derived from the exigency of the particular occasion on which it is exercised. In the former case it is enough to show commonly that the agent was acting in what he did on behalf of the principal; but in the latter case evidence must be given of a state of facts which shows that such exigency is present, or from which it might reasonably be supposed to be present.—BANK OF NEW SOUTH WALES v. OWSTON (1879), 4 App. Cas. 270; 48 L. J. P. C. 25; 40 L. T. 500; 43 J. P. 478; 14 Cox, C. C. 267, P. C.

Bank manager instituting prosecution—General authority as such.]—The agent in charge of defts.' bank laid an information against pltf., who was arrested for obtaining discount of notes under false pretences, & on the hearing discharged. Though the agent could have consulted the head office by telegraph before the warrant was taken out, he never reported the matter, & never received any instructions. In an action for malicious prosecution against the bank:—Held: (1) there was no presumption that the agent had a general authority to prosecute on behalf of the bank; (2) there was no evidence that such prosecution was within scope of the duties & class of acts he was authorised to perform; (3) the facts did not show an emergency which would give an implied authority.—*THOMPSON v. Clerk to local authority instituting proceedings—General authority as such.]—By Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 89), s. 35, incorporated in Lynn Improvement Act, 1859, certain penalties were inflicted on persons keeping any house of public resort who knowingly suffered common prostitutes to assemble there. Bys. 120 of the latter Act, these penalties were directed to be paid in some cases to the paving comrs., & in others to the corpn. The paving comrs. had given public notice of their intention to enforce these penalties; & resp., their clerk, took proceedings against applt. under the above sect. of the general Act. For this he had no particular authority, either express or implied:—Held: (1) independently of any authority from the comrs., resp. could lay an information under s. 35 of the general Act so long as he claimed the penalty on behalf of either of the bodies mentioned in s. 120 of the later Act (COCKBURN, C.J.); (2) there was evidence of a general authority to proceed on behalf of the comrs., & for this purpose a general authority was sufficient (CROMPTON, J.).—*COLE v. latter shipped a piano to F., authorising the railway co. to deliver it to him on his paying freight. F. acknowledged receipt of the piano, & shipped it to himself at T. under an assumed name. Having paid the freight out of advances obtained at T., he removed the piano & pledged it with D. in return for a loan out of which to pay off the above advances. Pltfs. having brought an action of replevin against D.:—Held: F. was not an "agent intrusted with the possession of goods" under Factors Act, R. S. The wharfinger was in the habit of doing business as a flour factor:—Held: the Act of 1825, s. 4, which protected purchases made innocently & in the ordinary course of business from agents intrusted with goods, did not apply, the wharfinger not being an agent within the Act.—*MONK v. x. R. S. Ont., 1897, c. 150—Agent obtaining goods without authority.—A limited meaning is given to the word "agent" in R. S. O., 1897, c. 150. The agent must be one who is intrusted with the possession as agent in a mercantile transaction for the sale or for an object connected with the sale of the property.

Lumber was shipped by plff. to himself with the understanding that F. was to load on cars for C. & S., the prospective buyers. Before arrival of the vessel C. & S. informed plff. that they would not purchase it, & plff. notified F. not to load it on the cars. F. prevailed on the captain to take payment of the unpaid balance of the freight from him & so obtained possession of the lumber, which he sold to deft. F. advised plff. of the sale, stating that he expected the money would be sent in a few days, but plff. did nothing at the time, & his inaction led to deft., in ignorance of the real state of affairs, making the payment:—Held: F. had no title to the lumber & no right to sell it under the above Act, & deft. must make good plff.'s loss, but, in view of plff.'s own inaction, when he might have warned deft., without costs. Fuentes v. Montis (1868), L. R. 3 C. P. 278, L. R. 4 C. P. 96; Phillips v. Iluth (1840), 6 M. & W. 572; Hatfield v. Phillips (1845), 12 Cl. & Fin. 360; Johnson v. Crédit Lyonnais Co. (1877), 3 C. P. y. Factors Act, C. S. C., c. 59—Agent intrusted with goods—Authority to sell.—C., lessee of a coal yard, assigned the property to S. & H., who agreed to receive as warehousemen therein such coal as C. might deposit, & grant him warehouse receipts therefor. It was expressly agreed between them that all coal taken out for which receipts had been given should be replaced with other coal. C. having become insolvent, a question arose as to between his assignee & the receipt-holders &

R. as to the right to the coal in the yard, some of it having been sent to C. by R., to sell for him on commission, after the receipts had been given, & were outstanding:—Held: (1) C. could not, under the above Act, pledge this coal for the payment of the receipt-holders; (2) R. was entitled before them to so much of his coal as remained unsold.—Re COLEMAN (1875), 36 U. a. Mercantile Agents Act, 1908—Agent intrusted with goods—Authority to do work thereon.—A dairy co. received butter fat to be manufactured into butter & cheese from suppliers who were consulted as to its disposal, & between whom the proceeds were divided after the co. had deducted cost of manufacture. To secure advances made by a bank the co. gave a debenture charging all its assets, & further its overdrafts were guaranteed by deft. The bank received bills of lading for shipments, & on receipt of invoices signed by the co. discounted them as drafts on the co.'s brokers, who had opened a credit with the bank. The guarantors having paid off the co.'s indebtedness, received from the bank a transfer of the debenture & also some bills of lading. On insolvency of the co. plff. on behalf of himself & other suppliers sued for proceeds of butter seized by deft.:—Held: the co. was not a mercantile agent within the above Act. Brandao

469. —Agent intrusted with goods—Authority to see work done thereon & deliver same to purchaser—Sale to other parties.—Plffs., cloth manufacturers, were applied to by E., a factor & commission agent, for a sample of their cloths, on the representation that he could get them a purchaser. The sample having been sent, E. told plffs. he had got them an order for a certain number of ends at a stated price. Plffs. required to know the firm, & S. being mentioned, they sent the goods to the warehouse of E., who was to pass them on to S., after seeing the process of perching performed upon them, for which he was to receive commission from plffs. of 1s. per end. E. had no authority from S., & sold the goods to defts., cloth merchants, who bought them bona fide:—Held: (1) E. was an agent "intrusted" with the cloths within the Acts of 1825 & 1842, s. 4, & the purchase of them from E. by defts. was protected (WIGHTMAN & CROMPTON, JJ.); (2) E. being in possession of the goods, he was, according to s. 4 of the latter Act, to be taken to be "intrusted" with them by the owner, unless the contrary was shown, & that was a question for the jury (BLACKBURN, J.).—*BAINES v. B., a leather merchant in London, agreed to pay C., a tanner in Canada, 1½d. per pound for every hide tanned by C. in the mode of the country, & C. was to procure freight & send back the hides. B. sent out a large number of the hides, they were tanned, & freight was procured for them, but, in the meantime, C. had obtained from bankers advances on his own account on bills, & hypothecated the hides to the bankers, as security for such advances, engaging to hand over to them the bills of lading if his bills of exchange were not duly honoured. They were not duly honoured, & the bankers (who had acted in entire ignorance of the transactions between B. & C.) claimed to retain the bills of lading & the hides until their demands were satisfied:—Held: (1) in the circumstances C. could not, under any law, English or Canadian, claim to be a factor or agent of B. entitled to pledge B.'s goods; (2) the bankers could not set up any title to the goods, as derived from him, against the real owners.—*CRTY BANK v. 471. — Agent in possession of goods previously sold by him—Authority to distribute amongst purchasers & take further orders.]—Pltfs., silk manufacturers in Germany, appointed (inter alios) F. to act as their agent in London. The course of business was as follows. It was F.'s duty to call upon certain named customers of pltfs. & get orders for silks. These orders he then transmitted to pltfs., giving a list of the buyers, & of the quantities ordered by each buyer. The goods ordered were then sent over together from Germany to F., whose duty it then was to forward to each buyer the amount purchased by him. It did not appear that F., in the usual course of business, was allowed to represent himself to buyers as principal in the transactions. F., in the course of the business, from time to time collected the money due from the customers, & accepted the bills drawn upon him by pltfs. for the amount of the invoices of goods sent to him from Germany. F. pledged some of the goods so sent over to him with defts. for advances. The pledging was in fraud of his instructions, but defts. in making the advances acted bond fide, & without knowledge of the fraud. In an action brought to recover the goods so pledged, or their value:—Held: (1) F. was not an agent intrusted with the possession of the goods within the Acts of 1823, 1825, & 1842; (2) he was, in the first portion of his duty, merely an agent to make contracts, & in the second portion merely a forwarding agent.—*HELLINGS v. 472. — Commission agent intrusted with pictures—Authority to sell—Pledging pictures.]—A., who performed business for two insurance companies, & also other business on commission, but did not ordinarily sell on commission, was intrusted by deft. with some pictures. Then or afterwards A. was directed by deft. to sell the pictures, instead of which A., in fraud of deft., pledged them to pltf.:—Held: (1) A. was an agent within the Act of 1842, s. 1; (2) pltf. had a right to detain the pictures until his advance was repaid.—*HAYMAN v. 474. — Person intrusted with bill of lading—Authority to sell—Pledging dock warrants.]—A party intrusted with the bill of lading for the purpose of selling the goods mentioned in it is not, in consequence, to be considered as intrusted with the dock warrant, notwithstanding his possession of the bill of lading, & the goods under it, enables him to obtain the dock warrant.

A., residing abroad, being the owner of goods, consigned them by a bill of lading, making them deliverable in London to the consignee or his assigns; & having indorsed the bill of lading in blank, transmitted it to his factor, with instructions to receive & sell the goods. The factor received them, entered them in his own name at the custom-house, & obtained, without the privity or express consent of the owner, a dock warrant in his own name, it being the usage at the docks to give such document to the person in whose name they were entered, & pledged such dock warrant for advances beyond the charges for which the factor had a lien:—Held: in these circumstances, the factor was not intrusted with a dock warrant, within the Act of 1825, s. 2.—*HATFIELD v. See, now, Act of 1877.

477. — Warehouseman holding goods as such—Accustomed to act as broker on particular occasions on special instructions.—A warehouse-keeper who has goods deposited with him as such is not "an agent intrusted with possession" of them within the Act of 1842, although he be also a broker, & be usually employed to sell the goods, but always upon specific instructions for that purpose received from the principal.

S. carried on the business of a sheep's wool broker in Liverpool, & also that of a warehouse-keeper. In his capacity of warehouse-keeper he was in the habit of receiving from plffs., merchants in London, bills of lading for sheep's wool & goats' wool to arrive in Liverpool, which when landed was deposited in his warehouse, under directions to send plffs. a report & valuation, but he was not authorised to sell without specific instructions. The sheep's wool so deposited with him was usually sold by S. & the proceeds received by him for plffs. The goats' wool S. never sold, not being a goats' wool broker. Having wools of plffs. of both descriptions in his warehouse, but not having any instructions for the sale of either, S. professed to pledge the whole with defts., bankers in Liverpool, by a letter in which he undertook to hold it as trustee for defts. to secure the sum advanced:—Held: S. was not, as to any of the wools so agreed to be pledged, "an agent intrusted with possession" within the Act.

The intention of the Act was that where a third person has intrusted goods or the documents of title to goods to an agent who in course of such agency sells or pledges them, he should be deemed by that act to have misled anyone who bona fide deals with the agent & makes a purchase from or an advance to him without notice that he was not authorised to sell the goods or to procure the advance (BLACKBURN, J.).

The Act was meant to apply to those cases where one person has given an apparent authority to another, & a third person has dealt with that other in the belief that authority really existed (BRAMWELL, B.).—COLE v. NORTH WESTERN BANK (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 354; 44 L. J. C. P. 233; 32 L. T. 733, Ex. Ch.

It is sufficient to say briefly that the decision in Cole v. North Western Bank comes to this: that an agent who can pledge or sell must be an agent of that class which, like factors, has a business which when carried to its legitimate result would properly end in selling or in receiving payment for goods. If such a person is interested in that capacity, then in the absence of bad faith on the part of the pledgee the pledge is good (BLACKBURN, J.). Consd. Oppenheimer v. Frazar & Wyatt, [1907] 1 K. 478. Acts of 1842-1847—Apparent owner of furniture—Authority as such.—The Act of 1842 applies to mercantile transactions, & not to the case of advances made upon security of furniture used in a furnished house—not in any way of trade—to the apparent owner of such furniture, afterwards appearing to be the agent intrusted with custody of the furniture by the true owner. Such "agent" is not an agent, nor is such furniture "goods & merchandise" within the Act.—WOOD v. ROWCLIFFE (ROECLIFFE) (1846), 6 Hare, 183; 11 Jur. 707; affd. on another point, 2 Ph. 382.

480. — Grantor of bill of sale left in possession—Authority to carry on business.—The grantor of a bill of sale of stock in trade left in possession by the grantee for the purpose of carrying on the business is not a mercantile agent within s. 2 of the Act.—JOSEPH v. WEBB, JOSEPH v. LYONS, JOSEPH v. PIDCOCK, JOSEPH v. JONES (1884), 1 Cab. & El. 262; reversd. on another point, 15 Q. B. D. 280, C. A.

481. Act of 1889—Agent intrusted with samples—Authority to obtain orders.—An agent employed to obtain orders for furniture, but not to sell, was intrusted with certain furniture to be kept in a showroom for the purpose of being shown to customers. This furniture the agent pledged:—Held: (1) he was not an agent intrusted with possession of goods for sale within the Act; (2) the pledge was invalid.—BROWN & CO. v. BEDFORD L'ANTECHNICON CO., LTD. (1889), 5 T. L. R. 449, C. A.

482. — Agent intrusted with jewellery—Agreement not to deliver without special authority.—Plffs., dealers in precious stones, carrying on business in Paris, handed certain pearls to A. in Paris in consequence of a statement made by him to them that he knew of a special merchant likely to give a good price for them. A. signed the following receipt: "Intrusted by J. & Co., the following goods to be sold for cash, which I promise to return on the first demand, & not to give them to anyone without their written authority. . . . In case of loss I will repay the full value of the goods. The house reserve to themselves the right of delivering the goods." A. pawned the goods at a Govt. pawnbroking establishment, & subsequently pledged them with M., deft.'s representative in Paris, who sent them to deft. in London. Plffs. brought an action to recover the pearls or their value from deft., in the course of which BRAY, J. found (a) A. from the outset of the transaction intended to misappropriate the pearls; (b) M. had not acted in good faith:—Held: (1) M. was either agent of deft. or a joint speculator with him, & was not a mercantile agent within Factors Acts, & had not acted in good faith; (2) plffs. were entitled to recover.—MEHTA v. SUTTON (1913), 109 L. T. 529; 58 Sol. Jo. 29; 30 T. L. R. 17, C. A.

483. — Agent intrusted with pictures—Authority to sell some & exhibit others—Pledge of whole after revocation of authority.—A French co. sent to their London agents certain pictures, some being for exhibition only & others for sale, but they were to remain the property of the French co. until sold. The co. subsequently revoked their agents' authority, & after the revocation one of the agents pledged the pictures to a person who took them in good faith without notice of any fraud:—Held: the pledgee obtained a good title to the goods under s. 2 (2) of the Act, as that enactment applied to all goods in the custody of an agent whether they were

484. — Clerk having dock warrant in own name—Authority to pledge for business purposes—Pawning warrants.]—The Factors Acts do not apply to the case of master & servant.

Where a wine merchant gave authority to his clerk to sign delivery orders in his master's name, & receive dock warrants in his own, which he authorised him to pledge for the purposes of the master's business, the clerk having fraudulently deposited some of these dock warrants with a pawnbroker as security for money bond fide lent to him:

—Held: (1) the clerk was not an agent within the Acts; (2) the merchant was entitled to recover the dock warrants from the pawnbroker.—LAMB v. ATTENBOROUGH (1862), 1 B. & S. 831; 31 L. J. Q. B. 41; 8 Jur. N. S. 280; 10 W. R. 211; 121 R. 922.

485. — Dealer intrusted with furniture—Authority to obtain offer—Irregular sale & receipt of proceeds.]—B. intrusted a table top to G., a dealer in similar articles. It was not to be sold to any person or at any price without B.'s authorisation. If sold, the cheque was to be handed to B. intact, who was to pay a commission. G. sold the table to E. for £200 without B.'s authorisation. E. was to pay S. £170 to satisfy a judgment S. had against G., & £30 to G. E. gave S. a diamond valued between them at £120 & £50 in cash:—Held: (1) as G. was acting outside his authority in selling, E. acquired no title & B. was not estopped from disputing E.'s title; (2) as the table was never intrusted for sale & the mode of payment was not in accordance with the ordinary course of business, E. was not protected by the Act of 1825, s. 4, which was in force at the time.—BIGGS v. 486. — Dealer in pictures intrusted with painting—Deposited as substituted security for prior advance.]—In 1887 T. intrusted A. with an oil painting for sale. In the same year A., who was a dealer in drawings & etchings, & occasionally sold pictures on commission, deposited the painting with B., in substitution for certain drawings & etchings, as security for a loan. B. died. A. became insolvent. T. brought an action against B.'s exors. for recovery of the picture. The painting was sold & the proceeds paid into ct. B.'s exors. counter-claimed a charge on the fund in ct. for the amount payable in respect of the loan:—Held: (1) A. was an agent "intrusted with possession of goods" within the Act of 1842; (2) the pledge was valid; (3) the exors. were entitled to the charge claimed on the fund in ct.—TREMOILLE v. CHRISTIE (1893), 69 L. T. 338; 37 Sol. Jo. 650.

487. — Retail jeweller in possession of jewellery for sale or return—Correspondence regarding same.]—Pltf., manufacturing jeweller, was accustomed to send articles of jewellery to F., retail jeweller, for sale on terms of a letter written by F. to pltf., in which F., after acknowledging he had had from pltf. "on sale or return" goods entered up to date in a book in possession of pltf., & that he was liable to account to pltf. for such goods, continued: "The goods referred to in that book are your property, & are to remain so until sold or paid for, being only left with me for the purpose of sale or return, & not to be kept as my own stock. The goods I receive from you are to be entered at cost price, & my remuneration for selling them is agreed at one half the profit":—Held: (1) upon construction of the letter as a whole F. was employed as agent for sale; (2) he was a mercantile agent within the Act, & as such had implied authority to pledge the goods intrusted to him; (3) pltf. could not recover goods pledged by F. with debt. without express authority from pltf. Hastings, Ltd. v. B., who had no authority to pledge the goods, nevertheless pawned them with debt., a pawnbroker:—Held: the pledge was not made by B. "in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent" within s. 2 (1) of the Act, there being no evidence to show that the pledging of jewellery was a recognised business.—HASTINGS, LTD. v. PEARSON, [1893] 1 Q. B. 62; 62 L. J. Q. B. 75; 67 L. T. 553; 57 J. P. 70; 41 W. R. 127; 9 T. L. R. 18; 36 Sol. Jo. 866; 5 R. 26, C. A.

489. — Warehouseman.]—The provisions of s. 3 of the Act only apply to "mercantile agents" within that Act, which by Factors (Scotland) Act, 1890 (c. 40), is made applicable to Scotland.

Goods of a debtor were stored in a bonded warehouse. The debtor indorsed delivery orders to applt. in consideration of a loan, & a letter purporting to hypothecate part of the goods. Applt. gave no intimation of his rights to the warehouse-keeper. The seller of the goods arrested them in the hands of the warehouse-keeper, & brought an action against debtor. By arrangement the goods were sold & proceeds placed in a bank. In an action of multiple-pounding, in which applt. claimed as pledgee, & resps. as personal creditors of debtor:—Held: the property in the goods was not effectually vested in applt. as against the creditors, as the warehouse-keeper was not a "mercantile agent" in the statutory sense.—INGLIS v. ROBERTSON & BAXTER, [1898] A. C. 616; 67 L. J. P. C. 108; 79 L. T. 224; 14 T. L. R. 517, H. L.

ii. "Possession."

490. Act of 1842—Factor intrusted with bill of lading—Depositing same with broker—Subsequently pledging margin.]—A factor by pledging goods in his possession, or under his control, as agent, for an amount which does not exhaust their value, has not thereby parted with his control over the goods, so as to preclude himself from making a further pledge for the balance of their value, which shall be valid as against the principal under the Act.

Cotton was consigned for sale by A. to B. B. deposited the bill of lading with C., a broker, & authorised him to receive & sell the cotton, & made a further pledge to D. of the balance of the net proceeds of the cotton, by order in writing communicated to & assented to by C.:—Held: the pledge to D. was valid as against A. under the Act.—PORTALIS v. 491. Act of 1842—Sharebroker pledging stock certificates.—A sharebroker had, unknown to pltf., his principal, pledged certain certificates of ry. stock belonging to pltf. with deft., as security for his own private debt. The transaction was bond fide, & without any notice of ownership of the certificates on deft.'s part. In an action of detinue by pltf. against deft. for the certificates:—Held: (1) certificates of ry. stock were not "goods" within s. 1 of the Act; (2) a rule to enter a verdict for deft. on a plea raising a defence that they were "goods" within the Act must be refused.—FREEMAN v. APPEYARD (1862), 1 New Rep. 30; 32 L. J. Ex. 175; 7 L. T. 282.

iv. "Documents of Title."

492. Delivery order—Goods not specific.—A delivery order was given by defts. to F. for 2,640 bags of mowra seed, which formed part of a consignment of 6,400 bags. F. gave defts. a cheque therefor & indorsed the delivery order to pltf., who took it in good faith & for valuable consideration. F.'s cheque having been dishonoured, defts. refused to give delivery of the seed to pltf.:—Held: (1) the delivery order was a document of title to the goods which had been "transferred" by defts. to F. within the Act of 1889, s. 10, & Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (c. 71), s. 47, & having been transferred by F. to pltf., who took it in good faith & for valuable consideration, defts.' right of lien as unpaid vendors was defeated; (2) the delivery order was valid notwithstanding that it related to goods which were not specific.—ANT. JURGENS MARGARINEFABRIEKEN v. DREYFUS (LOUIS) & Co., [1914] 3 K. B. 40; 83 L. J. K. B. 1344; 111 L. T. 248; 19 Com. Cas. 333.

Act of 1825—Transfer of goods held under lien.—If A., holding B.'s goods with a lien on them against B., transfer them to C., C. cannot hold them against B. to the extent of A.'s lien under s. 5 of the Act, unless the transfer be expressly made as a pledge.—THOMPSON v. FARMER (1827), 1 Mood. & M. 48.

494. Act of 1842—Hypothecation.—A., a factor & warehouse-keeper, by letter of hypothecation pledged to B. certain wools to secure a sum of money. No delivery of the warrants for the wools was made, but a promise to deliver them on the following morning was added at the foot of the letter. After being pressed daily to deliver the warrants, A. absconded. B. obtained from A.'s clerk the keys of the warehouses & possession of the wools. A. was a few days afterwards adjudicated bkpt. The wools belonged to third parties, who had been under advances from the bkpt., & made no claim:—Held: (1) the letter created a good equitable charge; (2) it did not require registration under Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (c. 36); (3) the goods were not in the order & disposition of bkpt.; (4) the transaction was a valid pledge under Factors Act, 1842; (5) B. had a good title against the trustee in bkptey.—Re SLEE, Ex p. vi. "Consent of Owner"—"In Possession."

495. Acts of 1823—1825—Broker obtaining possession by trick—Authority to sell—Mala fides imputed to purchasers.—Where a mercantile agent in possession of goods with the owner's consent makes, without authority & in fraud of the owner, a sale of them to joint purchasers, who act as partners in the particular transaction of the purchase of them as a speculation, & one of the joint purchasers does not act in good faith, the other joint purchasers, although they personally act in good faith, are not within the protection given them by the Act of 1889, s. 2 (1).

Pltf., a diamond merchant, intrusted certain diamonds to a broker who stated he had customers for them, & mentioned two firms. The broker did not offer the diamonds to either firm, but gave them to B., asking him to sell them. B. took the diamonds to F. & W., explaining he came from a broker, & asked them to purchase them on joint account with himself. F. & W. agreed, & paid the price required by the broker, debiting B. in their books with one half thereof, & afterwards disposed of the diamonds, crediting B. with half the profits realised. In an action for conversion by pltf. against B. & F. & W., the jury found the broker obtained the diamonds from pltf. by larceny by trick; that F. & W. had acted in good faith, but B. had not:—Held: (1) for the particular purpose of purchasing the diamonds B. & F. & W. were partners; & though F. & W. had acted in good faith, B.'s want of good faith deprived them, as well as himself, of the protection of s. 2 (1) of the Act; (2) they were all jointly liable to pltf. for conversion of the diamonds.

A mercantile agent who obtains possession of goods from the owner by means of larceny by a trick is not in possession of them with the "consent" of the owner within s. 2 (1) (FLITCHER MOULTON, L.J.).—OPPENHEIMER v. FRAZER &

B. upon the delivery order indorsed a delivery order in favour of C., & obtained from him an advance on the security of the iron. C. forwarded the delivery orders to the manufacturer, & obtained from him an obligation to deliver to him, & subsequently, after B. had become bkpt., obtained delivery of the iron. In an action by A. against

C. for re-delivery of the iron:—Held: the delivery order held by B. was a document of title under Factors Act, 1842 (c. 39), & C. was entitled to retain the iron in security of the advance.—VICKERS v. REECE (1871), 9 H. II. L. 65.—SCOT.

497. — Factor consignee & indorsee of bill of lading—Goods consigned for sale—Pledge of dock warrants.]—Where a factor, the consignee of goods for sale & indorsee of bills of lading, had landed & warehoused goods & taken the wharfingers' certificates & dock warrants in his own name, & then pledged the certificates & warrants with a banking co. for an advance of money on his own account, in an action of trover by the real owner of the goods:—Held: such pledge was not protected by s. 2 of the Act of 1825.—CLOSE v. HOLMES (1837), 2 Mood. & R. 22.

Annotation:—Expld. Phillips v. Huth (1840), 10 L. J. Ex. 65.

498. — Factor indorsee of bill of lading—Authority to sell.]—In order to make the factor a party intrusted with the dock warrant within the Act of 1825, it must appear that the owner of the goods intended the factor should be possessed of it at the time of the pledge, or that he could exercise the power, which possession of the bill of lading gave him, of obtaining the dock warrant whenever he might think fit.

Pltfs., owners of a cargo of tobacco, on arrival of the vessel, placed a bill of lading—indorsed in blank—in the hands of W., as their factor, for sale. W. entered the goods at the custom-house in his own name, & before the cargo was weighed, & without pltfs.' knowledge obtained a dock warrant for it in his own name. W. had previously agreed with defts. for the advance to him (W.) of £20,000, on deposit of other dock warrants as security. Defts., thinking that security insufficient, refused to advance more than £12,000, whereupon W. pledged with them the dock warrant of pltfs.' tobacco as a security for, & obtained thereon, the remaining £8,000:—Held: (1) in these circumstances, it did not sufficiently appear that W. was intrusted with the dock warrant within s. 2 of the above Act; (2) pltfs. were entitled to recover from defts. the proceeds of the tobacco sold by defts. on W. becoming bkpt.—*PHILLIPS v. 499. — Factor obtaining bill of lading by trick.]—M., a merchant & factor of London, employed by V., a merchant in Holland, to negotiate sales as a commission agent, obtained & transmitted to V. an offer from L. & F. to purchase a quantity of oil. V. accepted the offer, & shipped a parcel of oil in pursuance of the contract, & sent the bill of lading, specially indorsed to L. & F., to M. that it might be exchanged for L. & F.'s acceptance of V.'s draft. Before this M., without any authority from V., had agreed to cancel the contract with L. & F., & when the bill of lading arrived M. procured L. & F. to indorse it in blank, & deliver it to him, by falsely representing that the special indorsement had been made by mistake. M. then caused the oil to be warehoused in his own name, & immediately pledged it to pltfs. as security for an advance of £350:—Held: the pledge was not protected by the Act of 1825.—VAUGHAN v. MOFFAT (1868), 38 L. J. Ch. 144.

Act of 1847—Agent in possession of goods after return demanded—Authority to sell revoked.]—An agent "intrusted with & in possession of goods, or of the documents of title to goods," within the Acts of 1825 & 1842, is a person who is intrusted as agent for sale; & one whose authority to sell has been revoked cannot make a valid pledge of goods which had been intrusted to him for sale, but which he has wrongfully retained after his authority has been revoked & the goods demanded from him by his principal.—FUENTES v. MONTI (1868), L. R. 4 C. P. 93; 38 L. J. C. P. 95; 19 L. T. 364; 17 W. R. 208, Ex. Ch.

vii. "Ordinary Course of Business."

501. Acts of 1825—1842—Agent—Power of attorney in non-mercantile transaction.]—The above Acts do not empower an agent acting under a power of attorney in a non-mercantile transaction to mtge. the property of the principal.—LEWIS v. RAMSDALE, No. 289, ante.

502. Act of 1889—Broker's friend pawning jewellery—Power to sell.]—Pltf., a dealer in diamonds at A., sent some diamonds to a diamond broker in London for sale. The broker, without pltf.'s authority, asked a friend to pledge the diamonds for him. The friend pledged them with defts., pawnbrokers. Defts. acted in good faith & without notice that the diamonds were pledged without the owner's authority. In an action to recover the diamonds:—Held: (1) though the broker was a mercantile agent within the Act, it was not the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent to ask a friend to pledge goods intrusted to him, but to pledge them himself; (2) defts. were not protected by s. 2 (1) of the Act.—DE GORTER v. ATTENBOROUGH & SON (1904), 21 T. L. R. 19.

503. — Broker pawning diamonds—Authority to show same with view to sale.]—Although it may not be usual in a particular trade—e.g., the diamond trade—for an agent to have authority from his principal to pledge goods, a pledge by such agent, who is in possession of goods with the owner's consent, is, when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent, valid under s. 2 of the Act, provided the pledgee takes in good faith & without notice that the pledgor had no authority to make the pledge.

Pltf., a diamond merchant, intrusted S., a diamond broker, with diamonds to show to certain persons with a view to sale. S., instead of so showing them, pledged them with defts., a firm of pawnbrokers, who took them in good faith. In an action for delivery of the diamonds evidence was given that it was no part of a diamond broker's business to pledge diamonds, & by the custom of the diamond trade (which was not notorious outside the trade) agents had no authority so to do:—Held: (1) the pledge by S. was valid under s. 2 (1) of the Act; (2) pltf. was not entitled to recover the diamonds.

The expression "when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent" in s. 2 means when acting in such a way as a mercantile agent would act—that is to say, within business hours & at a proper place of business—so that there is nothing to lead the pledgee to suppose anything is wrong or the disposition is one which the mercantile agent has no authority to make (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., & BUCKLEY, L.J.).—OPPENHEIMER v. ATTENBOROUGH & SON, [1908] 1 K. B. 221; 77 L. J. K. B. 209; 98 L. T. 94; 24 T. L. R. 115; 52 Sol. Jo. 76; 13 Com. Cas. 125, C. A.

504. — Mercantile agent pledging goods with auctioneer.—Power to sell.—Goods were consigned by pltf's. to H., a mercantile agent, for sale by him on their behalf for cash or on the hire system. H. sent the goods to defts., a firm of auctioneers, for sale by auction, & obtained from them an advance upon the goods in contemplation of their sale. In an action by pltf's. against defts. for conversion of the goods:—Held: (1) the transaction was not "a sale, pledge, or other disposition of goods made by a mercantile agent when acting in the ordinary course of business of a mercantile agent" within s. 2 of the Act; (2) defts. were not protected by the Act.—WADDINGTON & SONS v. NEALE & SONS (1907), 96 L. T. 786; 23 T. L. R. 464.

505. — Mercantile agent pawning jewellery at exorbitant rate.—Authority as such.—Where a mercantile agent in the jewellery trade raises money by pledging goods with a pawnbroker, he is not acting beyond the ordinary course of business. Regard must be had to the actual disposition of the goods, not to the circumstances, when considering whether a particular transaction is within the ordinary course of the mercantile agent's business. A pledge at an unusual rate of interest could be evidence from which an inference may be drawn that the pledgees had notice that the pledgor had no authority to make the pledge.—JANESICH v. ATTENBOROUGH & SON (1910), 102 L. T. 605; 26 T. L. R. 278.

viii. Notice of Want of Authority—Knowledge.

506. Effect of notice.—Pltf. consigned pearls to a Liverpool merchant for sale, & drew bills upon him to an amount greater than the value of the pearls, which bills he accepted. The Liverpool merchant handed the pearls to his London agent to be sold, & drew bills upon him, as an advance, upon account of the pearls. The London agent accepted the bills, having notice that the pearls had been consigned by pltf. for sale. The Liverpool merchant became insolvent, & the bills drawn upon him by pltf. were not paid. The London agent sold the goods to recoup himself for the bills drawn upon him by the Liverpool merchant. Upon a bill by the consignor alleging fraud & collusion, & praying the London agent might be decreed to pay him the amount produced by sale of the pearls:—Held: the pledge was valid within the Act of 1842, as made bona fide & in ordinary course of business.

Notice to the pledgee of the fact that the goods were transmitted to the consignee, with directions to sell simply, will not vitiate the pledge; otherwise if the pledgee had notice that the consignee was prohibited from pledging.—NAVULSHAW v. BROWN-RIGG (1852), 2 De G. M. & G. 441; 21 L. J. Ch. 908; 20 L. T. O. S. 25; 16 Jur. 979; 42 E. R. 943.

507. ——Applts., foreign merchants, employed a factor to sell goods on their account. The factor employed resps., London brokers, to sell the goods. The factor died on May 5, 1880, insolvent, having pledged the goods to resps. for an advance protected under Factors Acts. The goods were sold by resps. at a price more than sufficient to repay the advance, but the price had not been paid nor the goods delivered when resps. had notice of applts.' claim:—Held: (1) resps., the brokers, could not retain the surplus proceeds of sale in discharge of the general balance due to them by the factor; (2) applts. had the right to recover the surplus proceeds of sale under the Act of 1842, s. 7, as money had & received on their account, & also on the grounds of privity of contract & the right to possession of the goods not delivered until after notice of applts.' claim.—KALTENBACH v. LEWIS, No. 523, post.

508. Effect of knowledge.—Qu.: whether knowledge, however acquired, that goods were not the property of the person dealing as principal, deprives the consignee of his rights of lien for advances made subsequent to the acquiring of such knowledge. The provisions of the Act of 1825, s. 1, which require notice, perhaps modify the common law rule & extend the rights of consignees, since notice & knowledge are not necessarily the same (LORD BLACKBURN).—MILDRED, GOYENECHE & Co. v. MASPONS (1883), 8 App. Cas. 874; 53 L. J. Q. B. 33; 49 L. T. 685; 32 W. R. 125; 5 Asp. M. L. C. 182, H. L.

Annotation.—Distd. Kaltenbach v. Lewis (1883), 24 Ch. D. 54, C. A.

509. Pledgee must produce & prove contract with broker.—A., owner of certain East India indigo warrants, intrusted them to a broker, without any authority to pledge or sell. The broker pledged them to B. In an action brought by A. against B. for the proceeds of the goods, the broker, called as a witness for pltf., stated he parted with the warrants to deft. under a contract in writing:—Held: (1) a deft. seeking to avail himself of the Act of 1825, s. 2, must prove his contract with the broker; (2) it was incumbent on B. to produce the written agreement.—EVANS v. TRUMAN (1831), 2 B. & Ad. 880; 1 Mood. & R. 10; 109 E. R. 1371.

506 i. Effect of notice.—A party advancing money upon a deposit by an agent of the goods of his principal will be protected under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, unless he had notice that the agent was acting in the transaction without authority, or mala fides, as against the owner of the goods; the question of mala fides is for the jury.—DODGLAS v. EWING, (1856) 61 C. L. R. 395; affd. 3 Ir. Jur. 174, Ex. Ch.—IR.

g. Act of 1842—Necessity of notice of agent's mala fides.—Where an agent, intrusted with a document of title to goods, pledges it mala fide, or without authority, it is necessary, in order to deprive the transaction of the protection given by s. 1 of the above Act, & to bring it within the proviso of s. 3 of that Act, that the jury should find categorically that the lender had notice of the agent's mala fides or want of authority.

To prove such notice it is sufficient to show that the circumstances attending the transaction were such as that a reasonable man of business would infer that the agent had not authority to make the pledge, or that he was acting chased & paid for East India silks, warrants for which he sent to B., his broker, with bills to nearly their value, drawn upon B., which B. accepted. B. did not pay his acceptances when due, but received from A. acceptances of A. to nearly the same amount, for the purpose of taking up his own acceptances, which he applied to his own use, & afterwards pledged the warrants with C. In trover for the warrants by A. against C.:—Held: (1) by s. 8 of the Act of 1825, B. not having paid his own acceptances, had no lien upon the warrants which he could transfer to C.; (2) C. had no right to detain them as against A.—FLETCHER v. HEATH (1827), 7 B. & C. 517; 1 Man. & Ry. K. B. 335; 6 L. J. O. S. K. B. 95; 108 E. R. 815.

511. — Broker accepting bills on particular account—Balance due to principal on general account—Pledge of goods held on particular account.—A. being engaged in two separate commercial ventures, one on his own account, the other on account of a firm of which he was a member, employed a factor to make sales on account of both, & directed him to keep the account sales of the two concerns distinct. The factor distinguished them by marks but posted up the whole into one general account with A., with whom alone he had correspondence or dealings. The factor pledged goods belonging to one of these accounts in order to meet a bill drawn on him by A. expressly against that account. At that time he owed A. a considerable sum on the general balance, but was his creditor on the account to which the pledged goods belonged:—Held: the factor had no lien against A. which he could transfer to the pawnee, for he could not separate the two accounts.—ROBERTSON v. KENNINGTON (1830), L. & Welsb. 187; 5 Man. & Ry. K. B. 381; 8 L. J. O. S. K. B. 183.

512. — Broker pledging goods before Oct. 1, 1826—For debt then due.—To entitle a person who claims a lien on goods pledged with him by a factor to retain them under the Act of 1825, the debt for which they are pledged must really & substantially have been incurred after Oct. 1, 1826, & the act of pledging must have taken place after that day.

Where goods were pledged before Oct. 1, 1826, for a debt then due, & the debt was continued after that day by the renewal of a bill given before:—Held: the pledge was not effectual under the above Act, as against the owners of the goods.—ROSS v. WILLIS (1828), Dan. & Ll. 19; 6 L. J. O. S. K. B. 215.

513. — Factor pledging goods—For antecedent advance.—Where defts., receiving a pledge from a factor for an antecedent debt, sell it, they cannot under s. 3 of the Act of 1825 hold the proceeds against the real owner, but are liable to trover; but in estimating damages they are entitled to credit for the balance, if any, due from the owner to the factor.—TAYLOR v. TRUEMAN (1830), L. & Welsb. 184; Mood. & M. 453.

514. — Factor pledging warrants—Acceptances given & provided for by principal.—Acceptances of a factor for his principal, provided for by the principal before they become due, do not constitute such a demand against the principal as to enable the factor previous to Oct. 1, 1826, when the Act of 1825, s. 2, came into operation, to pledge warrants for goods belonging to the principal, as security for advances made to himself. The factor, if he is under acceptances, has a right to detain until those acceptances are discharged, yet he has not any right to enforce, & no right to call for, payment of money.—BLANDY v. ALLAN (1828), 3 C. & P. 447; Dan. & Ll. 22.

515. — In exchange for other warrants pledged for antecedent debt.—N. & Co., commission agents, purchased through defts., brokers, & paid for, 23 chests of indigo, on behalf of pltf., & were paid by him, but retained the warrants, the chests remaining in the East India Co.'s warehouse. Being desirous of withdrawing some other warrants which they had in defts.' hands, N. & Co. deposited these warrants in lieu of them, & afterwards authorised defts. to sell the chests & appropriate the proceeds, which defts. did, not knowing any person was interested in them other than N. & Co. At the time of this transaction N. & Co. were creditors in account with pltf. to an amount much below the value of the indigo:—Held: (1) sale of the 23 chests was a conversion; (2) defts. were liable to the principal in trover for the transfer of these warrants by N. & Co. was not a sale or disposition by factors within the Act of 1825, s. 2, nor a pledge as security for negotiable instruments, within the same sect., East India warrants not being "negotiable instrument," & if the warrants were deposited as security for a previously existing debt, defts. (by s. 3 of the Act) could have no greater right in respect of them than the factors had at the time of deposit.—TAYLOR v. KYMER (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 320; 1 L. J. K. B. 114; 110 E. R. 120.

516. — — — — —]—Pltfs., merchants residing abroad, consigned goods to D. & A., their factors, resident in England. The goods were warehoused in St. Catharine's Dock. Debt had been in the habit of making advances to D. & A. on security of dock warrants, & under an agreement that he should hold all dock warrants which had been delivered to him by D. & A., as security for the general balance of the money owing him by them. After arrival of pltfs.' goods, D. & A., on Oct. 7, 1836, being indebted to debt., delivered four dock warrants (of part of the goods) in exchange for other warrants held by him. On the 15th, being in want of a further advance, they borrowed an additional sum under a promise of delivering ten other warrants of pltfs. on the 17th, which was done, & similar transactions took place on the 22nd & 24th with respect to two other warrants. In trover for the whole of the goods included in the sixteen warrants so delivered to him:—Held: (1) as to the first four, an exchange was not a pledge within the Act of 1825, s. 2; (2) no money could be considered as advanced on the faith of those warrants.—BONZI v. STEWART (1842), 4 Man. & G. 295; 5 Scott, N. R. 1; 11 L. J. C. P. 228; 3 L. T. O. S. 301; 134 E. R. 121.

arrival of the vessel, had handed over the bill of lading to W. & C., as their factors, for sale, & W. & C. had entered the cargo in the custom-house in their own names, & without plffs.' knowledge, had obtained a dock warrant for it in their own names. W. & C. deposited this dock warrant with defts., who gave up to W. the bonds & paid over to W. & C. the balance, after deducting the debt due to them from W. & discount:—Held: (1) if, according to the intention of both parties, the £14,000 was to be placed entirely at the disposal of W. & C. to apply to any purpose of their own & they directed its payment in account to defts. in satisfaction of W.'s debt, this was an advance of money to W. & C. within the Act of 1825, s. 2; (2) if their intention was that the new advance was only for the purpose of satisfying W.'s former debt, & would not have been made except on the understanding it should be so applied, & the application of it otherwise would have been a breach of agreement, it was not an advance within the Act.—*PHILLIPS v. The judge having told the jury that in the transaction was only a circuitous mode of paying the bill, on which deft. was liable, it was not within the Act:—Held: (1) not a misdirection; (2) the transaction was not protected by the Act.—*JEAROYD v. 520. ——— In exchange for other goods previously pledged & for additional advance.—To a count for detinue of goods defts. pleaded they were bankers, & whilst S. had dealings with them as such bankers, L. was intrusted by pltf. with the goods as his agent; that defts. were possessed of other goods upon which they as such bankers had a valid lien in respect of previous advances to S. at request of L.; that it was agreed between L. & defts., as such bankers, that in consideration of delivery by defts. to L. of the other goods he would deliver to defts. as such bankers, by way of pledge, the goods in the count mentioned, & defts. should hold same as a lien, instead of the other goods, in respect of the previous advance & also such further advances as defts. might make to L., which L. then requested defts. to make; that defts., in pursuance of the agreement, delivered up to L. the other goods, & L. delivered to defts. the goods in the count mentioned as such pledge, & defts. advanced to S. further sums of money which were still owing. Replications: (1) pltf. was induced to trust L. with possession of the goods in the count mentioned by fraud, misrepresentation & covin of L.; (2) the agreement by L. to deliver to defts. by way of pledge the goods in the count mentioned was not made, nor were the goods delivered to defts. by L. by way of pledge, in the usual & ordinary course of business; (3) the other goods in the plea mentioned were not the goods of L. or pledged with defts. by L., nor had defts. any lien upon same from L.:—Held: (1) the transaction disclosed by the plea was a good defence under s. 2 of the Act; (2) neither of the replications was an answer to the plea.—SHEPARD v. UNION BANK OF LONDON, No. 17, ante.

521. ——— Factor depositing bill of lading & unconditional power of sale—In security of payment to be made on antecedent contracts.—H., a speculator in cotton, in July, 1864, requested W. to purchase for him, in W.'s name, 400 bales of Egyptian cotton, for delivery in Sept. following. W. assented, employing for the purpose (with the knowledge of H.), as his broker, C., who knew W. was acting as agent, & W. became liable on a series of contracts, the first of which was due on Sept. 9. The price of cotton falling, C. refused to take up the contracts unless he was secured from loss, & W. applied to H., who, on Sept. 8, promised to give some security, & on Sept. 26 deposited with W., & W. deposited with C., with unconditional power of sale, a bill of lading of a cargo of Surat cotton of which H. was consignee from plffs., a firm at Bombay, as their factor; but H. was not known either to W. or to C. to be other than the true owner. On the same day C. made a first payment on account of W.'s indebtedness under the contracts; & continued to make other payments, W. not advancing anything. In Oct. H. stopped payment, & the proceeds of the cargo of Surat cotton were then claimed by plffs.:—Held: (1) the deposit of the bill of lading by H. was not made in respect of an antecedent debt of H. to W. within the Acts of 1825 & 1842; (2) having been made by H. in respect of an advance by C. on behalf of W., within the same Acts, it was binding on plffs.—JEWAN v. WHITWORTH (1866), L. R. 2 Eq. 692; 36 L. J. Ch. 127; 14 W. R. 1020.

522. ——— Factor pledging goods—To secure payment of bill not then due & repay sum due for previous losses.—The Act of 1842 does not apply to pledges for antecedent liabilities (whether they may or may not have ripened into debts) where no actual advance is made at the time of the pledge.

Where H., a factor, pledged goods of his principal to G. (1) to secure payment of an acceptance of H. in G.'s hands, not then due, given to protect G.'s liability on a contract as H.'s broker; (2) to repay to G. his loss on resale of goods G. had purchased for H. in his own name:—Held: the transaction was not protected by the Act. Semble: both liabilities were antecedent debts.—MACNEE v. GORST (1867), L. R. 4 Eq. 315; 15 W. R. 1197.

523. ——— To broker buying them on factor's instructions—In security of advance by broker where latter liable to vendor.—A broker, who in purchasing goods for a factor has made himself responsible to the vendor, may thereafter make an advance bond fide to the factor to enable him to pay for the goods bought on his account; & a pledge to secure repayment of such advance is protected by the Act.

Applts., merchants at Singapore, employed M. in London as agent to sell, without authority to pledge, cargoes which they consigned to him. M. employed resps., London brokers, to sell applts.' consignments, & also in speculative purchases on his own account. Resps. purchased shellac for M. without disclosing that they were buying as agents & were personally liable to the vendors on the contracts. Subsequently they made advances to M. to enable him to pay deposits on the shellac, & took as security bills of lading of some of applts.' cargoes. They had no notice that M. was acting improperly in pledging the cargoes. On obtaining the advances M. gave resps. cheques for the amount of the deposits which were then paid by resps. :—Held : (1) the obligation under which M. lay to resps. to pay the deposits & thus prevent their being called upon to pay them did not constitute an antecedent debt within s. 3 ; (2) the pledges were made in respect of bonâ fide advances, not of antecedent debts, & were valid against applts.—KALTENBACH v. LEWIS (1885), 10 App. Cas. 617 ; 55 L. J. Ch. 58 ; 53 L. T. 787 ; 34 W. R. 477, H. L.

x. Consignees.

524. Bill of lading pledged by consignee—Agent.]

(b) Apart from the Factors Acts.

(NOTE.—The following cases, though to a great extent rendered obsolete by the Factors Acts, are still often referred to & are therefore retained.)

525. Agent—Ostensible right to pledge.]—Acceptance of pledge from a person ostensibly with the right to pledge held good in favour of the pledgee, & sale of goods by the latter on non-payment of the money at the time agreed on upheld.—METCALF v. ROYAL EXCHANGE ASSCE. Co. (1740), Barn. Ch. 343 ; 27 E. R. 672.

526. — General powers to sell, assign, & transfer.]—Under a general power to sell, assign, & transfer an agent cannot pledge for his own debt.—DE BOUCHOUT v. GOLDSMID (1800), 5 Ves. 211 ; 31 E. R. 551.

527. — Holding out—Effect of.]—Where A. pledges B.'s property with C., & B. brings an action of detinue against A. & C., the jury, if satisfied that B. held out A. as a person authorised to pledge his property for the purpose of raising money, may find a verdict for both debtors.—GARTH v. HOWARD & FLEMING (1832), 8 Bing. 451 ; 1 Moo. & S. 628 ; 1 L. J. C. P. 129 ; 131 E. R. 468.

528. Agent for management of property consigned from abroad—Possession of bill of lading—Advance by way of acceptance.]—Sugars were shipped from abroad under a bill of lading, which expressed they were on account of plts., & were to be delivered to W. & Co., their assigns. W. & Co., agents of plts. for management of their property consigned from abroad, indorsed the bill of lading, together with other bills of lading comprising the rest of the cargo, to defts., & drew bills upon them for the amount of the whole cargo. Defts. accepted & paid the bills & sold the sugars at two months' credit, at expiration of which they carried the amount of proceeds to the account of W. & Co., who in the interval between sale & expiration of credit had become bkpts. :—Held : plts. entitled to recover proceeds of such sale from defts.—SHIPLEY v. KYMER (1813), 1 M. & S. 484 ; 105 E. R. 181.

Annotation :—Refd. Graham v. Dyster (1817), 6 M. & S. 1.

529. Agent or factor—Possession of goods or symbol of them.]—Before the Factors Acts a factor, or agent for sale, had no power to pledge, whether he was in possession either of the goods themselves or the symbol of them, even though the symbol might bear on the face of it some evidence of the property being in himself as in the case of a bill of lading in which he was consignee or indorsee. This was in accordance with the general rule that he who deals with one acting ex mandato can obtain from him no better title than his mandate enables him to bestow (PARKE, B.).—PHILLIPS v. HUTH, No. 498, ante.

530. Broker—Authority as such—Borrowing on his lien on principal's goods.]—Where a broker pledges the goods of his principal as his own, the pawnee, who claims by such tortious act of the broker, cannot claim to retain against the principal in trover for the amount of the lien which the broker had on the goods for his general balance at the time of such pledge. It may be otherwise where one who has a lien delivers the goods to a third person as a security, with notice of his lien, & appoints him to continue his possession as his servant for the preservation of his lien.—MCCOMBIE v. DAVIES (1805), 6 East, 538 ; 2 Smith, K. B. 557 ; 102 E. R. 1303.

531. — Goods consigned to him & drawn for by principal.]—A. consigned to B., a broker, a quantity of hides, desiring him to act according to his discretion. Soon afterwards A. drew upon B. for the amount, & B. accepted bills for the amount :—Held : B. was not entitled to pledge the goods in order to raise money to meet these bills, although it had been the usual course for A. to draw bills, & for B. to accept them, upon every consignment of goods.—GRAHAM v. DYSTER (1817), 6 M. & S. 1 ; 105 E. R. 1143.

brokers for B. & Co., effected two purchases of seed, which were paid for by B. & Co. & left in depts.' warehouses for resale; the first was made on account of B. & Co., the other for plffs., resident abroad, by their express order; but both invoices were made out in the name of B. & Co., who did not inform defts. that the latter purchase was not made on their account:—Held: defts., having made advances to B. & Co., could not retain possession of the seed against plffs., on the ground that a factor has no authority to pledge his principal's goods.—GUICHARD v. MORGAN (1819), 4 Moore, C. P. 36.

533. — Possession of warrants of two joint principals—Warrants divided & warrants of one pledged for debt of other.—A. & B. having, by their brokers, purchased cottons, warrants or orders for delivery were made out in the name of the brokers, & the cottons were left in their possession, as the brokers of A. Immediately after the purchase B. paid A. one-half the value. When considerable purchases had been made, the brokers were informed that B. had an interest in the goods purchased, & upon directions from A. & B., they divided the goods held on their joint account by appropriating specific warrants to each party; A., after this, directed the brokers to procure him a loan on the security of the warrants, & C. advanced money by discounting bills drawn by A. upon the brokers; as a security for which, the whole of the warrants were deposited with C. by the brokers. Before the bills became due the brokers were directed by A. to get one-half renewed. C. having discounted fresh bills for this purpose, the brokers, who had obtained the warrants from C. for the purpose of dividing them & returning him one-half, left in the hands of C., as a security, the warrants belonging to B., C. not knowing that B. had any interest in them:—Held: B. might recover from C. in respect of the goods thus pledged with him by A.—WILLIAMS v. BARTON (1825), 3 Bing. 139; McCle. & Yo. 406; 10 Moore, C. P. 506; 130 E. R. 466, Ex. Ch.

534. — Goods pledged to him for advances—Repledge of goods as his own.—A., owner of certain chattels, pledged them to B., a broker, to secure advances made on his behalf by B., & B. afterwards in his own name, & unknown to A., repledged the same chattels to C., to secure advances made by C. to B. of which, unknown to C., A. was to have the benefit. C. having subsequently applied in vain to B. for payment of his advances threatened to realise his security by a sale, which he was from time to time induced to postpone, by the solicitations of B. & his assurances of speedy payment; & this was communicated by B. to A., his principal. In a suit by A. against B. & C. praying to redeem the property in pledge on payment of any balance found due on the account between himself & B.:—Held: A. had no equity to restrain C. from proceeding to an immediate sale. Qu.: whether, in the circumstances, C. could make a good title to a purchaser.—NICHOLSON v. HOOPER (1838), 4 My. & Cr. 179; 41 E. R. 70.

535. Commission agent—Power to sell & request for advance against price.—Where foreign merchants consigned goods, on their own account & risk, to a commission agent in England for sale only, & in the letter of advice wrote, "We expect you will send us some remittances on account of proceeds consigned to you, though they be not yet sold, as is customary, in order to encourage us thereby to send you more frequent consignments"; & the agent pledged the goods for advances to himself, being in embarrassed circumstances:—Held: (1) the agent was a factor for sale only & had no authority to pledge the goods; (2) the consignor might recover the net proceeds from the pawnee, deducting only so much as the agent could have retained; (3) the shipper's letter to the agent did not amount to an authority to pledge the goods.—QUEIROZ v. TRUEMAN (1824), 3 B. & C. 342; 5 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 192; 3 L. J. O. S. K. B. 26; 107 E. R. 760.

536. Correspondent of foreign merchant.—Where a foreign merchant consigned goods to his correspondent in London, who pledged them with a factor, as & for his own property, received the amount in advance, & afterwards became bkpt.:—Held: the factor was liable to the foreign merchant in trover for the goods.—DUCLOS v. RYLAND (1821), 5 Moore, C. P. 518, n.

537. Factor—Express authority to appear as owner.—Where a factor by the assent of his principal exhibits himself to the world as owner & by that means obtains credit as owner, the principal will be liable to him who furnished the means.—DE LEUD v. EDWARDS (undated), 1 M. & S. 147.

538. — Authority as such.—Though a factor has power to sell, & thereby bind his principal, yet he cannot bind or affect the property of the goods by pledging them as a security for his own debt, though there is the formality of a bill of parcels & a receipt (LEE, C.J.).—PATERSON v. TASH (1743), 2 Stra. 1178; 93 E. R. 1110.

539. — Effect of factor's lien.—If a factor pledge the goods of his principal, the latter may recover the value of them in trover against the pawnee, on tendering to the factor what is due to him, without any tender to the pawnee.—DAU-

537 i. Factor—Advances by factor against goods stored.—A co. offered to store all wheat consigned to it free of storage charges on condition that the wheat when sold should bear a net commission of 2½ per cent., & that the co. should have eight months in which to sell the wheat unless the consignor instructed the co. to sell earlier, & the co. promised to make liberal advances on all consignments. All wheat when received by the co. from the consignors was placed in one large stack, which also included wheat belonging to the co., & when a sale was made by them wheat was taken indiscriminately from the stack. The co. made advances to consignors upon the wheat received, borrowing the money from debt. bank & giving the bank as security in respect of each advance a certificate that the co. held a certain number of bags of wheat which they would deliver to the bank's order on return of the certificate. Plff. consigned 7,000 bags of wheat to the co. & received an advance of 14s. per bag upon it & it was dealt with by the co. as above stated. Plff. sued the bank for conversion of his wheat:—Held: plff. must be non-suited.—SHORT v. CITY BANK OF SYDNEY (1912), 15 C. L. R. 148, affg. 12 S. R. N. S. W. 186.—AUS.

1. Mortgage—Authority from mortgagee to deal with goods—Pledge for Crown dues.—By virtue of conditions in a mtge. of logs & timber given by S. to appts. as security for a debt, S. continued in possession with powers to deal with the property. To pay certain dues he made an arrangement with the Govt., as appts. averred unknown to them & never ratified by them. On S.'s insolvency his equity of redemption was released by his assignee to appts., & on their beginning to ship the timber the collector claimed the dues agreed to be paid under S.'s agreement with the Govt. To get the logs through appts. paid a sum which they claimed to be repaid:—Held: S. had no authority, express or implied, from appts. to pledge the property for payment of arrears of Crown dues or create any lien thereon other than the law attached to it.—*MERCHANTS' BANK OF CANADA v. 540. ——— Position of pledgee before & after sale of goods pledged.—There is a wide distinction to be made between a factor pledging goods & the person to whom he pledges them insisting on holding the goods so pledged, while they remain in substance, for the money advanced, & a factor selling the goods through the medium of a broker, & the broker insisting upon holding the price after he has given credit for it to the factor in his account; & for this reason: a factor has no reason to pledge the goods of his principal, nor has he a right to do so; & as he has no right to pledge the goods of his principal, he cannot give to a pawnee a title which he has not himself, & therefore, if it rested upon a pledge no property could be given. But a factor has a right to sell the goods, & if the principal's name does not appear, but he sells them as his own, he has a right to the money (GIBBS, C.J.).—WHITTENBURY v. FORRESTER (1816), 6 M. & S. 7 n.; 105 E. R. 1145 n.

541. ——— Bill drawn on factor by principal—Sale by pledgee after notice of revocation.—Where pltf. consigned goods to their factor & at the same time drew bills upon him for the amount, which they themselves ultimately paid, & the factor sent them to deft., with whom he had general dealings, without intimating they were the property of a third person, & drew a bill upon him for the amount which deft. accepted & paid; after which the factor became insolvent, having before that time appraised deft. he had received a notice of countermand of sale from pltf., but deft. afterwards sold the goods:—Held: (1) deft. was liable for the value of the goods, in an action for money had & received; (2) he would have been equally liable had he not known the goods were pltf.'s property.—JACKSON v. CLARKE (1827), 1 Y. & J. 216; 148 E. R. 651.

542. ——— Authority as such & possession of bill of lading.—Where goods were consigned from abroad to a factor to be sold on account of the consignor, & a bill of lading was sent to deliver the goods to the factor or his assigns, & the factor afterwards indorsed & delivered the bill of lading together with the goods to defts., as brokers, with instructions to do the needful, & defts. made advances to him on the credit of those & other goods, without knowing that he was not the owner of them:—Held: (1) a factor cannot pledge the goods of his principal; (2) defts. could not retain the goods against the consignor until payment of the debt due to them from the factor on account of those advances.—MARTINI v. COLES (1813), 1 M. & S. 140; 105 E. R. 53.

543. ——— Power to sell—Transaction carried through in form of sale.—A quantity of oats having been consigned by a merchant abroad, to be sold by B., a merchant as well as factor, he placed them in the hands of A., a corn factor, as security for advances made by him; but the oats were not to be sold without B.'s consent. They remained in A.'s possession, upon these terms, for 9 months, when they were transferred to A. by a sale at the market price. No money actually passed, nor were any account sales rendered; but the amount of the price was allowed in account between B. & A., leaving a balance in favour of A.:—Held: (1) this was in substance a pledge, & not a sale by the factor; (2) no property passed to A., although the jury had found it to be a bonâ fide transaction.—KUCKEIN v. WILSON (1821), 4 B. & Ald. 443; 106 E. R. 999.

544. ——— Possession of bill of lading—Goods sold by pledgee—Proper remedy.—Where goods were placed in the hands of a factor for sale, & he indorsed the bills of lading to defts., who accepted a bill for him, & he at the same time directed defts. to sell the goods & reimburse themselves the amount of the bill out of the proceeds:—Held: defts., having sold the goods, could not be sued for them in trover by the original owner. Seemle: (1) he might have maintained money had & received for the proceeds; (2) defts. could not have retained the amount of money advanced to the factor.—STERNELD v. Where goods were consigned on the joint account of the consignors & consignee, & a bill of lading was sent to deliver the goods to the consignee or his assigns, who afterwards indorsed & delivered it to defts. upon condition of their making an advance to him on it, which they failed to do, but claimed to retain it as a security for prior advances:—Held: such indorsement & delivery of the bill of lading did not divest the consignors' right to stop the goods in transitu upon the insolvency of the consignee, who had not paid for them.—NEWSOM v. 547. ——— Goods consigned & drawn for by principal—Bill to be met out of proceeds.—The mere circumstance of a principal's drawing bills on his factor to whom goods were consigned, to be provided for out of the proceeds of such goods, does not authorise the factor to pledge them for the purpose of raising money to meet the bills; & where the factor had become bkpt., & the pawnee had afterwards sold the goods:—Held: the principal might recover as against him the whole proceeds of such sale, in an action for money had & received, although the factor had appropriated part of the money advanced by the pawnee to the payment of one of the bills drawn by his principal.—GILL v. KYMER (1821), 5 Moore, C. P. 503.

(who knew A. was the owner), & paid £294 in discharge of one of the bills; & C. sold the goods for B. for £4,033.—Held: A. was entitled to recover from C., in an action for money had & received (in which £1,533 was paid into ct.), the whole balance of £2,500.—*FIELDING v. Pltf. kept the certificates in his own hands, but his agent, without authority, fraudulently pledged the bonds to deft. as security for a debt:—Held: (1) it was correctly left to the jury to determine whether these instruments passed by delivery & whether deft. had acted with due caution in receiving the coupons without requiring the certificate; (2) the jury having found both questions in the negative, the ct. would not set aside a verdict for pltf.—*LANG v. PART V. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 10.—B.

550 i. Agent—Holding note payable to pledge—Authority to deposit same as collateral.—Defts., directors of a co., placed in the hands of C., their secretary, their promissory note for $8,000, payable to pltf. on demand, which note C. deposited with pltf., having a receipt written under it, & signed by their agent, which expressed that the note was to be held by pltf. as collateral security for any unpaid paper they might at any time hold of the co. Defts. pleaded an equitable defence, & desired to prove, that the note was given in consequence of a doubt as to their power to become parties to a note,

& as security only against the want of such power, & until it should be conferred upon them by the legislature:—Held: such evidence was rightly rejected, for defts., having intrusted C. with their note, were bound by his agreement, on which pltf. had advanced their money, & which could not be varied by parol testimony.—*COMMERCIAL BANK OF CANADA v. m. Manager of company—Holding out.—The C. Bank having refused further loans to a trading co. until its current liability was reduced, a note by the co. in favour of its directors was specially indorsed by them & handed to

At the maturity of the note, the co.'s trade paper had been retired, & an overdraft covered, but there was a general indebtedness on former loans:—Held: so far as the bank was aware, the manager had ostensible authority to pledge the note as collateral security, & the bank could enforce it.—*COX v. 557. Bill-broker—Authority to get bill discounted—Mixture with other bills & pledge of whole in mass for antecedent debt.]—A bill-broker, who receives a bill from a customer merely for the purpose of procuring it to be discounted, has no right to mix it with other bills of other customers, & pledge the whole mass as a security for an advance of moneys to himself; still less has he a right to deposit bills which are received merely for the purpose of discount as security or part security for money previously due from him. If the pledgee of the bills in such circumstances receives them from the bill-broker, with knowledge or reasonable ground of suspicion, he cannot hold them as against the customer.—*HAYNES v. 558. ———.]—C. & Co., merchants & capitalists, had large transactions with A. & B., bill-brokers in London, who were possessed of bills amounting to nearly £3,000, which had been placed in their hands by different customers to raise money on for the latter. A. & B. having mixed these bills with others belonging to themselves, handed over the whole to defts., as a security for £3,000, then advanced, as well as for two sums of £2,000 & £550, previously advanced them, on their engagement to give bills to cover the amount in a short time. It was proved to be customary for bill-brokers in London to pledge bills of their various customers together for an advance to themselves of one gross sum on all of them, or even to pledge them as security for former advances made to the bill-brokers; & each customer looked only to the bill-broker, to whom he had given dominion over his bill. In an action of assumpsit brought by C. & Co. on one of the bills thus handed over by A. & B. against one of A. & B.'s customers, whose name was on it, the judge left it to the jury to say whether plffs. took the bills from A. & B., the bill-brokers, with due caution & in the ordinary course of business. The jury having found a verdict for plffs.:—Held: the direction was right.

In an action of trover brought by a customer (himself a bill-broker) against C. & Co. to recover the value of some bills thus handed over to them, the judge told the jury that a bill-broker, being an agent for the purpose of getting bills discounted, had by the general law no right to mix bills received by him from his customers merely to get discounted with bills of other customers, & to pledge the whole in a mass, in order to obtain a loan of money to himself, & still less had he a right to deposit bills received merely for the purposes of discount as security or part security for money previously due from him; but added that parties might, by contract between themselves, avoid the general rule of law. He left it to them to say whether the usage alleged to exist in London, viz., that by putting a bill into a bill-broker's hands the customer gave him an absolute dominion over it to do with it as he liked, looking to the credit of the bill-broker only as the person responsible either for the money or the return of the bill, was proved to their satisfaction, & if they thought it was, whether they thought plff., himself a bill-broker, had contracted with reference to that usage. The jury having found for defts., the ct. refused to disturb the verdict.—FOSTER v. PEARSON, STEPHENS v. FOSTER (1835), 1 Cr. M. & R. 849; 5 Tyr. 255; 4 L. J. Ex. 120; 140 E. R. 1324.

559. ———.]—A person receiving a bill to get it discounted has no authority to deal with it otherwise than for discount, & a deposit of it, along with other bills, with a bill-broker as security for advances, the broker having notice that it was delivered for discount, is beyond scope of the authority, & passes no property.—*HERSCHELD v. 560. Secretary of company—Access to debentures—Fraud.]—Plffs., a limited co., were possessed of certain debentures, issued by an English co. in England & payable to bearer, which by reason of the conditions indorsed thereon were not promissory notes. These debentures were kept in a safe, the key of which was intrusted to plffs.' secretary. The secretary, in fraud of plffs., took the debentures from the safe & pledged them with defts. for advances made to him by them. Defts. received the debentures in good faith. It was proved that the usage in the mercantile world & on the Stock Exchange for many years had been to treat such debentures as negotiable instruments transferable by mere delivery:—Held: although plffs. were not estopped by their conduct from denying defts.' title, yet defts. were entitled to the debentures as against plffs. on the ground that the debentures were negotiable instruments transferable by delivery.—*BECHUANALAND EXPLORATION CO. v. 561. Stock-broker—Possession of scrip—Authority to sell or exchange same for bonds.]—G. purchased through his broker some Russian & Hungarian scrip; the undertaking in the scrip was to give bearer a bond for money advanced payable with interest in the way there stated. G. left the scrip, to be exchanged for bonds or sold, as he should direct, in the hands of his broker, who fraudulently deposited it with a banker as security for a loan to himself:—Held: (1) the scrip was a negotiable instrument, transferable by mere delivery; (2) the banker, being a bonâ fide holder for value, was not liable to G., either in trover for the scrip itself, or in assumpsit for value received upon it.—*GOODWIN v. 562. Good faith—Question for jury.]—In an action by the indorsee of a bill who has given value, if his title be disputed on the ground that his indorser obtained the discount of such bill in fraud of the right owner, the question for the jury is, whether the indorsee acted with good faith in taking the bill. The question whether or not he was guilty of gross negligence is improper. Gross negligence may be evidence of mala fides, but is not equivalent to it.—GOODMAN v. HARVEY (1836), 4 Ad. & El. 870; 6 Nev. & M. K. B. 372; 6 L. J. K. B. 63, 260; 111 E. R. 1011.

564. ———.]—Onus of proof.]—An agent, was intrusted by his principals with a bill of lading for a particular purpose, & he pledged same mala fide, without the consent of his principals, to a banker, for advances made to himself:—Held: (1) in order to invalidate a pledge so made under Factors Act, 1842 (c. 39), s. 3, it was necessary that the ct. or jury should find that the lender had notice of the agent's mala fides, or want of authority to pledge the goods; (2) to establish such notice, it was sufficient to show that the circumstances attending the transaction were such that a reasonable man of business, applying his understanding to them, would certainly know that the agent had not authority to make the pledge, even if the agent was not also acting mala fide towards his principals.—*GOBIND CHUNDER SEIN v. 565. Notice of want of authority.]—S. gave E. certificates of ry. stock with transfers thereof executed by him in blank, & bonds of foreign cos. (alleged to be negotiable securities) for the purpose of raising £26,000. E. gave these securities to M., a money-dealer in London, to secure £26,000 advanced by M. to E. M. deposited the transfers & securities, with other securities of his customers, with various banks, as security for large loan accounts running between him & them, the blanks in the transfers of stock being filled up with the names of nominees of the banks. The banks in dealing either actually knew, or had reason to believe, the securities did or might belong not to M., but to his customers. M. having become bkpt., the banks sold some of S.'s securities, & claimed to hold the proceeds & unsold remainder as security for all the debt due from M. to them:—Held: (1) though the banks had legal title to the securities, they were not purchasers for value without notice, but ought to have inquired into the extent of M.'s authority, & this whether the securities were negotiable or not; (2) upon payment to the banks of the money advanced by M. to E., S. was entitled to the value of such securities as had been sold by the banks, & to redeem the remainder.—*SHEFFIELD (EARL) v. 566. Knowledge that pledgor is broker not sufficient.]—Pltf. gave B., a broker, certain bonds to be exchanged for certificates. These bonds, by custom & usage of the Stock Exchange, passed from hand to hand by delivery without transfer. The broker deposited the bonds with defts., his bankers, in exchange for certain other securities for his private account, which had been overdrawn for some time. Defts.' manager was aware that B. was a broker, but not aware he was depositing his customer's securities. B. having failed to repay the overdraft on his account, the bank claimed to hold the securities, & refused to deliver them to pltf. In an action by pltf. against the bank to recover the securities or their equivalent:—Held: (1) pltf. was not entitled to recover as against the bank, as the securities were negotiable instruments, & the bank was a bona fide holder for value; (2) the mere fact that the bank manager knew the pledgor of the securities was a broker was not enough to affect the bank with notice that the securities were not his own, or to cast on the bank the duty of making inquiry.—BAKER v. NOTTINGHAM & NOTTINGHAMSHIRE BANKING CO., LTD. (1891), 60 L. J. Q. B. 542; 7 T. L. R. 235.

567. Agent pledging store warrant—Instructed to deposit cash to meet principal's cheques.]—Pltf.'s agent obtained from deft. bank a promise to pay certain cheques drawn by pltf. in consideration of his depositing with it a store warrant in lieu of the cash which pltf. had instructed him to pay to the credit of pltf.'s account. The store warrant belonged to pltf., was under pledge to the agent, & was accepted by the bank with full knowledge of the circumstances. In an action for dishonouring the cheques:—Held: the agent in substituting the deposit for cash had not exceeded his authority, but, even if he had, the contract was complete, for there was consideration for the bank's promise, as the deposit conferred on the bank some right, interest, profit, or benefit, within the legal meaning of consideration; & in the circumstances it could not be heard to say that that consideration did not move from pltf.—FLEMING v. BANK OF NEW ZEALAND, [1900] A. C. 577; 69 L. J. P. C. 120; 33 L. T. 1; 16 T. L. R. 469, P. C.

568. Agent transferring Lloyd's bond—Deposited as conditional security.]—D. obtained a Lloyd's bond from defts. as security for money due. He deposited it with C. & Co., with a signed blank transfer as security for their acceptances of certain bills, on the terms that they were not to transfer it unless he failed to provide money to meet the bills. C. & Co. transferred the bond to plff. before D. had made any default in respect of the bills, & in breach of authority:—Held: defts. were not estopped from denying the authority of C. & Co. to transfer the bonds.

It might be that if a bond with a blank transfer on its back were handed to anyone with the transfer executed by the owner, the owner would be estopped from denying the authority of the person so entitled to deal with it, but that would only be because of the inference in favour of such an authority which could be drawn from the deposit of bonds in that particular form (BIGHAM, J.).—MONTAGU, SAMUEL & Co. v. WESTON, CLEVEDON, & PORTISHEAD LIGHT RY. Co. (1903), 19 T. L. R. 272.

569. Army agent pledging clothing issue certificates—Authority to receive allowances.]—The colonel of a regiment, by power of attorney, authorised his agent to receive the allowances, issued by the Paymaster-General of the Forces, for supply of clothing & accoutrements to the regiment. The agent assigned the certificates, which authorised the issue, to his banker as security for his account, & the banker received the money. The agent directed the supply, by tradesmen, of the clothing & accoutrements; & he, from time to time, transmitted accounts to the colonel, representing those supplies as having been paid for; but they had not been. The agent became bkpt.; & the tradesmen sued the colonel for the amount of supplies; & the colonel brought an action against the banker to recover the money for those supplies:—Held: the action could not be maintained against the banker until the colonel had paid the tradesmen. Qu.: whether it could be then maintained.—DALHOUSIE (EARL) v. CHAPMAN (1829), 7 L. J. O. S. K. B. 233.

570. Insurance broker pledging policy with loss due thereon—Policy in broker's name.]—A broker having effected an insurance in his own name on behalf of his principal, had the policy left in his hands for the purpose of his receiving the proceeds; & having, upon advice of the loss, pledged the policy with another broker, obtained an advance thereon, received as on account of the loss:—Held: the latter might retain the amount so advanced, & the principal could not recover it from him, but must resort to his own broker for it.—CALLOW v. KELSON (1862), 10 W. R. 193.

Pledge of certificates & blank transfers.]—See ESTOPPEL; STOCK EXCHANGE.

SUB-SECT. 11.—AUTHORITY TO PURCHASE.

571. Agent—Authority to act "in & about" purchase of property.]—A statement of claim alleged that deft. "duly authorised J. to act as his agent in & about the purchase of a certain property":—Held: an insufficient averment of an authority to purchase.—VALE OF NEATH COLLIERY Co. v. FURNESS (1876), 45 L. J. Ch. 276; 34 L. T. 231; 24 W. R. 631.

572. — Authority to bid at auction—Purchase subject to conditions not in particulars.]—A brewer sent an agent to bid for him at a sale by auction for a lot, comprising a public-house, described in the particulars of sale as in occupation of S., at the low rental of £20 a year, & two cottages, described in the particulars as each let at 2s. a week, & in occupation of B. & T. The property was in reality subject to a lease (of which 9 years were unexpired) to another brewer, & S., B. & T. were his under-tenants. The lease was read at the sale, & the auctioneer stated that he sold the lot subject to it. The lot was knocked down to the brewer's agent, & he signed a contract which made no mention of the lease. The vendor filed a bill for specific performance of the contract, subject to the lease:—Held: (1) the brewer was not bound by the unauthorised act of his agent; (2) the notice that the property was in occupation of persons mentioned in the particulars did not fix him with constructive notice of the lease.—CABALLERO v. HENTY (1874), 9 Ch. App. 447; 43 L. J. Ch. 635; 30 L. T. 314; 22 W. R. 446, C. A.

PART V. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 11.

571 i. Agent—Authority to ascertain price.]—Deft. wrote to his agent: "You had better see what you can secure 1,000 barrels more of the best oil at, or, if there be a tank that you come across with from 2,000 to 5,000 genuine oil, I would buy it, & pay, say, $1,000, $2,000, or $3,000 down, or, if need be, the whole. I don't think oil can be much higher, but I don't look for it to be cheaper; therefore would not think it bad policy to secure enough to keep me running through the winter. Please post me what you can":—Held: no authority was conferred by this letter to complete a purchase of 3,000 barrels.—PRINCE v. LEWIS (1870), 21 C. P. 63; 31 U. C. R. 244.—CAN.

571 ii. — Authority to carry on business in own name.]—B. was in charge of a supply store, selling the goods of defts., & receiving his remuneration from the excess of the selling price over the invoice price for which W. was to account. He had no authority to pledge defts. credit. B. bought the goods in respect of which plffs. sought to make defts. liable for himself, & not for defts., & credit was given to B. by plffs., who at the time knew nothing of defts.:—Held: as there had not been any holding out by defts., & the goods were sold to B. as principal, Watteau v. Fenwick, [1893] 1 Q. B. 344, did not apply, & defts. were not liable. Miles v. McIlraith, 8 App. Cas. 120, folld.; Pole v. Leusk, 9 Jur. N. S. 829, H. L.,

571 iii. — Authority to contract for cultivation.]—A general agency: "I authorise you to conclude all contracts that you shall deem fit with the cultivators for the cultivation this year of sugar-beet, & also the labour for its cultivation," does not authorise the agent to buy from the cultivators, & could not bind the principal with third parties for the purchase price of such beet.—JARRY v. SENECA (1885), M. L. R. 1 S. C. 400; 8 L. N. 331.—CAN.

571 iv. — Holding out.]—Deft. employed for purchase of horses O., to whom he made required advances, & deft. did not conceal from anyone that the advances were made by him, a fact which was generally known. The greater part of the payments were made in the office of deft., who in one instance had given his personal note to settle for a sale of horses, & the invoices for the transport of them to England, although made in the name of O., were drawn to deft.'s order. O., having bought these horses from plff. in the name of deft., & an action having been brought for the price:—Held: deft., having given the public reason to believe that O. was his agent, was responsible for the purchase of horses made by O. from plff. in deft.'s name.—BISAILLON v. ELLIOTT (1898), Q. R. 13 S. C. 289.—CAN.

571 v. — Authority to buy certain goods—Purchase of other goods.]—D. was agent for deft., who had sanctioned his purchasing certain goods:—Held: the circumstances gave no implied authority to D. to purchase goods of plff.—HEATFIELD v. VAN ALLEN (1857), 7 U. C. R. 346.—CAN.

571 vi. — Authority to buy for cash.]—Defts. employed B. to buy wheat for them, & supplied him with ready money to pay for it. B. then, with the knowledge of defts., & on their instructions, made arrangements with C. to receive the wheat for them, & to give out tickets to the persons delivering the grain, signed by him as defts.' agent, showing names of purchasers, quantity & grade of wheat, price, & total amount of the purchase. These tickets were furnished to B. by defts. The custom was for the farmers to take these tickets to B. or his bankers & get their money. Plffs. claim was for the amount of two tickets:—Held: plff. could not recover, as B. had no authority to buy except for cash, & defts. had supplied him with the cash. If plff. chose to deliver his wheat to B. without getting his money for it, he did so at his own risk, & could not then look to defts. for the money.—BENNETT v. ATKINSON. (1894), 10 M. R. 48.—CAN.

572 i. — Authority to bid at auction.]—Sending a man to bid at an auction cannot be considered as conduct calculated, in the language of Contract Act, s. 237, to induce third persons to believe he had general authority to buy.—MACKENZIE, LYALL & Co. v. MOSES (1874), 22 W. R. 156.—IND.

C. P. 420. Mentd. Manson v. Thacker (1878), 7 Ch. D. 620.

573. — Authority to buy at discretion—Secret limitations.]—Where a purchase is made by an agent, he is not a special agent if he has discretion to exceed the sum ordered to be given by his principal; if he has such discretion, the principal is bound by his contracts, though they exceed the sum which he is ordered by his principal to give.—HICKS v. HANKIN, No. 150, ante.

TAYLOR* (1844), 12 M. & W. 545; 14 L. J. Ex. 86; 2 L. T. O. S. 348; 152 E. R. 1314.

575. — Authority to buy land—Contracting in own name.]—Where an agent authorised to buy land contracts in his own name & then discloses his principal, the principal is bound.—WALLER v. HENDON & COX, No. 149, ante.

576. — Authority to buy on credit on previous occasions.]—Deft., a linen-draper in Yorkshire, had in several instances employed B. as his agent to purchase on credit goods of pltf's, linen-drappers in London. B., without authority of deft., ordered goods in his name to be sent by the usual conveyance, & intercepted them to his own use:—Held: deft. was liable for such goods, having by previous dealings with pltf's. & with other persons held out B. as his general agent to purchase goods.—(GILMAN (GILMAN) v. ROBINSON (1825), 1 C. & P. 642; Ry. & M. 226.

578. — Authority to buy on usual trade terms.]—Goods were shipped at Bombay on board a ship of pltf., shipowner in Liverpool, & by the bill of lading were to be delivered "unto order, or to his & their assigns, on paying freight for same." The bill of lading was indorsed by the shipper & forwarded to defts., East India agents in London, who indorsed it in blank to C. & Co., their factors in Liverpool. On arrival of the goods at Liverpool C. & Co. presented the bill of lading to pltf., & received the goods, pltf. debiting C. & Co. with the freight. Afterwards C. & Co. became bkpt. without having paid the freight, whereupon defts. claimed the goods from them, & took possession of them:—Held: defts. not liable to pltf. for the unpaid freight.

A person who employs an agent to purchase goods on usual terms of any particular trade doubtless gives the agent authority to pledge his credit. But it is by no means a matter of course that credit shall be given for freight under bills of lading which make the goods deliverable on paying freight, & it is plain that where such credit is given it is on the responsibility of the individuals actually receiving the goods, or in consequence of the usual course of dealing between them & the shipowner (TINDAL, C.J.).—TOBIN v. CRAWFORD (1842), 9 M. & W. 716; 12 L. J. Ex. 490; 152 E. R. 303, Ex. Ch.

579. — General authority in widest terms—Purchase of such title as vendor had.]—If an agent for a purchaser, having a general authority in writing in the widest terms, which includes an authority to conclude a contract on such terms as he in his discretion should think fit, contracts to purchase such title as the vendor has, the ct. will compel specific performance of the contract without any inquiry into vendor's title.—ST. JOHN v. STIRLING (1820), 7 L. J. O. S. Ch. 189.

580. — Occasional authority to buy—No notice of revocation.]—W. as agent for deft. occasionally employed B. to purchase wools, which purchases had been ratified by deft. In June, 1839, deft. wrote to B. to say he would have nothing to do with any purchases made by him. This letter had been communicated to pltf., but at what time was left uncertain. In July B. bought wools of pltf. then lying at his premises, & they were sent to a warehouse of another person, where they were weighed & packed by B. in sheets, which deft. was in the habit of sending there for the purpose of packing such wools. The wools in question were not paid for, & it was the course of dealing that wools were not to be removed from such warehouse till payment. In an action to recover the price of the wools:—Held: (1) there was sufficient evidence to warrant the jury in finding B. was deft.'s

575 i. — Authority to buy land—Purchase subject to reservation unknown to principal.]—A. authorised C. to purchase certain land from B. at £2 per acre if C. approved of the purchase. C. inspected the land, & purchased the property for £1 17s. per acre. The purchase-money was paid, & the land transferred. During a period of four months after the completion of the purchase B. removed timber from the land. B. gave evidence that in selling the land he expressly reserved (with the concurrence of C.) the right to remove timber for four months, & that this condition was excluded from the signed memorandum because it was contained in the offer of sale by him, & he was told by C. that it was unnecessary to insert it in the memorandum also. The jury found that in allowing this term C. was acting within scope of his authority, but that it was omitted from the memorandum by C.'s fraud, & that A. did not know of the existence of this term of the contract:—Held: (1) there was evidence to support the finding that C. was acting within scope of his authority in authorising B. to remove the timber; (2) the memorandum was not extended to embody the whole of the contract; but if on the contract so limited B. was liable to A., A. was liable in damages to an equal amount to B. for loss caused by the fraud of A.'s

575 ii. — Purchase subject to lease.]—Pltf's. having been recommended by C., their agent, to purchase certain lands, purchased the lands, which were subject to a mining lease for one hundred years, of which pltf's. had no knowledge, & as to which nothing was said in the agreement:—Held: the agent had no authority to buy anything less than the whole interest in the property, & pltf's. were not bound by their agent's unauthorised act.—(GREGG v. FRANCO-CANADIAN MINE CO. (1916), 34 W. L. R. 1102.—CAN.

576 i. — Authority to buy on credit on previous occasions.]—R., representing himself as agent of deft., purchased goods from pltf's. for defts., pltf's. taking in payment a draft drawn by R. on defts. payable to pltf's. & pltf's. shipped the goods to defts. & placed the draft in the bank for collection. Defts. accepted the goods & paid the draft. Two other sales were made & settled in a similar manner. The drafts were on special forms of defts., furnished by defts. to R. Upon pltf's. making a further similar sale & shipment defts. refused the draft & returned the draft, asserting that R. had no instructions to purchase them:—

m. — Managing estate—Principal benefited by purchase.]—Pltf. sued deft. for price of doors supplied to an estate bungalow. The doors were supplied upon the order of L., who at the time managed the estate for deft., then absent in England. Deft. disputed his liability on the ground that his name did not appear in the contract or receipts for the doors, those documents having been signed by L., who was managing the estate, but held no power of attorney or legal authority to incur debt. It was not disputed that the bungalow was built with the authority of deft., who resided there; nor was it disputed that the doors were necessary:—Held: when a person takes advantage of the management of his affairs by another he must fulfil the engagements which that other has contracted in his name, provided such engagements be within the proper limits of the manager's authority & be for the benefit of the estate.—(KOORA v. ROBINSON (1867), 2 Agra Mls. 2.—IND.

COPE* (1883), Cab. & El. 63.

582. Agent of seller—Held out by buyer as his agent.]—G., foreman of pltf., a lithographic printer, employed by him to get orders for printing, being desirous of publishing certain maps & other works for himself, agreed with deft., a publisher, to supply maps, etc., to him to be sold on commission. He entered an order as from deft. in pltf.'s order book. Maps & other goods were supplied to deft. from pltf.'s premises, some of them accompanied by delivery notes requesting deft. to receive the goods from pltf. Receipts to the same effect were signed by deft. Pltf. made out an account amounting to £108, charging deft., & handed it to G., who showed it to deft. Deft. accepted bills for part of the amount of this account & gave the balance in cash to G., who handed the cash & bills to pltf. Other goods being supplied, pltf. sent the invoice of them to deft., charging him with the price. Deft. applied to G. for an explanation, & on being told by G. it was a mistake, took no steps to inform pltf. The jury found deft. did not authorise G. to use his name in ordering the goods, but from the manner in which deft. had acted pltf. believed he was selling the goods to deft.:—Held: deft. liable to pltf. for the price of the goods.—*CORNISH v. 583. Bankrupt—Authority from assignee to carry on business for creditors.]—A bkpt. carried on the business of a coachmaker for the benefit of the creditors, as their agent, under the authority of the assignee, & ordered goods in his own name, which were used in the business:—Held: the assignee was liable for goods bought for the use of the business.—KINDER v. HOWARTH (1818), 2 Stark. 354.

584. Broker—Authority to buy on certain terms—Substantial compliance.]—In an action for goods sold, a letter from defts.' broker announcing to his principals a purchase on their account, on certain terms stated, & from which they did not dissent:—Held: evidence of a precedent authority to purchase, not merely on precisely the terms stated, but upon terms not unusual nor unreasonable, & in substance the same.—CAMPBELL v. HICKS (1858), 28 L. J. Ex. 70.

585. — Purchase on other terms.]—A., in London, authorised B., a broker in Liverpool, to buy goods for him on certain terms. B. bought the goods on terms which so far differed from the authority as to omit a stipulation contained in the authority, & to express one not therein mentioned; both these were stipulations which would have been by custom annexed to the contract, unless expressly excluded:—Held: as the effect was the same as if the contract had been made in the very words of the authority, it was within scope of the broker's authority to make such a contract binding on the principal.

If a broker has authority to enter into a contract, & he does so according to the usual terms of the business in which he is engaged, the principal is bound, unless the person with whom the broker contracts has notice of the broker's limited authority (BYLES, J.).—HEYWORTH v. KNIGHT (1864), 17 C. B. N. S. 298; 4 New Rep. 288; 33 L. J. C. P. 298; 10 Jur. N. S. 866; 144 E. R. 120.

586. — Authority to buy under supervision of agent—Agent's authority revoked without notice.]—P. & Co. employed L. as broker to buy imported goods for them "under superintendence of A." L. dealt with A. above a year, there being an unbroken series of transactions, & all payments & receipts passing between A. & L. & no interference made by P. & Co. P. & Co. opened no account with L. in their books & agreed with A. to give him half profits:—Held: (1) L. had a right to infer that A. was either a partner of B. & Co. or their general agent; (2) if A. was agent, L. was entitled to notice that A.'s authority was determined.—POLE v. LEASK, No. 1, ante.

587. — Usage—Wool market.]—Pltfs. employed defts. as brokers to buy wool in the Liverpool wool market, & defts. bought from A. The bought note sent to pltfs. ran, "Bought of A. for account of B. & Co." (pltfs.), etc.; but the sold note sent to A. ran, "Sold for you to our principals," etc. Pltfs. did not know their names had not been given to A. Defts. paid A. for the wool, of which pltfs. had the benefit, & to an action by pltfs. on the common counts pleaded a set-off by money paid for their use:—Held: (1) notwithstanding the variance between the bought & sold notes, evidence was admissible to establish a custom for brokers in the Liverpool wool market to give sellers the names of their principals or their own names at their option, & in the latter case not to communicate the fact to their principals; (2) pltfs. must be taken to have authorised defts. to contract according to this usage; (3) the set-off was admissible.—*CROPPER v. 588. — Tallow market.]—A custom in a particular market that a broker who has purchased, & is purchasing, goods of a particular kind, in his own name, may take portions of those goods & supply them to principals who have employed him in his character of broker to buy such goods for them, is one of a peculiar nature, & cannot be supported as against a principal not proved to have been acquainted with it when he gave his order.

R., a merchant in Liverpool, gave orders to a tallow broker in London to buy certain quantities of tallow for him. The broker did not buy the specified quantities from any person, though he sent bought-notes in the usual form, "Bought of A. on your account": both before & after the order he bought from various persons, in his own name, larger quantities of tallow, proposing to allot to R. the quantities R. had desired to be bought. On R.'s refusal to accept, the broker sold the tallow, & brought an action for the differences:—Held: though the evidence showed such a mode of dealing to be the usage in the London tallow market, the action was not maintainable against a principal who did not appear to have had knowledge of its existence.—*ROBINSON v. 589. Brother acting for brother—Correspondence amounting to authority.—Pltf. having entered into a contract with C., brother of deft., for sale of some hay, brought an action against deft. for not accepting. There was evidence that C. was acting as agent to his brother in the course of his dealing. The judge at the trial admitted letters & telegrams signed by C. as evidence against deft., & the jury found for pltf. :—Held: (1) there was sufficient evidence of the authority; (2) two telegrams, of which one was signed in C.'s name, & in the other the name of deft. was not mentioned as buyer, together constituted a sufficient memorandum of contract to satisfy Stat. Frauds, on the ground that deft. might be treated as the undisclosed principal of C., who appeared on the telegrams to be liable as principal.—McBLAIN v. CROSS (1871), 25 L. T. 804.

590. Child—Implied authority from relationship—Father's liability for debt.—The moral obligation a father is under to provide for his child imposes upon him no liability to pay the debts incurred by the child, & he is not so liable unless he has given the child authority & has contracted to pay them. A father who gives no authority & enters into no contract is no more liable for goods supplied to his son than a brother, or an uncle, or a mere stranger would be (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).—MORTIMORE v. 591. Employee—Holding out.—Applt. had been in the habit of personally ordering goods from resps., & he had an employee, C., who had no authority to order goods. Applt. dismissed C. & the latter subsequently obtained goods from resps. on the representation that applt. had sent him for them. When applt. was paying resps.' account he did not notice the items for these articles & he paid the account in full. A second account containing charges for further articles fraudulently obtained by C. in the name of applt. was looked over by applt.'s clerk, but was not properly checked, & applt. paid it in full. Applt. claimed to recover back from resps. the sum overpaid :—Held: applt. was entitled to recover the sum, as he had not held out C. as his agent & there was no estoppel.—BAILEY & WHITES, LTD. v. HOUSE (1915), 31 T. L. R. 583, D. C.

592. Factor—Habitually buying one kind of goods—Purchasing different kind of goods.—If one be factor for a merchant to buy one kind of stuff, as tin, or other such like, & the factor has not used to buy any other kind of wares but this kind only for his master, if now the factor buy sales or other commodities for his master, & assume to pay money for that, the master shall be charged in an assumpsit for the money, & for that let the master take heed what factor he makes.—PETTIES v. SOAM (1601), Gouldsb. 138; 75 E. R. 1049.

593. Manager of business—Authority to superintend & transact business under control of board.—A co. established for manufacture of glass, registered under Cos. Act, 1844 (c. 110), had power under a clause in its deed of settlement to appoint a manager of its works & factories to "superintend & transact, under control of a board of directors, the manufacturing business of the co.," to whom the board of directors was by another clause authorised to delegate "such & so many of the powers thereby given to them as would enable him to carry on the works & manufacturing business in an efficient manner":—Held: the co. was liable for goods supplied to it for purposes of its manufactures upon orders given by such manager, although there was no express delegation of authority, since such orders fell within scope of his authority.—SMITH v. 591 i. Employee—Authority as such.—It is not within reasonable scope of the authority of an assistant in an indigo factory to purchase any amount of indigo seed for his master & to make his master liable, particularly when the seed is not purchased or used for the factory; & though the assistant, in writing to the vendor for the seed, style himself in the body of the letter as the manager of the concern, yet his signing himself for another person, & not for the owner of the factory, discloses to the vendor that the other person, & not the owner of the factory, is his principal.—ROGOORUDYAL MUNDUR v. 594 ii. ——By an agreement between G., the proprietor of an hotel, & M., the occupant, it was acknowledged by M. that the whole furniture & effects in the hotel belonged to G., & he agreed to transfer to G. the licence for the hotel. from the term immediately preceding the agreement, & M. agreed to account to G. for the stock in the hotel as at a certain date. The licence was thereafter transferred to G. Subsequently goods were supplied to M. for the purposes of the hotel on his order, & by a firm who were in ignorance of G.'s connection with the hotel. 594 iii. ——Pltf.'s claim was for goods sold to P., who had been carrying on business as a general trader, but shortly before sale had made a transfer of his stock-in-trade & other property to deft. in trust for creditors. Pltf. was unaware of the transfer, & sold the goods as he had frequently done before the transfer, believing that P. was still the principal & not an agent, as deft. had left him in charge of the business & employed him to carry it on on his behalf, in accordance with instructions to be received. pound, & A. himself the remainder. A. continued to manage the business in the shop for B., B.'s wife occasionally going there, & B.'s name appearing over the door. One of A.'s creditors applied to him at that shop, & pressed for payment of his share of the composition. A. offered a bill of exchange in payment, on which B.'s name had been put, but without his authority, as indorser, & as the amount exceeded the amount due for composition, A., & B.'s wife, who was then in the shop, proposed that goods should be supplied to the shop for the amount of the balance, which was agreed to, & goods were sent to the amount of the balance. The bill having been dishonoured, B. was sued, & pleaded that he never indorsed the bill, & no notice of dishonour had been given to him; the jury found both those issues in his favour. Evidence was given that B. had held himself out as responsible for all goods supplied at that shop. The jury found that A. had a general authority to buy goods for B., & that pltf. did not sell the goods on the credit of the bill alone, but on the credit of B.:—Held: the value of the goods sent was recoverable on a count for goods sold & delivered in the action against B.—ROSE v. EDWARDS (1836), 1 M. & W. 734; 1 Tyr. & Gr. 975; 2 Gale, 123; 5 L. J. Ex. 268; 150 E. R. 629.

595. ———.]—Deft. had a jeweller's shop at Lewes, he residing near London; the business at Lewes was managed by A., who, by deft.'s authority, was in the habit of giving orders at Lewes, verbally & by letter, for goods to be sent to the shop; & A. had given such orders to pltf., who resided in London, & who had, in compliance with them, sent goods to the shop, which deft. had accepted. A. absconded from the shop, came to London, verbally ordered goods, consisting of jewellery, of pltf., as for deft., & took them away, saying he was going to Lewes:—Held: (1) upon these facts, a jury might find deft. had so conducted himself as to make pltf. believe that A., whilst in deft.'s employment, had authority to order goods as he did; (2) on such finding, pltf., not having had notice of the termination of the authority, would be entitled to recover the price from deft.—SUMMERS v. SOLOMON (1857), 7 E. & B. 879; 26 L. J. Q. B. 301; 3 Jur. N. S. 962; 5 W. R. 660; 119 E. R. 1474.

598 i. Manager of farm—Authority as such—Holding out.]—Pltf. sued for $38.15, price of goods sold & delivered.

Deft. was owner of a farm, of which M. was lessee, on terms of having half the crop & use of machinery, keeping it in good repair & leaving it as good as he got it. The goods supplied were for repairs to the machinery. During deft.'s absence his wife received the accounts sent in by pltf., but did not bring them to his notice, but deft. knew that M. was pledging his credit, & on one occasion came in & paid for repairs, while M. was in pltf.'s store selecting goods:—Held: deft. permitted M. to hold himself out as his agent & was estopped from denying liability.—Hepworth v. Knight, 32 L. J. C. P. 298; Brazier v. Camp, 63 L. J.

H. being about to erect a factory for the purpose of carrying on the business of manufacturing explosives under the name of deft. co., appointed a manager to have sole charge of the business. The manager's office was used as the office of the co. The manager without express authority from H. entered into a contract for the purchase by the co. from pltf.s. of all the co.'s "requirements" of nitric & sulphuric acid, estimated at 500 & 750 tons respectively, during 12 months from date of the contract. The manager gave notice to pltf.s. to deliver 15 tons under the contract. The co. never started business, & the undertaking was abandoned by H. within the 12 months. Acceptance of the 15 tons was refused. In an action by pltf.s. against the co. for breach of the contract to purchase 500 & 750 tons:—Held: (1) the manager had been held out by H. as having authority to enter into the contract; (2) the contract was binding on H.; (3) by the contract the co. had only agreed to buy such acid as might be required; (4) none having been in fact required, there had been no breach, except as to the 15 tons for which H. was liable.—BERK & Co., LTD. v. INTERNATIONAL EXPLOSIVES CO. (1901), 7 Com. Cas. 20.

598. Manager of farm—Holding out.]—Where cattle had been sold by pltf. to A., & it appeared at the time of sale that A. managed deft.'s farm; that he had always his money in hand, & he had then to the credit of his account more than the value of the cattle; that deft. had never authorised him to buy on credit; that he had sometimes bought for deft. & sometimes for himself; that the cattle had been paid for by bills drawn on A. which had been dishonoured when due, afterwards renewed by pltf.:—Held: (1) it was sufficient to leave it to the jury to say whether the cattle had been sold on the credit of deft. or of A.; (2) it was not necessary it should be left to the jury to say whether pltf. at the time of sale was aware A. was acting as agent of deft.—EDWARDS v. 599. Manager of public-house—Authority as such—Secret limitations.]—The ordinary rule of law that a principal is liable for the acts of his agent within the authority usually confided to an agent of that character, notwithstanding secret limitations upon that authority, applies also where the existence of any principal is unknown to the person contracting with, & giving credit to, the agent alone.

H., owner of a public-house, sold it to defts., who retained H. as manager at a salary, his name being over the door & the licence continuing in his name. Pltf., who knew nothing of defts., sold cigars to H. for the use of the public-house. H. had been expressly forbidden by defts. to purchase cigars on credit. Being unable to obtain payment from H., to whom alone he had given credit, pltf., finding H. was manager to defts., sued them:—Held: (1) as the cigars were such as would usually be dealt in at such a house as defts.', H. was acting within scope of his implied authority as manager in ordering them; (2) defts. could not as against pltf. set up

600. — Authority to buy from certain persons — Purchase from other persons.]—The licensed owner of a public-house is not liable for spirits supplied to the person whom he left in possession of the premises as manager of the business, although the invoices are made out in his name, if he has only authorised such manager to deal with particular persons, & the spirits were not supplied by one of them. In such case there is no evidence of liability on the owner's part to be left to the jury.—DAUN v. SIMMINS (1879), 41 L. T. 783; 44 J. P. 264; 28 W. R. 129, C. A.

601. — — — — —.]—Defts., owners of an hotel, appointed a manager of it; the licence was taken out in the name of the manager, whose name also appeared over the door. The manager had been told by defts. to order spirits from a certain brewery (with which plffs. were in no way connected) & from no other place, but, in contravention of his instructions, the manager ordered whisky from plffs. Plffs., who did not know that defts. had prohibited the manager from buying spirits from any other place than the particular brewery, supplied whisky to the manager at the hotel & gave credit to him only. Upon discovering defts. were the real owners of the hotel, plffs. sued them for the price of the whisky.—Held: plffs. were entitled to maintain the action, as there was no presumption, where a person dealt with the licensee of an hotel & knew nothing of the real owner, that the licensee was a mere manager with limited authority, & that the hotel was tied.—KINAHAN & Co. v. PARRY, [1910] 2 K. B. 389; 79 L. J. K. B. 1083; 102 L. T. 826; reversd. on ground of no agency in point of fact, [1911] 1 K. B. 459, C. A.

Pltf. supplied goods for the necessary working of the mine on the orders of a resident agent appointed by the directors to manage the mine, which was the customary course in such concerns.—Held: deft. was liable to pltf. for the price of such goods, notwithstanding the statements in the prospectus & certificates, unless it was shown that the agent had in fact no authority from deft. & that pltf. had notice thereof.—HAWKER v. BOURNE (1841), 8 M. & W. 703; 151 E. R. 1223; sub nom. OATEY v. BOURNE, HAWKEN v. BOURNE, 10 L. J. Ex. 361.

603. — — — — —.]—Deft. was a shareholder & also secretary of a mine conducted on the cost-book principle, under which the mine agents made monthly or quarterly estimates of the money required to carry on the business, & raised the amount by calls on the shareholders. It was also the practice when sufficient funds were not forthcoming to obtain goods on credit; & deft. had, as secretary, entered the order for goods. The question was left to the jury whether the captain had authority to pledge the credit of the shareholders for goods which were necessary & the jury gave a verdict for pltf.—NEWTON v. DALY (1858), 1 F. & F. 26.

604. — Holding out.]—Deft. advanced money to G., who was engaged in getting up a co. to work a mine in Cornwall, receiving as a security a deposit of 250 shares in the mine, with an option to take the shares in satisfaction pro tanto, such option to be declared within 14 days. Deft. never in terms declared his option to accept the shares; but he went down to the mine, made inquiries & obtained reports as to the condition & prospects of the mine & as to the cost of an engine to be used there, & on one occasion assisted in paying the miners' wages; he also permitted the captain of the mine, in his presence, without contradiction, to represent him as a capitalist from London who had a large interest in the mine, & intended to work it vigorously. In an action by a person who had supplied goods to the mine upon the faith of representations by the captain that the mine was being worked by a person of substance whose name he was not authorised to give:—Held: the above was evidence from which the jury were warranted in inferring that deft. was a partner, although his name was never mentioned, personal identification being sufficient.—MARTYN v. GRAY (1863), 14 C. B. N. S. 824; 143 E. R. 667.

605. Mistress—Express authority not revoked.]—A. authorised B. to supply goods from time to time upon A.'s credit to a woman, with whom A. cohabited, & who was known by B. not to be A.'s wife:—Held: A. was liable for goods supplied to the woman after a separation between them, no notice being given to B. determining the agency of the woman in binding A.'s credit.—*RYAN v. 606. Newspaper editor—Authority implied from resolution at meeting at which he was appointed.]—Where at a meeting held at B. resolutions were passed for the purpose of continuing publication of a certain newspaper, some of the resolutions being that J. should be appointed editor, & a person found to undertake the printing & publishing, & that the B. committee, or some members thereof & members of some other committee, should give a guarantee to the publisher against loss to the extent of £300, & no guarantee had been given:—Held: (1) the persons present at such meeting gave J. authority to employ a printer & publisher; (2) they were liable for work done by him until such guarantee was given.—WATERLOW v. COTTON (1854), 2 W. R. 502.

607. Parish officers paying interest on vestry debt—Authority from form of document of debt.]—A parish vestry having resolved to borrow money for the purpose of building almshouses, the money was in 1830 advanced by pltf. upon the security of a promissory note payable to him, or bearer, on demand, with interest, & signed by defts. thus:—"J. H., Churchwarden, J. E., overseer, or others for the time being." The interest had been regularly paid by the overseers for the time being up to 1847, but defts. had never paid the interest, or in express terms authorised the parish officers to pay it for them. The defts. having pleaded Stat. Limitations to an action on the note:—Held: it was a question for the jury whether by the form of the note defts. had not constituted the parish officers for the time being their agents for the payment of interest, so as to take the case out of the stat.—*JONES v. Pltf. having purchased the shares:—Held: (1) deft.'s order was not an authority to buy in a falling market; (2) as

No rent was due at the time of the authority thus given. Pltf. had paid for the beer. In an action for wrongful distress, on the ground that the promised allowance had not been made:—Held: (1) the agent had no authority to borrow money, or to get others to pay for

o. —Ordering goods.]—A wagoner, without being authorised by his employer, ordered oats, etc., for his employer's horses:—Held: the fact that these goods were supplied to the wagoner for his employer's horses did not make the employer liable for the price.—Wright v. Glynn, [1902] 1 K. B. 745, fold.—BARY & Co. v. BRYANT (1906), 26 N. Z. L. R. 232.—N.Z.

p. —Express authority to prepare lease—Ordering building work.]—An express authority to an agent to prepare a lease of a farm does not give him authority to pledge his principal's credit for the building of a barn or repairing the house.—DUTTON WALL LUMBER CO. v. FERGUSON (1915), 31 W. L. R. 812; 23 D. L. R. 100.—CAN.

q. Book-keeper—Authority as such—Payment for medical services to injured employee.]—GUY v. BRADY, infra.—CAN.

r. Foreman—Holding out.]—A contractor employed A., a person in insolvent circumstances, to execute a portion of the work contracted for, & supplied him with materials for so doing. He took no steps to prevent A. from being considered his foreman, with power to order materials, & a belief to that effect became current in the district. A. having absconded without paying for certain furnishings made by pursuer for the work at which A. was engaged, pursuer sued the contractor for his account:—Held: defender had so acted as to incur liability for pursuer's account.—SMITH v. SCOTT & BEST (1881), 18 So. L. R. 355.—SCOT.

s. Manager of bank—Authority as such—Employing architect.]—The authority of a branch-manager of a bank does not include the employment of an architect to make plans for a new office building.—WOODMAN v. HOME BANK (1915), 33 W. L. R. 917.—CAN.

t. Manager of business—Authority as such.]—Deft.'s son, L., carried on a meat business in the firm name of L. & Co., & pltf. supplied goods to him for that business. Deft., the principal creditor of L., employed S. to manage the business. S. represented to pltf., that deft. would be responsible for future goods supplied for the business, & that he, S., would see pltf. paid, & he then ordered more goods, which pltf. supplied. They charged these goods to L. & Co., & not to deft.:—Held: the facts did not warrant the inference that S. had any authority to order goods from pltf. on deft.'s credit.—GORDON v. JEARV (1908), 7 W. L. R. 533; 17 Man. L. R. 383.—CAN.

u. —Payment for medical services to injured employee.]—Deft. carried on a business managed by A., there being also a bookkeeper, B., at the mill. A workman in deft.'s employ at the mill having been injured, A. & B. employed pltf., a surgeon, to attend him:—Held: such engagement was beyond scope of their duties as agents, & deft. was not bound by it.—GUY v. BRADY (1885), 24 N. B. R. 563.—CAN.

v. ——.]—In an action brought to recover compensation from deft. co. for surgical attendance rendered by pltf. at request of deft., general manager to an employee,

w. Manager of mine—Authority as such.]—The manager of deft.'s mine ordered from pltf. material for the construction of a boarding-house for the accommodation of men employed in connection with the mine:—Held: (1) the erection of the boarding-house appearing necessary for the efficient operation of the mine, the manager had authority to bind deft.; (2) the burden was on pltf. to show authority on the part of the manager to pledge the credit of deft. for material supplied to a third person, such power not being within apparent scope of his authority.—MILLER v. COCHRAN HILL GOLD MINING CO. (1896), 29 N. S. R. 304.—CAN.

x. Provincial Secretary of Government—Assent of colleagues, but no authority by Order in Council.]—The Provincial Secretary of Quebec, with the assent of his colleagues, but not being authorised by Order in Council, wrote to D. saying that the Govt. was going to vote a sum for certain work with which D. would be intrusted, & that the money would be paid to any bearer of the letter to whom D. indorsed it:—Held: the Provincial Secretary had no power to bind the Crown, & the letter was no contract between D. & the Govt.—JACQUES CARTIER BANK v. R., 25 S. C. R. 84.—CAN.

after mentioned, went on to provide that B. was to continue the erection of the houses, & purchase materials, etc., for the purpose, & give the whole of his time thereto; that deft. should from time to time provide the necessary moneys; that as soon as B., under his agreement with E., should become entitled to the lease of the houses, he should procure the leases to be granted to deft., but B. & deft. should be deemed in equity tenants in common of the premises; that when the leases in question should be obtained the premises comprised in them should be let or sold, & the proceeds of such letting or sale should be brought into account between B. & deft.; that deft. in such account should be credited with all moneys advanced, & if B. should use any of the materials, etc., purchased for the purposes of the agreement for any other purpose, he should in such account be debited with same; that the account should from time to time be balanced & the balance of profit or loss there appearing should be equally divided between B. & deft.; that B. should draw 40s. per week for his personal requirements, & be debited in the account when the houses should be finished, & the residue of materials, etc., should be deemed the joint property of B. & deft.; that an account should be opened at the bank in the joint names of B. & deft., on which either party might draw for purposes of the agreement. B. purchased materials, etc., for the houses in question on credit. In an action for the price of same, Brett, J. ruled that the above agreement did not make B. & deft. such partners in the erection of the houses as to authorise B., without more, & did not otherwise authorise B., to pledge deft.'s credit for the materials, etc., thus purchased. On a bill of exceptions to the above ruling:—Held: (1) the direction was wrong; (2) the agreement did authorise B. to pledge deft.'s credit for the price of the materials, etc., in question.—NOAKES v. BARLOW (1872), 26 L. T. 136; 20 W. R. 388, Ex. Ch.

614. Co-adventurers in mining company.]—The members of a mining co. have authority by law, in absence of proof of a more limited authority, to bind each other on dealings of credit for the purpose of working the mines, if that appears to be necessary or usual in the management of mines.—TREDWEN v. BOURNE (1840), 6 M. & W. 461; 9 L. J. Ex. 290; 4 Jur. 747; 151 E. R. 493.

Annotations:—Consd. Barnett v. Lambert (1846), 15 M. & W. 489; Ricketts v. Bennett (1847), 4 C. B. 686. There is nothing in Tredwen v. Bourne that is inconsistent with the proposition that the degree of authority is to be judged by the nature of the concern & the mode in which it has been carried on (WILDE, C.J.). Expld. Re Bradbury, Exp. Emery (1854), 4 De G. 615. Commercial traveller—Custom.]—There is no general custom authorising a commercial traveller to bind his principal by contracts for vehicles on credit, & a traveller has no implied authority so to pledge his principal's credit, especially where there is an express agreement by the traveller to pay his own expenses.—JOHNSTON v. READING (1893), 9 T. L. R. 200, D. C.

616. Commission merchant—Authority to purchase goods on joint account with foreign principal.]—There is a presumption that a foreign principal does not give the English commission merchant any authority to pledge his credit to those from whom the commission merchant buys on his account.

H. F. & Co. were merchants in London, & deft. was a partner in the firm of H. B. & Co., carrying on business at Rangoon. Goods were supplied by pltf. to H. F. & Co., on their order given in consequence of an arrangement between the two firms, as disclosed in letters, that H. F. & Co. should "purchase" & send out goods on "the joint account" of the two firms, 2 per cent. to be charged on the invoice by the London firm, & 5 per cent. by the Rangoon firm, including guarantee. Pltf. had no knowledge of deft., or that the Rangoon firm were in any way interested in the transaction, until after the goods were supplied:—Held: deft. was not, as an undisclosed principal, a party to the contract under which the goods were supplied by pltf., for, on the true construction of the correspondence, the Rangoon firm did not give authority to the London firm to establish privity of contract & pledge their credit with the English suppliers of the goods.—HUTTON v. BULLOCK (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 572; 30 L. T. 648; 22 W. R. 956, Ex. Ch.

617. Company promoter—Holding out.]—Deft., chairman of the directors of a proposed co., signed with his initials a prospectus which was approved by the directors, & resolutions that the prospectus should be printed were passed & signed by deft. W., who was not a director or officer of the co., took the prospectus to pltf., & ordered him to print it, stating he had authority to give the order, & pointing out the initials of deft. The resolutions were not shown to pltf., but copies of the prospectus, when printed, were delivered at the offices of the proposed co., & deft. saw them in use there; it was proved that some of them were circulated by deft. There was an arrangement between the directors & W. that he should pay all preliminary expenses, but this was not communicated to pltf.:—Held: this was evidence for the jury that deft. had given express or implied authority to pledge his credit for the price of the printing.—RILEY v. PACKINGTON (PACKINGTON) (1867), L. R. 2 C. P. 530; 36 L. J. C. P. 204; 16 L. T. 382; 15 W. R. 746.

618. Manager of fête—Authority from appointment as such by stewards.]—On a programme for a jubilee fête the names of two of defts. appeared as stewards, & the name of P. as "general manager." P. ordered tents & flags from pltf. for use at the fête. On the programme was a statement that the stewards reserved the right of altering the programme, that five should form a quorum, & tents would be provided. At the fête defts. took an active part. Pltf. sent in his bill to the stewards. The stewards stated that everyone providing things for the fête would be paid:—Held: (1) there was evidence on which the ct. judge might find that P. was authorised to pledge the credit of defts. for the tents; (2) they were liable.

There is a broad distinction between acting stewards, such as those mentioned, & provisional committeemen, who only lend their names (WILLS, J.).—PILOT v. CRAZE (1888), 52 J. P. 311; 4 T. L. R. 453.

619. Manager of ship—Appointment as agent.]—In an action for repairs to a ship ordered by a manager, the owner is liable if he has in fact made the manager his agent, although he has never held him out as his agent.—TYNESIDE ENGINE WORKS Co. v. GOLDSMITH, No. 308, ante.

620. Matron of hospital—Authority as such.]—Where the matron of a hospital orders meat for the use of the hospital, it is to be inferred that in so doing she acted under the direction of the managing committee, & the managing committee intended to bind itself for payment.—REAL & PERSONAL ADVANCE Co. v. PHALEMPIN (1893), 9 T. L. R. 569, C. A.

621. Mercantile correspondent of foreign house—Usage.]—A merchant in England, correspondent of a foreign house, is not, by mercantile usage, authorised on that ground only to pledge the credit of the foreign house for goods bought by him on their account in England.

A. & Co., American merchants, were indebted to B. & Co., of Paris, & C. & Co., of London, & being pressed for payment by B. & Co., remitted funds to C. & Co., who paid & overpaid them, with a direction to remit the balance to B. & Co. in Paris. In order so to do, C. & Co. bought in London, in the ordinary course of business, a bill on Paris, drawn by D. & Co. to the order of C. & Co., to be remitted at once to Paris, but to be paid for by C. & Co. on the next foreign post-day. The bill was so remitted, but before the next foreign post-day C. & Co. failed, & thereupon D. & Co. refused to pay the bill. B. & Co. were afterwards paid by A. & Co. in full. In an action by B. & Co. on behalf of A. & Co. against D. & Co. on the bill:—Held: plffs. were entitled to recover; for if the action were to be considered personally theirs, they were holders for value of the bill; & if not theirs, but really the action of A. & Co., C. & Co. were only correspondents of A. & Co. to remit the bill, & not their agents to pledge their credit for the price of the bill. —POIRIE v. MORRIS (1853), 2 E. & B. 89; 22 L. J. Q. B. 313; 17 Jur. 1110; 1 W. R. 349; 1 C. L. R. 429; 118 E. R. 702.

622. Part-owner of ship—Authority as such.]—A part-owner of a ship has no general authority to bind his co-owners for repairs. It is a question of fact whether a part-owner has given another part-owner authority expressly or impliedly to pledge his credit for repairs. A part-owner does not require to give express notice that he will not be liable for repairs ordered by another part-owner in order to exonerate himself from liability. —BRODIE v. HOWARD (1855), 17 C. B. 109; 25 L. J. C. P. 57; 26 L. T. O. S. 91; 1 Jur. N. S. 1209; 4 W. R. 44; 139 E. R. 1010.

624. Railway police inspector—Authority as such—Supplies for injured in accident.]—Certain persons injured by a collision on defts.' ry. line were carried into pltf.'s inn, partly by the help of the station-master. A., a sub-inspector of ry. police for the district, whose duty it was to attend on the spot where an accident occurred, being at such place & time the superior of all station-masters & other servants of the ry. co., ordered some brandy to be given to one of the injured persons, & in reply to a question of pltf.'s as to who would pay for the maintenance of the injured persons, replied, "Don't trouble yourself about that; we'll see that all is right." Pltf. having brought an action against the ry. co. for board, lodging, necessaries, & goods supplied to the injured persons:—Held: there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury in support of pltf.'s claim, & to prove the authority of A. to pledge the credit of the co. for board, etc., supplied to the persons injured (the question of quantum not being raised). —LANGAN v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1873), 30 L. T. 173, Ex. Ch.

625. Railway servant—Authority as such.]—It is not within the implied authority of a ry. guard, station-master, or other servant of a ry. co. to bind the co. by contracts for surgical attendance on injured passengers; & the co. is not liable for such attendance without evidence of express authority to employ the surgeon. —*COX v. 2. Railway inspector of work—Authority as such—Ordering goods.]—Pltf., acting under a written contract for the delivery of stone for the piers of a bridge which defts. were building on their line of railway, delivered the amount, & was paid by defts. therefor, as well as for an additional quantity & some sand subsequently ordered by the inspector. The inspector then ordered pltf. to deliver some more stone & sand. On observing, however, that defts. had stopped work on the bridge, pltf. ceased delivering. He was paid for what had been delivered up to that time. On the work being renewed, & on being ordered by the inspector to continue delivering, he delivered further stone & sand. Defts. then refused to pay for the latter delivery:—Held: there was sufficient evidence of authority on the part of the inspector to bind defts. —O'BRIEN v. CREDIT VALLEY RY. CO. (1875), 25 C. P. 275.—CAN.

625 i. Railway servant—Authority as such—Payment for medical services.]—Where a person has been injured by a railway accident, the highest official of the co. on the ground has authority to bind the co. for the cost of such medical services & attendance as may be immediately requisite. —GAUDREAU v.

625 ii. — Authority to employ doctor for one visit only—Subsequent visits.]—A station-master employed for a servant of the co. injured on the railway a doctor, who attended him for a long time. A rule of the co. gave the co.'s officers express authority to employ a doctor for a first visit only & provided that station agents would be responsible for making the doctor acquainted with this regulation:—Held: the co. not liable for fees after the first visit, & even if the doctor were not made aware of the rule he could not imply an authority of the agent to employ him. —*MONTGOMERY v. (signed) by B., C." pursuer averred that he had lent money to D. on the security of this obligation, that C. was defender's manager, & was in the practice of granting such obligations in the name of B., for the purpose of enabling D. to raise funds:—Held: C.'s authority could not extend to an obligation of this kind ex facie gratuitous unless there were (1) special assent by B., & (2) specific explanation as to how the obligation was entered into. —HAMILTON v. DIXON (1873), 11 Sc. L. R. 39; 1 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 72.—SCOT.

orders of S., by plffs., merchants at L., who knew nothing of C. In an action by plffs., C. said he had no partnership with S., & S. had no authority from him except to sell, & not to buy:—Held: though not partners, C. & S. were jointly liable: S. as holding himself out as a partner, & C. as real principal.—*KIRKWOOD v. 641. ——Deft. employed a coachman under an arrangement whereby the coachman was to be paid a weekly sum including the cost of foraging deft.'s horses. The coachman ordered forage for deft.'s horses from plff. without mentioning the arrangement, & plff. supplied forage for several months, giving credit to deft. Deft. duly paid the agreed weekly sums to his coachman, & did not know from whom he ordered forage:—Held: (1) the mere relation of master & coachman did not of itself involve as a matter of law ostensible authority on the coachman's part to pledge the master's credit for forage supplied for his horses; (2) there was no evidence of a holding out by deft. of his coachman as having such authority.—WRIGHT v. GLYN, [1902] 1 K. B. 745; 71 L. J. K. B. 497; 86 L. T. 373; 50 W. R. 402; 18 T. L. R. 404, C. A.

642. Trustee agent for co-trustees—Authority to buy for business carried on by trust.—Defts., mother & son, as trustees under a will, were joint owners of a business which, by trusts of the will, was carried on by the mother as agent for the trustees. The mother employed the son to purchase goods for purposes of the business which were paid for by the son at time of purchase by cheques bearing the signatures of mother & son as drawers. In an action for the price of goods sold & delivered by a person who on previous occasions had received these cheques in payment:—Held: there was evidence that the son was held out by the mother as having authority to pledge their joint credit.

B. Provisional, Managing, and other Committees.

(a) Provisional Committees.

i. Authority of Committee to pledge Credit of individual Members.

643. General rule.]—In an action against ry. provisional committee-men, under contracts entered into by the committee:—Held: to render defts. liable, it was necessary to prove not only that they were members of the committee, but that they knew it to be still in operation, & that the expenses incurred were reasonable & usual.—BARRETT v. BLUNT (1846), 2 Car. & Kir. 271.

644. —.]—The bare fact of a consent to join a provisional committee is evidence to go to the jury of authority given to the rest of the committee to pledge defts.'s credit.—COOPER v. LAMB (1846), 8 L. T. O. S. 278.

645. —.]—In an action by the solr. of an intended co. for preparing its co-partnership deed, a person may be liable without being one of the directors. The persons who are directors are liable; other persons may be liable also, if they interfere in the management & hold themselves out as persons giving the order: in such case the question will be, whether such persons as were not directors so acted as to become employers of the solr. in preparing the deed.—BELL v. FRANCIS (1839), 9 C. & P. 60.

646. —.]—A member of a provisional committee of a ry., or other joint-stock co. not completely formed but in course of formation, is not liable for any acts or expenses not done or authorised by him. By consenting to be a provisional committee-man he only testifies his approbation of the scheme, & that he will concur in such acts as he may approve of in order to carry it into effect. By such consent he does not make himself liable to be sued for contribution to expenses he has not sanctioned, nor does he thereby give any authority to the rest of the committee to bind him by their acts. A committee-man is not liable for the acts of his fellows, the law not implying from his mere consent to be a provisional committee-man either an authority from him to make contracts by those other committee-men, or by the solrs. to the committee, or to the solrs. to make contracts on behalf of the committee; but merely a promise to act with those others to carry the scheme into effect. The publication of the prospectus with his name makes no difference.—Re WOLVERHAMPTON, CHESTER & BIRKENHEAD JUNCTION RY. CO., NORRIS v. COTTLE (1850), 2 H. L. Cas. 647; 6 Ry. & Can. Cas. 317; 15 L. Cas. 674; Great North of England & Yorkshire & Glasgow Union Junction Ry. Co., Carrick's Case (1851), 17 L. T. O. S. 209.

647. — Debt incurred before membership.]—A member of a committee, formed for the purpose of promoting an improvement bill in Parliament, is not liable to the solr. of the committee, for work done by him for the committee as such solr., before he became a member of the committee.—BREMNER v. CHAMBERLAYNE (1848), 2 Car. & Kir. 560.

648. S. P. BARKER v. GODDED (1850), 14 L. T. O. S. 374.

649. — Each liable for his own acts.]—The transactions of a body of persons, associated to form a co. which ultimately turns out to be abortive, are not entire, as in the case of a partnership, but are rather a series of transactions affecting only the parties severally acting therein, & for which the members of the body are liable piecemeal. They are not partners, nor are they agents for each other with respect to all matters properly done for the formation of the co. Each in law is liable only for his own acts, whether express or implied. A., B. & C. may be liable to the engineer; D., E. & F. to the parliamentary agent; G. & H. to the advertising agent; & so on.—Re HARBOROUGH & WATLINGHAM RY. CO. & WOLVERHAMPTON, WALSALL, LEICESTER, PETERBOROUGH, NORWICH & GREAT YARMOUTH JUNCTION RY. CO. (1850), 16 L. T. O. S. 297.

650. — Proper question for jury.]—In an action for goods sold & delivered against a member of the provisional committee of a projected ry. co. it is a proper direction to the jury that if deft. had held himself out to the world or to pltf. as one of the directors of the proposed co., or knowingly suffered others so to do, & pltf. has given credit to him, & if the goods are such as might reasonably be required for purposes of the co., & if the person who gave the order had authority so to do, pltf. is entitled to a verdict.—PHILLIPS v. COLLINS (1846), 8 L. T. O. S. 116.

651. —.]—In actions by tradesmen against individual members of a provisional or managing committee for work done or goods supplied to a proposed co., the proper question to be decided by the jury is, whether deft. either personally or by his authorised agent entered into a contract with pltf. for the goods or services in question. A person by merely becoming a provisional committee-man incurs no liability; but his consenting to become so may be important, if it be shown that in so doing he knew of & authorised the incurring of expenses necessary to the formation of the co. & that the goods & services sued for were so necessary. A person by acting on a provisional committee may authorise an agent to issue orders on his credit, without giving or intending to give him any direct authority to that effect; & it is immaterial whether deft. in acting as he did intended to pledge his individual credit or whether pltf. knew who were the particular per-

643 i. General rule.—Pleading.]—In an action by solrs. employed by the provisional committee of a projected railway, & whose employment had been recognised by several members of the committee, against the other members of the committee who repudiated all connection with the employment, concluding that defenders were conjunctly & severally liable for the account due to pursuers:—Held: no averments had been made relevant to support the conclusions, although it was set forth that all defenders had, without objection, allowed their names to be used & set forth as members of the provisional committee; & although, in regard to one defender, it was set forth that his name was put on the committee at his own request, & that for some time he attended meetings & advised & acted in favour of the scheme as freely as any other member of the committee, there being no statement, however, of the business done at any of the meetings at which he was present, or that he had been present at any meeting at which the employment of pursuers was authorised.—CAMPBELL v. LAUDER (1852), 15 D. 117; 25 Sc. Jur. 81.—SCOT.

649 i. — Each liable for his own acts.]—In an action brought against members of a provisional committee of the projectors of a railway, which was never carried into effect, by the secretary & law-agent, for payment of his accounts:—Held: in order to render a committee-man liable, it was not enough that he acted as such, but it was necessary to aver & prove a separate & special contract of employment on his part, in regard to the pieces of business sued for.—M'EWAN v. CAMPBELL (1857), 29 Sc. Jur. 222; 19 D. (H. L.) 12; 2 Macq. 499.—SCOT.

sons forming the committee. A previous authority to the agent to contract on his behalf may be inferred from the subsequent conduct or admissions of deft., but to render him answerable by reason of such admissions they must appear to have been made from a consciousness of a legal personal liability to pltf. in respect of the particular demand, & not merely from a desire by paying a proportion of the demand to prevent litigation or from a misconception of the law as to the liability of provisional committee-men merely as such. If it appears that pltf. in supplying goods & performing services looked only to the deposits as a fund from which payment was to be made, he has no cause of action against individual members of the committee.—BAILEY v. MACAULAY (1849), 13 Q. B. 815; 19 L. J. Q. B. 73; 14 Jur. 80; 116 E. R. 1475.

652. Attendance at meetings—Debt incurred during period of attendances.—A member of a provisional committee of a joint-stock co. having signed the consent to act, & attended & taken part in the proceedings, is liable for debts incurred by & on behalf of the committee during the period he was a member, but not for contracts made & debts incurred previous to his becoming a member thereof.—BARNETT v. BURDETT (1846), 6 L. T. O. S. 326.

653. ———.—In an action by a solr. against provisional committee-man upon his bill, it appeared that B. was instructed by the committee, at a meeting at which deft. was not present, to write to pltf. for his bill, that the bill was received by B. at his house, & laid before the committee more than a month before action brought at a meeting attended by deft., when B. was instructed to write to pltf. asking what deductions he would make:—Held: a sufficient delivery of the bill as against deft.—EGGINGTON v. CUMBERLAGE (1847), 1 Exch. 271; 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 113; 2 New Pract. Cas. 456; 16 L. J. Ex. 283; 10 L. T. O. S. 113; 11 Jur. 932.

654. ———.—Deft. had authorised a friend to add his name to a provisional committee; he attended several preliminary meetings during the period of the insertion of certain advertisements by order of other members of the committee. Deft. personally gave no orders. The board was formed, & deft. became a member of it, but did not attend until after the date of the last order in the account for which the action was brought. Upon these facts:—Held: deft.'s liability was established.—CHAPMAN v. LAMBERT (1847), 8 L. T. O. S. 371.

655. — Debt incurred before period covered—Consent to join given previously.—It is a question for the jury whether the fact of attending a meeting of a projected ry. co. in the character of provisional committee-man is sufficient evidence of a liability for goods ordered & supplied to the co. previous to that attendance, there being also evidence to show that deft. had consented to become a member of the committee before the goods were ordered, & that the goods were necessary for purposes of the co.—WARRINGTON v. LAMBERT (1848), 10 L. T. O. S. 414.

656. Name inserted in prospectus—Withdrawal at first meeting.—In an action to charge deft. as a provisional committee-man, it appeared that his name was inserted in the prospectus, but there was no evidence as to the authority by which it was placed there; he had once called at the co.'s office & asked for a prospectus, but there was no evidence that he knew his name was in it; & on a claim being made against him, he had replied that he retired from the first meeting of the concern, as to which meeting there was no evidence:—Held: pltf. must be non-suited.—PARRATT v. BLUNT & CAENFORT (1847), 9 L. T. O. S. 103; 2 Cox, C. C. 242.

ii. Authority of individual Member to pledge Credit of other Members.

657. General rule.—One member of a provisional committee cannot bind another member so as to render him liable for orders he may give.—BAILEY v. STEVENSON (1847), 8 L. T. O. S. 368.

658. — Proper question for jury.—In an action by a surveyor against one of the managing committee of a ry. co. for surveying the line, pltf. was employed by one of the committee, which appointment was ratified by a resolution of the committee, at which deft. presided:—Held: the question for the jury was whether deft. meant to pledge his own personal credit, or merely the credit of the funds of the co.—HIGGINS v. HOPKINS (1848), 3 Exch. 163; 6 Ry. & Can. Cas. 75; 18 L. J. Ex. 113; 12 L. T. O. S. 245.

661. — Admissibility of evidence.—In an action by engineers against a provisional committee man, pltf. having put in evidence the resolutions of the committee, at which deft. was present, deft. tendered in evidence a resolution made in absence of pltf. to the effect that the committee was not to incur any personal liability:—Held: evidence was receivable for the purpose of showing that the committee-men were not to be personally responsible, & that each member was not to have the power of binding the rest.—RENNIE v. CLARKE (1850), 5 Exch. 292; 19 L. J. Ex. 278; 15 L. T. O. S. 186; 155 E. R. 125.

662. Becoming a member—Work started before but finished after member joining.—In an action for work & labour as surveyor against a provisional committee-man, pltf. claimed an entire sum of £600 for surveying from Sept. 1 to the end of Oct., within which interval deft. joined the scheme:—Held: (1) if pltf. had entered into a single & entire contract to survey the line before deft. joined the co., deft. was not responsible, though part of the work was done after he had joined it; (2) pltf.'s remedy was against the actual contractors.—*TOOTEL v. PART V. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 12.— B. (a) iii.

665 i. General rule.—The mere fact that persons agree to become provisional directors of a co. does not render them liable for goods supplied on the order of the attorney or secretary of the co., & they are not necessarily rendered liable by allowing their names to appear as provisional directors on the prospectus. If it merely states that they are provisional directors they will not be liable. If it represents that the attorney or secretary is not merely to act as such when the co. is formed, but is already appointed to act for such provisional directors, they will be liable for such committee of an intended ry. co. amounts to no more than a promise that he will act with other persons, appointed or to be appointed, for the purpose of carrying the scheme into effect.

In an action against a provisional committee-man for goods supplied on the order of the co.'s solr.:—Held: the law would not imply, from the mere fact of his agreeing to be a member of such committee, an authority from him to the other members of it to make contracts by himself or by the solr., nor an authority to the solr. to make them on behalf of the committee.

If the party not only consents to be a provisional committee-man, but authorises his name to be inserted & published in a prospectus, which merely states the names of the members of the provisional committee, & nothing more, that fact does not alter the liability. If it states the names of an acting or managing committee also, it is a question for the jury to say whether it means that the latter are to take upon themselves the whole management of the concern, or that the former have constituted the latter their agents to manage it on their behalf, in which case the former would be liable for the contracts of the latter. Or, if the solr.'s name were mentioned in it, the question for the jury would be whether it meant that he was to be employed by those of the committee who acted, or that he was already appointed by all whose names were mentioned, as their solr., to do all solr.'s work on their behalf; & further, what was the business then usually transacted by solrs., in such undertakings, on behalf of the co., & the same as to the secretary. Where there is also evidence that deft. has acted with relation to the proposed scheme, it is a question for the jury whether, by his consent & acts, he has authorised the solr., or secretary, or any member of the committee, to pledge his credit for the necessary & ordinary expenses to be incurred in forming such a co.; & if so, whether the work was done, & the credit given, on the faith of his being liable.—REYNELL v. LEWIS, WYLD v. HOPKINS (1846), 15 M. & W. 517; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 351; 16 L. J. Ex. 25; 8 L. T. O. S. 167; 10 J. P. 775; 10 Jur. 1097; 153 E. R. 954.

670. —.]—A provisional committee of a ry. co. is not a partnership, & its members cannot be made liable for the acts of the body or of individuals, or of anyone connected with the co., unless he has done some act to give authority to pledge his credit. If it appears that orders for the work in respect of which an action is brought against a member of a provisional committee of a ry. scheme were given by the projectors, who also induced deft. to become a member of the committee on an indemnity, the questions are whether the projectors had the authority of deft. to pledge his credit, or whether, if the credit was given originally to the projectors, deft. has done any act whereby that credit might be shifted from the projectors to himself.—REYNELL v. LEWIS (1848), 10 L. T. O. S. 424.

672. Acting as chairman when secretary appointed. —]—Deft. had acted as chairman of a provisional committee & had been a party to the appointment of the secretary, who had engaged to look for payment only out of the funds of the co., & who employed pltf. as clerk at a salary:—Held: the secretary was not an agent of deft. for purpose of such appointment so as to render deft. liable to pltf. for the wages so contracted for by the secretary.—WEBB v. LAMBERT (1846), 15 M. & W. 489; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 308; 15 L. J. Ex. 305; 7 L. T. O. S. 186; sub nom. BARTLETT v. LAMBERT, 10 Jur. 410.

He also wrote a letter to the secretary of the co., making suggestions as to the form of the prospectus, & the newspapers in which it should be advertised :—Held : this was no evidence to charge deft. personally for advertisements of the co. inserted by order of the secretary.—BURBIDGE v. MORRIS (1865), 3 H. & C. 664 ; 34 L. J. Ex. 131 ; 12 L. T. 426 ; 13 W. R. 921.

676. Attendance at meetings when orders discussed.]—Deft. joined a provisional committee, & attended many meetings at which the subject of advertising was discussed, & papers containing advertisements of the project lay upon the table ; but it was not shown that deft. was actually present when orders were given to the secretary to advertise in pltf.'s newspaper. Deft. attended a meeting for the appointment of a managing committee, & retired because he was not elected :—Held : these facts were sufficient to raise a reasonable presumption that deft. was cognisant of the advertisements, & sanctioned their insertion by the secretary.—CHAPMAN v. LAMBERT (1846), 8 L. T. O. S. 237.

677. Attendance at meetings of provisional committee—Not member of managing committee.]—Deft. was member of the provisional committee of a projected ry. co., which ceased to act on the appointment of a managing committee. The solr. to the co., who had been appointed by the provisional committee, gave orders for publication of advertisements. Deft. had attended two meetings of the provisional committee, but was not a member of the managing committee :—Held : there was no evidence for a jury that deft. had authorised insertion of the advertisements or that he was liable to pay for them.—COOKE v. TONKIN (1847), 9 Q. B. 936 ; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 704 ; 16 L. J. Q. B. 153 ; 8 L. T. O. S. 387 ; 11 Jur. 304 ; 115 E. R. 1534.

678. Instructing secretary to advertise.]—Deft. & others, as provisional directors of a projected joint-stock co., resolved at a meeting that the co. should be advertised in several newspapers, & directed their secretary to take the necessary steps for that purpose. He applied to an advertising agent, to whom (on his calling at the co.'s offices to inquire under what authority the secretary was acting) he showed the prospectus & the above resolutions :—Held : there was evidence to go to the jury that the directors who were parties to the resolutions were responsible for the debt thereby incurred, notwithstanding they had been induced to allow their names to appear as directors upon the faith of the secretary's assurance that all the preliminary expenses would be provided for by him, & that they would incur no liability, there being nothing to show that the secretary, in giving the orders, or in communicating to pltf's. the resolutions of the directors, had acted beyond scope of his actual or apparent authority as secretary.—MADDICK v. MARSHALL (1864), 17 C. B. N. S. 829 ; 5 New Rep. 250 ; 11 L. T. 611 ; 10 Jur. N. S. 1201 ; 13 W. R. 205 ; 144 E. R. 332, Ex. Ch.

(b) Managing Committees.

i. Authority of Committee to pledge Credit of its Members.

679. General rule.]—A member of a managing committee is not answerable for debts contracted by the committee generally, or by its agents, unless he has by his own acts avowed his responsibility or given special authority to pledge his credit.—LEWIS v. ARMSTRONG (1846), 8 L. T. O. S. 257 ; 11 J. P. 23.

680. S. P. SYMONDS v. MUNTZ (1846-7), 8 L. T. O. S. 237, 344 ; 11 J. P. 9.

681. Appointed without consent—No meetings attended.]—Defts., provisional committee-men of a ry. co., were appointed, but without their consent being obtained, members of the acting committee. Advertisements published to that effect became known to them, but they never attended any meetings of the co. or the committees :—Held : they were not liable for contracts made in their absence.—GRIFFIN v. BEVERLEY (1847), 2 Car. & Kir. 648 ; sub nom. GRIFFIN v. JACKSON & BEVERLEY, 8 L. T. O. S. 416.

682. Attendance at meeting where advertisement resolved on.]—At some of the meetings of the managing committee of a provisionally registered ry. co. at which A., one of the committee, was present, it was resolved that certain proceedings should be advertised. At another meeting attended by four of the body but not by A., it was resolved that a circular should be sent to the members of the provisional committee, which included the members of the managing committee, stating that on payment of £100 each, they should be released from all liability. A. & others paid this amount, & A. never attended any subsequent meeting. Meetings of the managing committee were afterwards held, at which some of these payments were referred to, & the terms of the circular were recognised & acted upon. The co. was wound up, under the Winding-up Acts, & it appeared that one of the provisional committee had been compelled, by proceedings at law, to pay the bill of the advertising agent :—Held : A. was primâ facie liable for some part of the demand, & was not exonerated by his payment of £100, & the subsequent conduct of his co-committeemen, but had been properly placed on the list of contributories.—PEARSON'S EXECUTORS' CASE (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 241 ; 29 L. T. O. S. 254 ; 43 E. R. 95.

ii. Authority of Committee to pledge Credit of Members of Provisional Committee.

683. General rule.]—Where in the case of a projected co., there is both a managing committee & a provisional committee, a member of the provisional committee, who has never taken any part in the management, is not liable for debts incurred by the managing committee. Where a man merely allows his name to be inserted in the list of provisional committee-men, he does not thereby make himself responsible for every act or every liability of a managing committee, unless it is proved that he has acted in the conduct of the concern, or unless it is shown that, when deft. consented to become a member of the provisional committee, he intended to take upon himself all the responsibilities which the managing committee might think proper to incur.—LAW v. WILSON (1846), 7 L. T. O. S. 236.

—[In an action against a provisional committee-man on a contract entered into by the committee of management appointed by the provisional committee, it is a question for the jury whether deft. appointed the managing committee his agent to pledge his credit. Where nothing else appears than that there was a managing committee appointed by the provisional committee, the jury ought not to conclude that the former is agent for the latter to pledge their credit.—WILLIAMS v. PIGGOTT (1848), 2 Exch. 201; 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 544; 17 L. J. Ex. 196; 11 L. T. O. S. 68; 12 Jur. 313; 154 E. R. 464.

689. Attendance at meeting at which managing committee appointed.—Deft. had attended a meeting of a provisional committee at which a committee of management was appointed, by whom orders for insertion of advertisements were given to pltf. Upon this evidence:—Held: (1) deft. was liable for orders given by the managing committee after that day; (2) he was not liable for advertisements inserted before that day, although a member of the provisional committee, having taken no part in the conduct of the concern, or done any act showing authority given to others to pledge his credit.—WOOD v. 691. Attendance at meetings before & after appointment of managing committee.—Deft. was sued as a member of a provisional committee; & attendances by him at the board were proved both before & after the appointment of a managing committee. The question left to the jury was whether deft. had by his acts made himself liable notwithstanding the appointment of the managing committee:—Held: a proper question for the jury.—FLOWER v. ROPER (1848), 10 L. T. O. S. 344.

692. Power given to managing committee to apply funds in paying expenses.—A prospectus issued by a projected co. gave the names of a provisional committee, & also of a committee of management, & one of the clauses of the prospectus empowered the committee of management to apply the funds of the co. for all the expenses incurred in the formation of the co.:—Held: (1) the committee of management were not thereby empowered to pledge the credit of the provisional committee for advertisements inserted in a newspaper; (2) a verdict of a jury to this effect was right.—DAWSON v. MORRISON (1847), 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 62; 16 L. J. C. P. 240; 9 L. T. O. S. 222; 11 J. P. 789.

693. Acceptance of shares & payment of deposit.—A. was a member of the provisional committee of a projected ry. co., which had been provisionally registered, & the affairs of which were put under the authority of a managing committee. He accepted shares, & paid a deposit on them; but did no further act. The scheme was abandoned:—Held: (1) he was not liable to a creditor for business done under the orders of the managing committee towards completing the projected undertaking & converting the assocn. into a regular co.; (2) he was not liable as a contributory under the Winding-up Acts.—BRIGHT v. HUTTON (1852), 3

694. General rule—Acting as chairman.—When persons meet to prepare measures for calling a society into existence, attendance at such meeting, & concurrence in such measures, may be strong evidence that any individual there present held himself out as paymaster to all who executed their orders.

The acts of a nobleman, in declaring his intention to become president, & reading a resolution when presiding, afford material evidence that he authorised contracts for services required by the constituent body, although the general object was a public one. Each case must depend on its own circumstances.—LAKE v. ARGYLE (DUKE) (1844), 6 Q. B. 477; 14 L. J. Q. B. 73; 4 L. T. O. S. 171; 9 Jur. 295; 115 E. R. 178.

696. Church building committee—Contract signed on behalf of building committee.—A church building committee was appointed, of which deft. was a member, & it was resolved to open a subscription list to raise a fund for a new permanent church. Deft. attended a committee meeting at which plans were submitted for approval, when it was resolved that the plan approved of should be accepted, provided a tender could be obtained not exceeding £5,500. Pltf's. tender was accepted, & a contract made between pltf. & R. on behalf of the building committee. The subscriptions proved inadequate to pay pltf. Deft. ceased to attend the committee before the contract was made & never did any act to ratify it, or to authorise any one to pledge his credit:—Held: deft. not liable to pltf. for the money remaining unpaid.—WHILLIER v. ROBERTS (1873), 28 L. T. 668; 37 J. P. 583.

697. Dispensary committee—Goods ordered by members of.—An action may be maintained against the medical officers of a dispensary (who were also members of the managing committee) for drugs supplied for the dispensary on the orders of others of its medical officers on behalf of the committee & with the knowledge of defts., the jury being directed that defts. would be personally liable unless they made pltf's. understand that they were to look only to the funds of the institution.—LUCKOMBE v. ASHTON (1862), 2 F. & F. 705. Annotation:—Fold. Steele v. Gourley & Davis (1887), 3 T. L. R. 772, C. A.

698. Committee of charitable institution—Goods previously supplied & paid for before formation of committee.—A member of a committee of management, taking an active part in the concerns of a charitable institution supported by voluntary contributions, is liable for goods furnished by a tradesman for the use of the institution, although it appears that such tradesman did not furnish them on any contract with the committee, but, having at first furnished goods on the credit of an individual, who, previously to the formation of the committee, had the sole management, continued to send them in afterwards on orders given, as before, by the servants of the institution, without any inquiry as to who was liable to pay him.—GLENESTER v. HUNTER (1831), 5 C. & P. 62.

699. Committee to assist editor—Authority to assist but not to interfere in management.]—Certain persons of whom deft. was one associated themselves together for the publication of a work, under certain regulations, one of which was that a committee (naming them) "should assist the editor in promoting the prosperity & circulation of the work, in obtaining, as far as possible without expense, literary contributions, & in all such matters connected with the work as the editor might require aid in, but not interfere with, the editorial department":—Held: this gave no authority to one member of the committee to contract for articles to be paid for, so as to charge the proprietors.—HERAUD v. LEAF (1847), 5 C. B. 157; 17 L. J. C. P. 57; 10 L. T. O. S. 163; 136 E. R. 835.

700. Election committee—Goods supplied to voters.]—In an action by an inn-keeper against A., one of the committee of a candidate at a contested election, for refreshments supplied to voters, which were in fact ordered through M.:—Held: (1) pltf. was bound, in order to recover in the action, to prove that M. was employed by A. alone, or by A. & others, to give the order, & that A. in so employing M. was not acting as agent for any other person; or else that M. was a principal jointly with A., or with A. & others; (2) it would make no difference that pltf. at the time considered M. as authorised to contract on behalf of the candidate, if in fact he was not so authorised.—THOMAS v. EDWARDS (1836), 2 M. & W. 215; Tyr. & Gr. 872; 150 E. R. 734.

701. Exhibition committee—Work performed partly before & partly after company formed.]—Those who attend a meeting & give authority to an agent are answerable for the order which they have authorised the agent to give.

Early in 1888 defts. & others formed a committee for the purpose of arranging for an exhibition, & on June 23 a co. was incorporated to carry it out. Pltf. did work in connection with the exhibition between March 16 & Oct. 13 on the orders of the secretary. Defts. disputed liability for orders given after June 23:—Held: as no notice of the change of circumstances had been given to pltf. the personal liability of defts. continued.—COLLINGRIDGE v. GLADSTONE (1890), 7 T. L. R. 60, C. A.

702. — Company subsequently formed.]—Defts., six influential gentlemen, desirous to promote an Irish exhibition, procured an overdraft from Messrs. C., bankers, & shortly afterwards opened an account in the name of the Irish Exhibition, which was registered as a co. The exhibition proved financially unsuccessful, & Messrs. C. brought an action against defts. as personally liable for the overdraft. Defts. contended that Messrs. C. did not look to them for payment, & that, in any case, there was a novation of contract on the formation of the co.:—Held: Messrs. C. had contracted with defts. personally & never substituted the co. as their debtors, & defts. were

703. Finance committee of volunteer corps—Holding out.]—The monetary transactions of a volunteer corps were managed by a finance committee of which the colonel was ex officio a member. Orders for goods & cheques were signed by the colonel & two members of the committee, but since a period previous to Feb. 11, 1889 (goods having been delivered between that date & July, 1890), the colonel, owing to illness, had not attended any meeting of the committee & had not been cognisant of any transactions by them:—Held: (1) the colonel as a member of the finance committee must be taken to have intrusted them with the general agency on his behalf; (2) he was liable for goods ordered by the committee, whether he was present at meetings of the committee or not; (3) he had a right to be indemnified by other members of the committee against all but his quota of the expenses.—HEBBERT & Co. v. SILVER (1892), 8 T. L. R. 234.

704. Hospital committee—Work ordered by.]—If a builder do work at an intended hospital on the order of the physician & surgeon, they being announced to deliver lectures there & being members of the provisional committee, such builder is not bound to look solely to the funds of the hospital for payment, but may sue the persons who gave the orders, unless he was distinctly informed that the dealing was to be on the terms of looking for payment to the funds of the hospital only.—*PINK v. 705. Agent—Authority to carry on business as principal.]—If one allow another to trade in his own name, & as carrying on the business for himself, a payment to such person is a good bar to an action by the person so allowing him to trade; & for goods sold in the trade the person so carrying it on may recover, unless the person for whom it is carried on assert his or her own right to the sum due.—*GARDINER v. 706. — Authority to convey goods to salesman.]—A person instructed by the owner to take cattle to a salesman for market has no implied authority (in absence of proof of a custom to pay the servant) to receive proceeds of sale.—LETTICE v. JUDKINS (1840), 9 L. J. Ex. 142.

707. — Authority to invest money—Custody of security.]—A., guardian of D., an infant, authorised B. to invest D.'s money by lending it to C. on C.'s promissory note. The note was not negotiable but was payable to A. "as guardian of" D. one day after date, though A. gave an undertaking not to call up the money without giving 3 months' notice. B. kept possession of the note, & drew the interest, & gave receipts for same, but subsequently, without A.'s knowledge, asked C. to dispense with the 3 months' notice, & pay up the principal, which C. did on getting the note delivered up & B.'s dis-

712. — ———.]—An agent authorised to sell goods has (in absence of advice to the contrary) an implied authority to receive proceeds of such sale. 713. — ———.]—A contract in writing was made between A. on behalf of B. for the sale of lands to C., and payment of the purchase-money was to be made at a future day. Before that day A., the solr. & general agent of B., applied to C. for payment of part of the purchase-money to him,

708 i. — Authority to obtain orders.]—Deft. had bought goods of pltf. through pltf.'s agent who came to deft. to take an order. The goods were delivered to deft. by the agent accompanied by a signed invoice of pltf., upon which was written, "Pay no account without my written authority." Afterwards the agent of pltf. came to collect the amount due for the purchase, & deft. said that he would pay him upon an order or receipt of pltf. The agent came back with an account receipted & signed with the name of pltf., & deft. paid him. The signature of pltf. was forged, & the agent was not authorised to receive payment of the account:—Held: deft., having been warned not to pay without an order signed by pltf., should have assured himself that the signature presented to him was really that of pltf., & the latter was entitled to recover the amount of the account.—GIBARD v. 711 i. — Authority to sell.]—Where a principal makes out & sends to an agent for sale an account against the purchaser for the amount of the sale made by the agent, & the agent presents the account to the purchaser with a request for payment, the purchaser is justified in assuming that the agent has authority to receive payment, & if he pays the amount to the agent the principal will be estopped from denying that the agent had authority to collect.

Where an agent has authority to receive a portion of an account, & same is paid to him & credit given therefor by the principal, the debtor is justified in assuming that the agent has authority to receive the balance unless he knew of the limitation of the agent's authority or was subsequently notified that he was not authorised to receive same.—KAESTNER v. 711 ii. — ———.]—O. was pltf.'s agent to sell & sold waggons to defts., who gave promissory notes for the price. In an action on the notes defts. pleaded payment to O., who they alleged was the agent of pltf. to collect the amounts of the notes, & it was proved that many persons had previously paid O. money & that pltf. had received money from O. from time to time as it had come into his hands, but it was not shown that defts. knew of this last circumstance, so as to be led by it to make payments to O. O. had not remitted to pltf. the money paid to him by defts.:—Held: pltf. being the legal holders & having the notes in which application C. complied with; afterwards C. entered into a sub-contract for sale of the purchased lands to W. & sought to have paid him by W. that part of the purchase-money which he had already paid to B.'s agent & solr. in the transaction:—Held: the general agency of A. on behalf of B. did not justify payment to him by C. of part of the purchase-money agreed to be paid originally by C., & C. had no claim against W., nor any lien on the lands sold, for the amount paid by him to the agent of B. on the original purchase.—COTMAN v. ORTON (1840), 10 L. J. Ch. 18; 5 Jur. 142.

714. — Form of plea.]—An agent employed to sell goods has no authority as such to receive payment. A plea to an action for goods sold, that they were sold by D. as apparent principal, & bought by deft. from him as such, & on D.'s own account, & without notice that he was agent merely, & that deft. paid D. before notice that he was agent, but not alleging that D. was a factor, or that pltf. authorised him to represent himself as the principal or to receive or hold himself out as entitled to receive payment, is bad.—DRAKEFORD v. The note was left in the hands of an agent (clerk of the society), for the purpose of selling the share:—Held: (1) the agent had no authority, before the transfer was so completed, to receive the money of the purchaser & to insert his name in the blank unknown to the proprietor; (2) if the purchaser pays the money before the time of payment, when the transfer from the proprietor was complete, he pays it at his own risk to the agent, whom he thereby makes his own for that purpose.—*PARNTHER v. 733. —Authority to receive principal & interest—Waiver of notice before redemption.]—By deed securing an annuity which A. had granted to B., who resided abroad, power was given to A. to redeem the annuity upon paying a certain sum of money, giving B. six months' notice in writing. C., B.'s general agent in England, received the redemption money from A., & delivered up to him the annuity deed without the notice required by the deed, & B. had no notice whatever that the money was about to be paid. C. had a general authority to invest & also to receive principal moneys as well as interest for B.:—Held: C. had authority to waive the stipulation as to notice, & to receive the redemption money as he did for B.—WEBBER v. GRANVILLE (1860), 30 L. J. C. P. 92; 7 Jur. N. S. 420.

734. Managing clerk of attorney—Holding out.]—Where the managing clerk of attorneys had, without their knowledge, received money for the purpose of investment:—Held: the question was (in absence of any actual authority) whether they had held him out as having authority so to receive it on their behalf.

It requires a special authority, beyond that of a mere managing clerk, to entitle him to receive money, so as to bind his employers, for the purpose of investment. It does not matter that plffs. believed he had such authority. The question is, did defts. hold him out, or allow him to hold himself out, as having such authority (EARLE, C.J.)—CORNELIUS v. HARRISON (1862), 2 F. & F. 758.

735. Insurance company's agent—Authority expressly limited—Notice to third party.]—In 1853 R. effected a life policy with the N. Society, premiums being payable half-yearly. In 1857 the N. Society transferred its business to the A. Co., & when R. paid at the branch office the next half-yearly premium, he received a printed receipt, stated to be issued for the A. Co., "with which was incorporated the business of the N. Society." At the foot of this receipt was a printed memorandum that no receipts were valid unless printed, signed by the secretary & issued from the London office. On paying a subsequent premium to the branch office R. accepted a written receipt signed by the local agent only, & not issued from London:—Held: (1) the former receipt was a notice to R. of the only form of receipt that was valid; (2) the second payment was nothing more than a payment to the agent personally & not to the co.; (3) the policy lapsed by reason of non-payment of premium when due.

Although a general agent may bind his principal as to third persons, notwithstanding the principal may have limited his authority, this rule does not apply where the limit of the agent's authority is known to the persons dealing with him (TURNER, L.J.)—*TOWLE v. A portion of the goods was paid for & delivery obtained in the usual way. As to the remainder, the broker, on behalf, but without the knowledge, of deft., paid the delivery clerk & obtained delivery without any order from plffs. Plffs., a year subsequently, discovered that the delivery clerk had embezzled the money paid to him:—Held: they were entitled to recover the balance of the price of the goods from deft. in an action for goods sold & delivered.—*MACKENZIE LYALL v. Subsequently pltf. repaid the loan to Y., without getting back the bond, which deft. kept himself & did not entrust to Y.:—Held: the payment to Y. did not conclude deft.—HENN v. 739. ——— Scrivener retaining security.]—A. entrusted a scrivener with money for investment, & the scrivener lent it on bond in A.'s name & handed the bond to A. The scrivener received the interest & called in the principal. The obligor paid the scrivener, & took a note from him for delivery of the bond. The scrivener got the bond from A. on giving a note either to give back the bond or pay the money. Before the money was paid, the scrivener failed:—Held: A. could not enforce the bond, since he had trusted the scrivener, not only with the putting out of his money, but with custody of his security.—ABBINGTON v. ORME (1691), 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 145; 21 E. R. 946.

740. ———.]—Pltf., having an annuity granted to her & her heirs out of the excise or customs, & having occasion to borrow a sum of money, procured the same of R., a scrivener, who was employed to let out money for defts., & gave him £100 for procuration; the security given for it was out of this annuity, a proportion whereof was set apart, to be yearly applied towards this debt, till the whole principal & interest were discharged. R. had received £2,900 for the use of defts. & gave his receipts & had accounted to defts. for above £1,700, but about £1,100 remained in his hands unaccounted for, & he died insolvent; & the only question was, whether this loss should fall upon pltf. or defts. It appeared that R. was agent for defts., not only in this but in other affairs, & that he transacted this matter on their behalf, save the writings executed, & paid the money lent, & that the money was appointed to be paid at his house, & that the writings were left with him, & apparently continued at his house:—Held: the loss ought to fall upon defts., & not upon pltf., who for all that appeared was an utter stranger to R. before the borrowing of this money.

If a bond is left with a scrivener, that is sufficient for him to receive the principal & interest, & the delivery up of the bond is a sufficient discharge to him that pays it. But if a mtge. were left with a scrivener, this is a sufficient authority to him to receive the interest, but not the principal; & the delivery up of the mtge. by him is no sufficient discharge to the mtgor., because the estate ought to be reassigned; which cannot be done but by the party himself (TREVOR, M.R.).

There is no reason for this difference; in equity it would be all one, the money being really paid to the person who had the deeds in his custody (WRIGHT, Lord Keeper).—CLEVELAND (DUCHESS) v. DASHWOOD'S EXECUTORS (1701), Freem. Ch. 249; 22 E. R. 1189.

741. ———.]—If one trusts his _____ (who puts out money for him) with the custody of his bond, & the scrivener receives the money & delivers up the bond, the obligee is barred as against the obligor for ever; but it is otherwise in the case of a mtge. because a legal estate is vested, & cannot be divested without assignment.—MARTYN v. KINGSLEY (1702), Prec. Ch. 209; 24 E. R. 102.

742. ———.]—A., having borrowed from B., through C., a scrivener, £100 on a bond which was handed over to B., paid the interest for several years to C. & also £50, part of the principal, which C. paid over to B. A. paid the remaining £50 to C., who failed before paying it over to B.:—Held: not a good payment.

If the person to whom the security is made trust his security in the hands of the scrivener, payment to the scrivener is good; but if he take his security into his own keeping, payment to the scrivener will not be good, unless it can be proved that the scrivener had authority to receive it. In this case the scrivener received the interest & part of the principal & paid it to the obligee; that does not imply that he had any authority to receive it. As long as he paid it over all was well, & anyone else might have carried it to the principal as well as he (TREVOR, M.R.).—WOLSTENHOLM v. DAVIES (1705), Freem. Ch. 289; 22 E. R. 1217.

744. Traveller—Employed to sell but accustomed to receive payment.]—Notice to third parties as to manner of payment.]—Where limitations are placed on the authority of an agent or traveller, the extent of those limitations must be brought home to the customer's mind if he is to be bound by them.

Appls. employed a traveller for the sale of their goods. The statements of account intimated to customers that cheques were to be crossed. In some cases a special crossing with the names of the bank & of the payees was requested. The traveller in some cases received payment in the form of cheques payable to himself, & in another case in the form of notes & gold. He fraudulently appropriated the money so paid. In an action by appls. for the money so paid to the traveller by resps.:—Held: resps. were not liable to pay the money the second time, as they had not, when they made the original payments, been informed that neither cash nor any payment save in the prescribed form would be accepted.—INTERNATIONAL SPONGE IMPORTERS, LTD. v. 746. Agent—Custom.—An agent authorised to receive payment has ordinarily authority to receive it only in cash. If the payment had been by cheque, then it might be a question for the jury, since it is the custom to pay by cheque, whether the payment would be good or not (BLACKBURN, J.).—WILLIAMS v. EVANS (1868), L. R. 1 Q. B. 352; 35 L. J. Q. B. 111; 13 L. T. 753; 30 J. P. 692; 14 W. R. 330.

747. —Entrusted with document of title to be delivered on payment.—A tenant, restrained by terms of his lease from assigning without the consent in writing of his lessor, applied to lessor for leave to assign, who signed a licence to assign, & handed it to an agent with instructions not to part with it until he got payment of the rent then due from the tenant. The agent, in presence of the intending assignee, handed over the licence to the tenant on receipt of a cheque, drawn by the tenant to the order of the agent, for the rent & his professional charges, & the assignment was then completed. The cheque was dishonoured:—Held: (1) the agent being entrusted to hand over a document of title as well as to receive payment, there was no general usage authorising him to take a cheque in payment in lieu of cash; (2) as the cheque was for charges as well as rent, it was not in a form in which it could be handed over to the principal; (3) the agent was responsible to his principal for the rent.

748. Clerk—Authority to receive money paid over counter.—Goods were left by pltf. in the warehouse of E. & Co., at H., for sale. Deft., who resided in London, purchased a parcel of the goods, & remitted the price to pltf. Deft. having afterwards purchased more goods, received a letter from T., clerk of E. & Co., inclosing an invoice & purporting to be written by E. & Co., by the procurement of pltf., stating they were authorised by pltf. to receive payment for him, & requesting deft. to remit the money to them. Deft. remitted the amount by cheque, inclosed in a letter addressed to E. & Co., which was delivered at their counting-house; but T. intercepted the letter, & appropriated the money to his own use. T. had authority from pltf. to receive money paid over the counter for goods sold in the warehouse, but in no other way:—Held: the receipt by T. was no payment to pltf.—KAYE v. for certain jewellery he had purchased at pltf.'s shop, by a cheque drawn in favour of, & handed to, a shop assistant. The assistant had authority to cash by a cheque drawn in favour of pltf. Steward—Authority to admit to copyhold—Crossed cheque for fine.—Deft. having purchased a copyhold in a manor, of which pltf. was lord, the steward appointed C., deft.'s solr., deputy steward to admit. Some time after admittance, deft. sent C. a crossed cheque including the amount of the fine. This cheque C. paid into his bankers, & they, having got the cash for it, kept the money, as C.'s account was overdrawn. Pltf. sued for the fine:—Held: (1) whether C. was originally authorised to receive the fine, whether his authority continued to the time of actual payment, & whether he received under such authority, were questions of fact; (2) as on the facts of the particular case there was evidence for the jury in the affirmative, the ct. could not interfere with its so finding; (3) taking this finding as correct, the payment by a crossed cheque eventually cashed was good against pltf., though such cash was afterwards kept by C.'s bankers.—BRIDGES v. Theatrical booking agent—Authority to let seats.—By a verbal agreement an agent of pltf. contracted with an agent of defts., whose business was a theatrical agency for sale of theatre tickets, that defts. should let certain seats erected by pltf. in consideration of an agreed rate of commission. Nothing was said by either party as to whether payment for seats was to be in cash or whether credit should be allowed. Pltf.'s town clerk saw cheques being taken by defts. at their stand & made no protest. An action was brought claiming from defts. the price of seats sold by them, but for which they had not been paid:—Held: (1) there was no custom, usage of trade, or habit of dealing in this case to give credit; (2) the general rule applied, & the agents had only authority to receive payment in cash; (3) cheques must for such purpose as this be considered as cash.—WESTMINSTER CITY CORPN. v. A. became bkpt.; B. & Co. disavowed the transaction, & called upon C. for payment; C. refused to pay, alleging he had already paid the broker, & brought trover for the goods against B. & Co.:—Held: (1) as B. & Co. had suffered their broker upon some occasions to draw bills in his own name, without mention of them as his principals, they were bound by the payment which had been made to him by C. in the present case; (2) the action well lay against B. & Co.—TOWNSEND v. An account was afterwards settled between B. & C. whereby, after giving credit for moneys paid on account of the purchase, & a private debt of £550 due from B. to C., a small balance appeared due on account of the purchase-money, which balance C. then paid to B. A., in ignorance of the arrangements between B. & C., executed the conveyance, & signed a receipt for the whole purchase-money; these were handed over by B. to C.:—Held: (1) the arrangement for setting off B.'s private debt was invalid; (2) C. was still liable to A. for the £550.—YOUNG v. Thereafter transfer of the lot, containing an acknowledgment that the purchase price had been paid, was passed to deft. D. failed to settle with the co., & deft. with knowledge of this fact took no proceedings against him & allowed him to leave the country without discharging the debt:—Held: (1) the arrangement between D. & deft. did not constitute a payment to pltf's.; (2) in all the circumstances deft. was not entitled to raise the defence that D. by virtue of the general power held by him had authority to enter into the arrangement as to payment.—HEYMAN & NAPIER v. The agent debited purchaser's account & credited the vendors' account with the amount, & he rendered to vendors an account, charging himself with that sum as received from purchaser:—Held: (1) this was not a valid payment to vendors; (2) they had still a lien on the estate for part of the money lost by the agent's bkpcy.; (3) the facts that vendors had executed the conveyance & signed a receipt, which remained in the hands of the common agent of vendors & purchaser, & that purchaser had been admitted to the copyhold estate & obtained possession, did not vary the case.—WROUT v. DAWES (1858), 25 Beav. 369; 27 L. J. Ch. 635; 31 L. T. O. S. 261; 4 Jur. N. S. 396; 53 E. R. 678. Annotation:—Distd. Wall v. Cockerell (1860), 29 L. J. Ch. 816.

774. Broker—Authority to sell goods.]—A. having purchased goods of B. through a broker, paid the broker for them, partly by an advance on his general account with the broker before delivery of the goods, & partly by cash on a settlement of accounts after delivery. The broker did not pay over the money to B., & became bkpt. In an action by B. to recover from A. the price of the goods except so much as had been paid in cash:—Held: it was a question of fact for the jury whether payment to a broker in advance was a good payment as against the principal, depending on the usage of the trade.—*CATTERALL v. The fact of the sale of the stock was not discovered by C. for several months, when X. was insolvent; & no part of the proceeds of sale was received by C.:—Held: (1) defts. were not relieved either by the transactions between them & X., or by the fact that C. was a foreign principal, from liability; (2) judgment must be given for the proceeds of the stock with interest at 4 per cent.—*CROSSLEY v. S. never paid the balance to pltfs., but absconded & was declared bkpt.:—Held: (1) in the circumstances deft. must be taken to have had notice that the shares were not the property of S.; (2) though S. had authority from pltfs. to receive the proceeds of sale, payment to him, by giving him credit in an account between him & deft., was not sufficient to discharge deft.; (3) deft. was liable for the balance.—*PEARSON (PIERSON) v. On Oct. 20, 1888, pltf. executed the transfer, which expressed that the money was paid, & handed the transfer & title deeds to the solrs., they undertaking either to return them or pay the money. Pltf. did not make any inquiry till Feb. 5, 1889, the solrs. telling him so much notice was required. On Feb. 22, the solrs. handed over the deeds & transfer to defts. On Mar. 15, the solrs. filed their petition in bkpcy. Defts. never paid the money in cash to the solrs., but they set off in their books part of a sum owed by them to defts. In an action by pltf. against defts., seeking for payment of the money which was the consideration of transfer, or to have his mtgo. & other deeds back again:—Held: (1) defts. ought to have paid the solrs. in cash & were not entitled to set off a debt due to them from the solrs.; (2) there had been no negligence on pltf.'s part; (3) the deed was an escrow until defts. had paid the money to the solrs. in cash.—*COUPE v. Stockbroker.]—Pltf., who lived abroad, being owner of a sum of Consols, gave to defts., a firm of stockbrokers in London, a power of attorney appointing one of defts. his attorney to sell the Consols. The power of attorney was sent originally to pltf.'s brother in England, & by him to C., a country stockbroker. C. sent it to defts., who were his London agents. Defts. sold the stock & credited C. with it in his account with them, & the sum went in reduction of sums due to them by him, or sums paid to C. by them. C. became bkpt., & pltf. sued defts. for proceeds of sale of the Consols, less commission:—Held: (1) defts. liable to refund the money to pltf., as the crediting it in their account with their country client C. was not a payment to pltf.; (2) though the power of attorney to sell came to them through C., defts. not entitled to treat pltf. as a foreign principal, or so to act as if C. only were their principal.—CROSSLEY v. MAGNIAC, [1893] 1 Ch. 594; 67 L. T. 798; 41 W. R. 598; 9 T. L. R. 126; 3 R. 202.

either by plea or by stat. that payment by dividend warrant was a usual manner of payment:—Held: the payment was not a good payment.—PATRIDGE v. BANK OF ENGLAND (1846), 9 Q. B. 396; 15 L. J. Q. B. 395; 8 L. T. O. S. 195; 10 Jur. 1031; 115 E. R. 1324, Ex. Ch.

783. Agent receiving payment subject to condition—Employed to collect bill from acceptor.]—

Where an agent is employed by the holder of a bill to receive payment from the acceptor, & receives payment from him clogged with a condition without assent to which the holder is not entitled to retain the money paid, the agent is not entitled to treat such conditional payment as if it were an absolute payment, & to cancel the bill as paid before he has received the assent to the condition.

The agent of a bank offered to try to obtain payment of a bill which had been protested for non-payment, & the holders accepted the offer. The acceptors offered to pay the bill & the protest charges on condition they should not be called upon to pay interest & expenses. The bank's agent communicated this condition to the holders, & without waiting for authority took payment of the bill & protest charges, marked the bill paid & delivered it to the acceptors, who deleted their names thereon. The holders intimated their refusal to agree to the conditions on which payment had been made, refused to accept the sum tendered to them by the agent of the bank, & received back the bill cancelled. They raised an action against the acceptors for the amount of the bill, with interest, & for expenses of the action, & obtained a decree, but the acceptors became bkpt. The holders thereupon raised an action against the bank concluding for the amount of the bill, with interest, & for expenses of their action against the acceptors:—Held: the bank was liable, but entitled to assignment of the rights of holders against drawers of the bill.—BANK OF SCOTLAND v. DOMINION BANK, TORONTO, [1891] A. C. 592, H. L.

As A. & Co. had no account of their own with J. & L., but through the medium of R. & Co., of Liverpool, & as their agents had been in the habit of paying moneys of A. & Co. at the house of the London bankers of R. & Co.:—Held: the direction of A. & Co. to their agents to pay for "our account" was sufficiently complied with by a payment made to the account of R. & Co., as the agents had been in the habit of doing.—BREED v. GREEN (1816), Holt, N. P. 204.

786.—Instructions to offer part of debt for whole.]—Deft.'s agent had instructions to offer claimant part of the debt in discharge of the whole; claimant refusing to take the money on those terms, the agent paid it in part discharge:—Held: this was not a part payment by deft. to take the case out of the operation of Stat. Limitations, as it was outside the agent's authority.—LINSELL (LINLEY) v. BONSOR (1835), 2 Bing. N. C. 241; 132 E. R. 95.

787. Partner—Carrying on partnership business after dissolution.]—W. & B., partners, were employed by X. as his solrs. & general agents to receive moneys for him from time to time & apply them according to his directions. By a dissolution deed of June 1, 1866, it was agreed that W. should retire from the firm, & the business should belong exclusively to B.; & B. covenanted to pay out of the partnership assets, or out of his own moneys, all debts due from the partnership, & also to pay W. a moiety of the profits made by B. between June 1 & Dec. 31, 1866. B. thereupon continued to act alone as X.'s solr. & agent from June 1, 1866, to X.'s death in 1870, & W. shortly after the date of the dissolution deed advanced various sums to B. to enable him to pay the partnership debts. At the date of the deed a considerable sum was due to X. from the partnership, & in reduction of the debt B. on July 20, 1866, gave X. a cheque drawn in his favour by B. for £300, which was paid on the following day out of moneys standing to B.'s credit at his banker's, though B. was at that time in embarrassed circumstances. A bill was filed on July 20, 1872, by X.'s residuary legatee, to compel W. to pay the balance of the debt:—Held: (1) the debt was barred by Stat. Limitations & Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856 (c. 97), s. 14; (2) there was no evidence that B. was acting as W.'s agent in paying the £300; (3) the bill must be dismissed.—WATSON v. WOODMAN (1875), L. R. 20 Eq. 721; 45 L. J. Ch. 57; 24 W. R. 47.

788.—Authority to apply remittances for specific purpose.]—E., carrying on business on his own account in America, & being also a partner in the firm of T. & Co. in England, drew bills on T. & Co., which he employed T. & B., another American firm, to sell for him, undertaking to provide T. & Co. with remittances to meet them at maturity. T. & B., in accordance with their usual course of dealing with E., indorsed the bills & sold them, giving to E. bills on their agent in England for the amount. E., being on the eve of insolvency, sent the bills so received from T. & B. to the English firm of T. & Co., with instructions to accept the bills drawn by himself & to hold the remittance for the purpose of meeting payment. On receipt of the remittance T. & Co. accepted the bills drawn by E., & disregarding instructions, handed the bills of T. & B. to L., in accordance with a previous promise made to him, in order to enable him to meet some liabilities incurred by him on behalf of T. & Co.:—Held: (1) these bills were specifically appropriated by E. to meeting the bills drawn by him; (2) T. & Co. had received the remittances as agents of E., who had remitted them in a character distinct from his partnership in the firm of T. & Co.; (3) T. & Co. had no authority to apply the remittances to any other purpose than that directed; (4) L., who was held on the evidence to have had notice of the specific appropriation, was bound to account to T. & B. for the proceeds; (5) the above transaction did not amount to a voluntary preference by E. in favour of T. & B.—THAYER v. LISTER (1861), 30 L. J. Ch. 427; 4 L. T. 50; 9 W. R. 360.

789. Agent for maker of promissory note—Instructions to pay both principal & interest.]—In an action by the indorsee's exor. against the maker of a promissory note pltf., in answer to a plea of Stat. Limitations, proved payment of interest by deft.'s agent within six years; deft. swore the agent had received from him both principal & interest to be paid to testator, & contended that the agent had no authority to pay the interest only, & that the unauthorised payment was no evidence of a new promise by deft.:—Held: (1) the agent was not the less authorised to pay the interest because he was authorised also to pay the principal; (2) the agent paid the interest quid interest; (3) pltf. was entitled to recover.—HALL v. THORNTON (1852), 19 L. T. O. S. 184.

790.—Discounting the promissory note.]—Deft. in order to obtain an advance of money gave a promissory note to H., a customer of *pltf.*s., bankers. H. indorsed the note to *pltf.*s. on obtaining the money, & they debited him with the amount. Deft. was debited with the amount by H., who had paid interest on the note to *pltf.*s. within six years. Shortly after the loan was made the money was repaid H., as appeared in an account given by H. to deft., but H. neglected to redeem the note:—Held: (1) the mere discounting of a bill gave no authority to pay interest; (2) after the loan was repaid any authority to pay was revoked; (3) the action being brought more than six years afterwards, the payments by H. did not take the note out of the Act as against deft., H. not being his agent for that purpose.—HARDING v. EDGE-CUMBE (1859), 28 L. J. Ex. 313.

791. Agent repaying mortgage—Authority to collect rents & make payments.]—Pltf. at request of M., her solr., lent to deft. £200 on security of his bond. M. was also deft.'s solr., & was accustomed to receive his rents, & make payments on his account. Pltf. applied to M. for payment of the bond. M., who was then indebted to deft., borrowed the amount from a bank, with which he deposited the bond as a security, & with the money so borrowed paid the bond. Deft. had no knowledge of this transaction. M. afterwards died insolvent, & the bank sued deft. on the bond in pltf.'s name:—Held: there was no payment of the bond by deft.

The bond was not discharged, since payment was not made by the obligor or any person authorised by him (BRAMWELL, B.).—LUCAS v. WILKINSON (1856), 1 H. & N. 420; 26 L. J. Ex. 13; 5 W. R. 197; 156 E. R. 1265.

o. — Authority to pay off mortgages—Agent applying balance to pay other debts.]—Where a notary receives part of the purchase price of land & proceeds to pay off certain mtgs. affecting it, & with the balance of the moneys, but without express authorisation therefor, pays other debts of the seller, he will be held to the reimbursement of such other debts for exceeding his powers.—MALO v. ARCHAMBAULT (1917), 52 Que. S. C. 363.—CAN.

ity to do so, to repay pltf., out of the first money received on A.'s account, anything pltf. might be pleased to advance to A. A. gave deft. this authority: "Please to pay (pltf.), the sum of £20 by four instalments, namely, £5 each quarter, from my estate, commencing from Sept. 29, 1852, until Sept., 1853; & should any money be owing by me to her after that time, please to pay same way as above"—Held: the authority was not confined to payment of the £20, but authorised the payment of further advances made by pltf. to A.—HORLOR v. CARPENTER (1857), 3 C. B. N. S. 172; 27 L. J. C. P. 1; 140 E. R. 705.

793. Agent to sell securities & reinvest—Possession of proceeds.]—A person who takes money from another in discharge of a debt is not bound to inquire how the money was acquired, & is entitled to retain it in discharge of the debt. Nor is the knowledge that the money has been received, by the person paying it, on account of other persons, sufficient of itself to prevent payment from being good in discharge of the debt. When a broker or other agent intrusted with possession & apparent ownership of money pays it away in the ordinary course of his business for good consideration, the transaction, although fraudulent as between the agent & his employer, will bind the latter, unless he can show that the recipient of the money did not act in good faith.

A broker was instructed by trustees to sell shares & reinvest proceeds in the names of the trustees. Instead, he paid the money into his own account with resp. bank, where his account was largely overdrawn. The bank knew the money was the proceeds of the sale of shares, but did not know & had made no inquiry whether the money belonged to the broker or was only in his hands as agent:—Held: the bank were entitled to apply the money in satisfaction of the broker's overdraft.—THOMSON v. CLYDESDALE BANK, LTD., [1893] A. C. 282; 62 L. J. P. C. 91; 69 L. T. 156; 1 R. 255, H. L.

794. ———.]—A person who had overdrawn his account at a bank paid in sums of money representing the proceeds of shares belonging to his brother, who was abroad. This money was paid in with the object of its being kept at the bank till it should be reinvested, but it was not paid to a separate account:—Held: though the bank knew the money did not belong to their customer, they were entitled to assume that his brother had authorised him to pay it into his own account.—Re SANGSTER, GREEN v. MOCKETT (1894), 10 T. L. R. 184.

795. Agent for two parties—Authority as such—set-off.]—In general, an agent is not warranted in paying a debt due from his principal without previous authority, or subsequent assent. But where a person fills the character of agent to two parties, & receives from one a sum on account of the other, which sum he carries to the account:—Semble: he may make any deductions afterwards from that sum which the person who paid it would have had a right to make in the form of set-off.—WEMYS v. GREENWOOD, COX & HAMMERSLEY (1827), 5 L. J. O. S. K. B. 257.

796. Bankers repaying debenture.]—Where a correspondence as to the conversion of a ry. debenture payable in London had been carried on between the owner, pltf., & his brother, a clerk in the office of a stockbroker, in the stockbroker's name, & the debenture had been remitted by pltf. to his brother to get it cashed &, falling into the hands of his employer, the stockbroker, was by him presented to defts., bankers in Liverpool, who cashed it (less the discount) & were sued by pltf. for the amount, the stockbroker having failed:—Held: it was a question of fact for the jury whether defts. were authorised to cash it.—CROXON v. MOSS (1859-1861), 2 F. & F. 539; 4 L. T. 515; 7 Jur. N. S. 194.

797. Bank cashier—General authority—Payment on forged order.]—A cashier of a bank paid the contents of a deposit receipt on a forged order:—Held: as the cashier had general authority to pay away moneys of the bank on orders believed to be genuine, this payment was within such authority.—R. v. PRINCE (1868), L. R. 1 C. C. R. 150; 38 L. J. M. C. 8; 19 L. T. 364; 33 J. P. 21; 17 W. R. 179; 11 Cox, C. C. 193.

798. Betting agent—Power to bet in own name.]—The employment of an agent to make a bet in his own name on behalf of his principal implies an authority to pay the bet if lost, & on the making of the bet that authority becomes irrevocable.—READ v. ANDERSON (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 779; 53 L. J. Q. B. 532; 51 L. T. 55; 49 J. P. 4; 32 W. R. 950, C. A.

799. Consignee for sale abroad—Custom.]—A cargo was consigned to a foreign merchant for sale; the owner drew a bill on the merchant, who accepted it & sold the cargo, & the merchant subsequently dishonoured the acceptance & suspended payment:—Held: the goods were consigned by the owner subject, according to the evidence, to a usage that foreign merchants, where bills were drawn on them against consignments, paid the proceeds of such consignments to their own account with their bankers, & credited their correspondents in current account with the proceeds, & they did not apply the proceeds specifically in meeting the drafts drawn against the shipments.—SPARTALI v. CRÉDIT LYONNAIS (1885), 2 T. L. R. 178, C. A.

800. Solicitor—Acting for both parties.]—S., a client of N., a solr., in 1863 mtgd. property to A., also a client of N. N. paid interest on the mtge. & charged S. with it in account till 1866. After this N. went on paying interest to A., who believed that it came from S., but it was not shown that N. had ever acted as solr. to S. after 1866, nor was there anything showing that N. was authorised to make the payments as agent for S.:—Held: the payments of interest after 1866 did not take the case out of Stat. Limitations.—NEWBOULD v. SMITH (1886), 33 Ch. D. 127; 55 L. J. Ch. 778; 55 L. T. 194; 34 W. R. 690, C. A.; affd. on another point (1889), 14 App. Cas. 423, H. L.

801. Postal clerk—Power to pay specific sum.]—Prisoner was a depositor in the Post Office Savings Bank, in which 11s. stood to his credit. He gave notice in the ordinary form to withdraw 10s., stating in his notice the number of his depositor's book & the amount to be withdrawn. A warrant for 10s. was duly issued to prisoner, & a letter of advice was duly sent to the post office at N. to pay him 10s. He went to that office, & handed his depositor's book & the warrant to the clerk, who, instead of referring to the proper letter of advice for 10s., referred by mistake to another letter of advice for £8 16s. 10d., & placed the latter amount upon the counter. The clerk entered the amount paid, £8 16s. 10d., in prisoner's deposit book & stamped it. Prisoner took up the money & went away, having at the moment of taking it up an animus furandi, & knowing the money to be the money of the Postmaster-General:—Held: prisoner was guilty of larceny on the grounds, (1) even assuming the clerk to have the same authority to part with the possession of & property in the money which the Postmaster-General would have had, the mere delivery under a mistake, though with the intention of passing the property, did not pass the property; & the possession being obtained animus furandi, there was both a taking & a stealing within the definition of larceny; (2) the clerk had only a limited authority to part with the money to the person named in the letter of advice, & no property passed to prisoner, & the possession was obtained animus furandi.—R. v. MIDDLETON (1873), L. R. 2 C. C. R. 38; 42 L. J. M. C. 73; 28 L. T. 777; 12 Cox, C. C. 260.

802. Regimental agent—Payment forbidden by officer's executors.—By the articles of war, & by several royal warrants, certain regulations were made with respect to payment & assignment of allowance to colonels of regiments, called off-reckonings. A colonel died in Feb., 1822, & a few days after a successor was appointed; but no inspection or return of the state of regimental appointments or accoutrements was made until Jan., 1823, when they were reported serviceable, except in event of the regiment being ordered on a foreign station. In Apr. & Sept. of the same year other inspections & returns were made, by which it appeared that numerous articles were unfit for service, & the agents of the late colonel (who had also received a power from his exors. to assign the off-reckonings, which they had done, to two of their clerks), contrary to the direction of his exors., but in conformity with the decision of the consolidated board of general officers, paid for articles supplied to make up the deficiency:—Held: such agents might set off this payment against the off-reckonings, but not against the private account of testator.—WEMYS v. GREENWOOD, COX & HAMMERSLEY, No. 795, ante.

SUB-SECT. 15.—AUTHORITY TO SELL.

803. Agent—Intrusted with goods for sale.—A person intrusted with goods for sale must sell them for ready money; he cannot give credit or take a bill in payment: in cases of authorities given to one to sell any thing, as a factor, in due execution of this authority, he ought presently upon sale thereof to have & receive quid pro quo, otherwise he doth not well perform the authority thus given to him, neither ought he upon sale thereof to give the vendee any further time, or day of payment, but as he delivers the one, so he ought then presently, at the same time, to receive the money for the same for which it was sold (per Cur.).—*BARTON v. 805. — Similar acts on previous occasions.

—In an action against a ry. co. to recover a piece of superfluous land which the co. was bound to dispose of within 10 years after it had been acquired, pltf. proposed to show that, 13 years after that time, the co. put the land up for sale by public auction as superfluous land. In order to prove this, the auctioneer was called as a witness, & deposed he had received his instructions for the sale from a person who had acted as its solr. on former sales of land:—Held: the fact that the solr. had acted in former sales did not raise an inference that he had authority to bind the co. in this instance.—MOODY v. LONDON, BRIGHTON & SOUTH COAST RY. CO. (1861), 1 B. & S. 290; 31 L. J. Q. B. 54; 9 W. R. 780; 121 E. R. 722.

806. Agent to exhibit—With view to sale.

807. Agent to import goods—Retention of bill of lading.

—Where a London agent was employed by his principal in the country to import goods from abroad, & send them to their destination; & by the bill of lading the goods were deliverable to order or assigns, & indorsed in blank by the shipper, & the agent, after being allowed to retain possession of the bill of lading for five months, sold the goods without any authority for that purpose:—Held: it was a question for the jury whether the principal had not by his conduct enabled his agent to hold himself out to the world as a person having authority to sell, & thereby to convey a title to the vendee.—DYER v. PEARSON (1824), 3 B. & C. 38; 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 648; 107 E. R. 648.

803 i. Agent—Authority to find purchaser.—A. entered into a contract with B., the agent of C., for the purchase of C.'s land. A. & C. agreed as to terms, but the contract was signed by A. & B. in the absence of C., who had not authorised B. to sign it. No copy of the contract was given to C., & it did not embody all the terms agreed on:—Held: B. was not C.'s agent to sign, but only to find a purchaser.—O'BRIEN v. GOODSELL (1878), 1 N. S. W. S. 803 ii. — Authority to sell—Sale of different kinds of goods for lump sum.

expressed in *Dyer v. 808. Agent to sell—Express authority—Alleged custom.]—The appointment of a general agent for sale of goods implies an authority to sell according to the ordinary course of trade.

Where an agent sold timber of his principal at one of a number of sales, held at the same place & by the same person, on behalf of himself & other vendors, at which it was alleged to be the custom that purchasers should be liable for the purchase-money to holder of the sale only & not to the real vendor; & it was proved that the agent had himself sold goods on his own account in conformity with this alleged usage:—Held: the principal vendor was entitled to look for his purchase-money beyond the holder of the sales, to the real buyer of timber.—Re WILLIAMS, Ex p. HOWELL (1865), 12 L. T. 785, C. A.

809. ——— Subject to conditions.]—Deft. instructed her solrs. to sell a house for £10,000, subject to the stipulations & conditions under which she had purchased same (which were very special). The solrs. employed a house agent, telling him that he was not to enter into any contract, for they (the solrs.) could only advise deft. to sell subject to conditions similar to those under which she had purchased. Pltf. having offered to purchase the house for £10,000, asked the house agent to accept the offer, which the house agent declined to do on the ground that he was not authorised, & any contract must be prepared by the solrs. After this the solrs. wrote to pltf. saying: "We have been instructed to proceed with the sale to you of these premises. The draft contract is being prepared, & will be forwarded to you for your approval in a few days"—Held: (1) in whatever sense (as to which there was some doubt) the words "proceed with the sale" might be construed with reference to the preceding circumstances, the intimation that a draft contract was being prepared was sufficient to show that by the word "sale" was meant no more than either "negotiations for a sale," or "a sale subject to the conditions"; (2) hitherto there had been no binding agreement between the parties; (3) as the solrs. of deft. had only authority to sell subject to conditions, deft. would not have been bound by a contract for sale free from such conditions had such a contract been entered into on her behalf.—*CHINNOCK v. 808 i. Agent to sell—Express authority.]—Where a principal gives authority in writing to an agent in general terms to sell certain land at a fixed price he will not be bound by any contract of sale signed by the agent unless it be a reasonable & proper contract, having regard to the nature of the property, the circumstances of the case, the practice of the market, & the views of the principal where they are known to the agent.

A. signed an authority to B. to sell land at £7 per acre. B. on same day signed a contract for sale to C. One of the conditions of this contract embodied Transfer of Law Act 1890, Table A, & fixed the time for completion at one month. All parties had notice that A. had only bought that day under similar conditions:—Held: this was not in the circumstances a reasonable contract, & not one which the agent was authorised to make.—*MOORE v. 808 iii. ——— To sell within limited time—Agent giving option.]—Deft. instructed an agent to sell certain property within two weeks. No sale was effected within that time, but the agent gave an option, & before it expired the agent informed deft. that he had sold the property & that he would get his money within ten days, handing to him $15 which had been paid on the option. The balance was not paid within the ten days.—Held: the agent's authority was to sell within two weeks, & he exceeded his authority in giving the option. Hamer v. Sharp (1874), L. 810 ii. ——— ———]—A vendor instructed his agent to sell his property for £10 per acre, half cash & the balance by bills for two or three years bearing interest at 5 per cent. per annum. S. C., c. 59, did not apply, & the jury should have been directed to find whether pltf. had permitted W. so to carry on the business as to allow him to make these special terms.—*McGUIRE v. brought as & for the proper goods of him, G. W., & that he so sold them; & that G. W. was indebted to deft., etc. The evidence was that plffs. authorised G. 812. ———— As to manner of sale.—A husband & wife, having joint power to sell her estate, gave authority to an agent to sell by auction; he sold by private contract, for more than the price they required:—Held: (1) buyer not entitled to specific performance; (2) the husband's delivering his wife's compliments in a letter to the agent was not proof of her joining in giving authority to him.—*DANIEL v. 813. ———— As to manner of sale.—A., a solr. & one of three exors. & trustees for sale, acted professionally in the management of the personal estate, & also by the authority of his co-trustees conducted an attempted sale by auction of the real estate. B., another of the trustees, hearing that his son was in treaty for the purchase of the estate, wrote to A. to say he, B., would not take any interest either directly or indirectly in the matter. A., with the concurrence of the co-trustee, contracted to sell the estate by private contract to another person. On a bill filed by the purchaser to compel performance of this contract:—Held: (1) A. had not derived any general authority to sell by private contract, by reason of his employment as solr. to the trust estate or as agent to sell by public auction; (2) he had derived no special authority from B.'s letter to sell to any one but B.'s son.—BULTEEL v. ABINGER (LORD) (1842), 6 Jur. 410.

815. ———— Secret limitation—As to price.—A servant was sent with a horse to a fair with an express order from the master not to sell it under a certain sum; the servant notwithstanding sold it for less. 812 i. ———— As to manner of sale.—M., who had no authority to sell deft.'s real estate, was instructed by deft.'s solr. to divide the property into lots & sell at the best prices he could get. Before receiving a power of attorney which he had applied for to enable him to sell M. sold the property en bloc to pltf., part of the price only to be paid in cash, & a commission to go to an intermediary. Deft. refused to complete the sale:—Held: even if the instructions given to M. by deft.'s solr. constituted M. an agent for sale, the fact that M. had not complied with the request to divide the land into lots, & had given time for part of the price, & agreed to pay a commission, justified deft. in refusing to complete the sale.—AMVOT v. DAULNAIS (1898), Q. R. 15 S. C. 311.—CAN.

812 iii. ———— Agent adding unauthorised condition.—On June 1 deft. telegraphed to B. & G., stock & station agents, that he had two hundred bullocks for sale at £4, average 700 lbs. fully. On July 5 B. & G. asked whether they could offer eight days for inspection. On July 7 D. went on behalf of pltf. to inspect. On July 12 deft. wired to B. & G. that they could offer his cattle at £4, clear of commission. On July 12 B. & G. signed on behalf of deft. a contract of sale to pltf. of the cattle at £4, to be delivered on deft.'s station in two drafts on July 28 & Aug. 11, to average 700 lbs., and they further agreed that pltf. should have the first draft, & no other bullocks to be removed until his two hundred head were taken off. Deft. afterwards refused to deliver the cattle, alleging that he had none up to the weight:—Held: B. & G. had no authority from deft. to enter into the contract of July 12.—TUCK v. BROWN (1882), 3 N. S. W. 339.—AUS.

812 iv. ———— No restriction as to purchaser.—Deft. wrote to a real estate agent as follows: "I will sell ten acres of land (including the waterlots), as also two & three-quarters acres of land belonging to J. adjoining ing, for $430 per acre, equal to $5,182.50, & on which sum I will allow you a commission of 2 per cent." The memorandum then specified the terms of sale. The agent entered into a written agreement with pltf. for the sale of the land on the terms mentioned. The agreement not being carried out, pltf. brought a suit for specific performance, setting out the two agreements:—Held: the authority given empowered the agent to sell on the prescribed terms without restriction as to purchaser.—HORNBY v. JOHNSTONE, 3 N. S. D. 1.—CAN.

815 i. ———— Secret limitation.—A., B. & C. purchased property, the purchase being made in A.'s name only, who gave a declaration of trust to B. & C., but there was nothing in the agreement to show that any person other than A. had any interest in the property. B. was the agent of his co-owners for purposes of dealing with the property. P., a real estate agent, had the property for sale, & endeavoured to interest pltf. in it, & S., another estate agent, took part in the negotiations. Pltf. offered to purchase, provided the vendors would agree to re-purchase in two years' time. This offer was communicated to P., & then, at the request of P., S. discussed it with B., & the latter then informed S. that he had an interest in the property. A re-purchase agreement was drawn up, & places left for two signatures only, as C.'s interest had not been disclosed. A. then executed the agreement for sale, & also signed the re-purchase agreement, on the understanding that B. & also C. should sign as well. Neither B. nor C. ever signed the re-purchase agreement, & pltf., knowing nothing about C., & thinking B.'s signature perhaps unimportant, let the matter remain. At the end of two years, pltf. requested the re-purchase to be carried out, but A. refused on the ground that he only signed the re-purchase agreement on the understanding that B. & C. signed also, & further, that pltf. had knowledge of this, at least as far as B. was concerned:—Held: (1) B. was A.'s agent for carrying out the transaction, & was clothed with ostensible authority, & pltf. could not be affected by any private instructions given to B.; (2) A. could not plead the default of his own agent in not carrying out his instructions. *National Bolivian Navigation Co. v. 815 ii. ———— As to price.—Deft. put a mob of sheep into the hands of a stock & station agent for sale, with instructions by telegram to accept five shillings a head, net cash payable in Sydney & droving expenses from a certain date, but the stock & station agent sold to pltf. for five shillings cash, saying nothing about the other terms:—Held: the stock & station agent was deft.'s general agent to sell the sheep, with power to bind him to any contract made in the ordinary scope of his business, & deft.'s instructions as to terms, which were private & did not come to pltf.'s knowledge, did not limit his general authority.—BOWMAN v. BACON (1897), 18 N. S. W. 12.—AUS.

815 iii. ———— As to price.—Resp. authorised S., a solr., to sell her property, & offered to sell at $585, but S. interpreted this as an offer to sell at $275:—Held: S. had no authority to contract to sell for less than $585. Hesse v. Briant, 6 De G. M. & G. 623, cited.—CLERIQUE v. MURRAY (1902), 32 S. C. R. 450.—CAN.

815 iv. ———— As to minerals.—A railway co. having instructed its agent to sell land belonging to it, but to reserve the mineral rights, the agent contracted to sell without expressly reserving the minerals:—Held: purchaser was entitled to assume that "land" meant not merely the surface but also the minerals, & the co. was bound by the agent's contract.—HOBBS v. ESQUIMAULT & NANAIMO RY. CO. (1898), 6 B. C. R. 228; 29 S. C. R. 453 (leave to appeal refused by P. C.).—CAN.

§ 818. — Question for jury.]—In an action against an agent by his employer for selling goods bought for his principal, a usage was allowed as a defence that, in case of default by the principal, the agent might (being personally liable on the purchase) sell on his account. The question should be put to witnesses proving such usage as follows: "Where there is a bargain by an agent for an unnamed principal, for the purchase of tallow, deliverable at a future day, & the principal fails before the time for delivery, is there a usage by

§ 819. — General authority—Secret limitations.]—Where a broker is allowed by the principal to appear as having a general authority to sell, the principal is bound, notwithstanding the broker has exceeded private instructions in the particular case.

A. & Co., brokers, were in the habit of buying & paying for & of selling & receiving the value for sugars, on speculation, in their own names & upon their own judgment, for their principal, sometimes, when the market was low, under an unlimited authority as to quantity & price, at other times under special instructions to buy. They were guided from time to time by special instructions to sell, limited in respect of price, & advised from time to time by their principal as to the probable rise or fall of the market. They kept only a general account with their principal of the sums advanced to & received for him, without accounting separately for each particular lot purchased & resold:—Held: (1) the general authority of the brokers to sell so as to bind their principal in respect of the purchaser was to be collected from their general dealing, not merely from their private instructions as to the particular parcels of goods; (2) the principal was bound by a resale of a particular parcel of sugars before purchased & paid for in their own names, & lodged in their warehouse, though sold under the price directed by their principal, for whom they received the money, but afterwards failed.—WHITEHEAD v. § 821. — Sale in own name.]—The character of a broker is materially different from that of a factor; & where a broker sold goods without disclosing the name of his principal:—Held: (1) the broker acted beyond the scope of his authority; (2) the buyer could not set off a debt due from the broker to him against the demand for the goods made by the principal.—BARING v. CORRIE (1818), 2 B. & Ald. 137; 106 E. R. 317.

§ 823. — Possession of indicia of title—Secret limitation.]—Where an owner of property gives all the indicia of title to another person with intention he should deal with the property, the principles of agency apply; any limit which he has imposed on his agent's dealing cannot be enforced against an innocent purchaser or mtgee. from the agent, who has no notice of the limit. If the owner has not only transferred property to an agent or trustee, but has acknowledged that the transferee has paid full consideration for it, he is estopped from asserting his equitable title against a person to whom the transferee has disposed of the property for value. The statement in a transfer of mtge. made in a form prescribed by stat., that the mtge. is transferred in consideration of £ paid by A. to B., without any express receipt clause, is sufficient to create this estoppel.

R. delivered to a stockbroker a mtge. bond for £2,000 with instructions to sell it. The bond was one of a series issued by the Tyne Improvement Comrs. under a private Act which incorporated Comrs. Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 16). That Act required all transfers of mtges. to be registered. Induced by false representations of the broker, R. executed two deeds of transfer, by which the mtge. bond was transferred to the broker in two portions of £1,500 & £500 respectively paid by the broker to R. They were duly registered. The broker borrowed £1,000 from deft. W. & executed a formal sub-mtge. of the bond to him, producing the transfers as proof of title. This mtge. was not

"We have put under offer, subject to your approval, your lot of barley, say 4,000 to 5,000 bushels, cash 50c. net to you in your elevator. Answer to be given to-morrow, if accepted" (which was taken to mean the answer of the person having the offer). On June 9

deft. wrote a letter giving his approval, which was received on June 10, & on June 11 A. & K. made a contract for the sale of the barley to pltf., no counter-instructions having been received by them from deft. Pltf. had seen the letters of June 8 & 9 before the contract was signed:—Held: the authority of A. & K. was to sell on the terms mentioned on June 10, & deft. was not liable on the contract of June 11, which was for 50 cents per bushel free on cars.—FARRELL v. HUNT, 21 C. P. 117.—CAN.

registered. The broker had applied the money to his own use & absconded. An action was brought by R. for retransfer of the bond free from the mtge. to W.:—Held: the equitable title of R. was postponed to W.'s charge.—RIMMER v. WEBSTER, [1902] 2 Ch. 163; 71 L. J. 824. ———.]—The owner of goods lying at a warehouse was induced by the fraud of F. to instruct the warehouseman to transfer the goods to the order of F., & the goods were accordingly placed at F.'s disposal. F. then sold the goods to an innocent purchaser, who, before paying the price, obtained a statement from the warehouseman that he held the goods at the purchaser's order. On the discovery of F.'s fraud, the warehouseman refused to deliver the goods to the purchaser. In an action by the purchaser against the warehouseman:—Held: (1) the warehouseman, having attorned to the purchaser, was estopped from impeaching his title; (2) the refusal to deliver was a conversion; (3) the measure of damages was the market value of the goods at the date of the refusal; (4) the true owner, having enabled F. to hold himself out as the owner, could not set up his title against that of the purchaser (LORD HALSBURY); (5) it should be so held on principle, but qu. whether the facts were distinguishable from those of *Kingsford v. Estate & house agent—Holding out.—An estate agent who has adjacent lots of land put into his hands for sale without any written authority is not held out to the public as having a general power to sell at such prices as may be reasonable, & if he deviates from his instructions cannot bind his principal to a sale.—*LUDWIG v. let, & a qualified authority to state the selling price of property, but no authority to sell. The agents contracted in his name to let, with an option to the lessee to buy at a stated price. The lessor filed a bill to have the agreement delivered up to be cancelled, on the ground that the agents had exceeded their authority; & the lessee filed a bill for specific performance of the contract:—Held: A. entitled to have the contract set aside.

Where a principal seeks to set aside a contract for sale entered into by his agents in excess of their authority, but confirms a contract to let, which was within their authority, he has a right, before any bill is filed against him by the lessee & asserted purchaser for specific performance, to file a bill to have the agreement cancelled, offering to grant a lease if the lessee chooses, because, if he brought an ejectment, the contract to let would be an answer to his action; & if he brought an action for rent, he might be considered as acquiescing in the whole agreement, the contract to let & the contract to sell being in the same instrument.—WIRE v. PEMBERTON, PEMBERTON v. WIRE (1854), 23 L. T. O. S. 345.

with pltf. regarding price. Upon hearing the price from him he closed with deft., giving him a receipt for his cheque:—Held: pltf.'s reply to A.'s inquiry as to price did not imply that pltf. would sell at that price & did not authorise A. to make a contract binding on pltf. *Harvey v. 833 iii. ——An estate agent cannot bind his principal by a contract unless he was employed not merely to negotiate a sale but with definite instructions to sell, & in determining the extent of his authority a fair interpretation must be placed on his instructions as a whole. *Hyde v. 833 iv. ——An owner of land wrote to an agent requesting him to find "a purchaser" for it at $600 cash, or $800 on a specified credit. Two years later the owner wrote that the property had risen greatly in value, & asking what "he (the owner) should take for the lot altogether," whereupon the agent, without further communication with the owner, contracted in writing to sell the property for $800, "to be paid on the execution of a good & full warranty deed, clear of all incumbrances":—Held: assuming, without deciding, that the first letter gave power to sell, the agent had no authority for agreeing to give a deed such as that stipulated for.—

view.—In an action against defts. as vendors for not completing the sale of an estate, it appeared they issued an advertisement which stated that "to treat & view the property" applications were to be made to certain persons, one of whom (who was part owner) made a contract of sale with pltf., & it was contended that he had authority so to do by virtue of this advertisement:—Held: the advertisement gave authority to negotiate & to make & receive proposals, but not to conclude a sale.

833 vii. ——An unconditional authority to sell at a named price carries with it the power to bind the principal by an open contract of sale, & as such contract often subjects the principal to obligations which he would not, on consideration, be willing to assume, it should not be lightly inferred, but the evidence should show beyond any reasonable doubt that it was conferred.

A., a real estate broker with whom deft. had listed certain properties, submitted an offer on behalf of pltf., & deft. replied naming a price which he would accept, whereupon A. closed a bargain with pltf., who signed an agreement which was sent to deft. In an action for specific performance:—Held: A.'s authority was to find a purchaser, but not to enter into a contract for sale. Rosenbaum v. Belson, [1900] 2 Ch. 267; Harvey v. Facey, [1893] A. Later on A. informed deft. that he had found him another purchaser, who had paid a deposit, & inclosed a transfer:—Held: A.'s authority to close referred to a particular transaction, & when those negotiations failed, that authority expired, leaving A. with his original instructions, which were merely to find a purchaser, & not to enter into a binding contract for sale.—*HAVNER v. 833 xi. ——When an owner of property employs an estate agent to procure a purchaser or tenant at a specified price, the agent has no implied authority to conclude a contract for sale; his duty is simply to find a purchaser or tenant, & to communicate his offer to the owner.

An estate agent, employed by pltf. to obtain a purchaser for a house at a certain price, purported to conclude a contract for sale with defts. without notice that pltf. had previously concluded a contract with another purchaser:—Held: the estate agent had no implied authority to conclude a contract for sale; & upon the facts, no express authority had been given.—*WILDE v. 833 xii. ——"Listing" agreement.—M. listed a property with G. & signed a document giving him the right to sell the X. property at the prices mentioned for four months from date & agreeing to pay him a commission. W. later submitted an offer of $1,500 cash, which deft. refused, pointing out the revenue she derived from the property; & on same day W. wired "Have sold the property for $5,000 cash":—Held: the contract was not within W.'s authority, & the vendor could not claim specific performance. *Bronet v. Deft. employed house & estate agents, with instructions to find a purchaser for leasehold property. Pltf. made an offer in writing to the agents, which was submitted by the agents to deft., who further instructed them to withdraw part of the property, & named the lowest price he was prepared to take for the remainder. Acting under this authority, the agents purported to enter into an open contract for sale of the remainder of the property to pltf. at the price named by deft. In an action for specific performance:—Held: (1) the agents had no authority to enter into a contract for sale on behalf of deft.; (2) the action must be dismissed.—CHADBURN v. Deft. refused to complete the sale:—Held: (1) R. was not the agent of either party for the purpose of making a contract except in so far as he might have been deft.'s agent by the latter's telegram; (2) the telegram could not refer to pltf.'s offer, which had not been communicated to deft., nor could it be regarded as a direction to R.; it was no more than an answer to his inquiry whether he would sell at the price named, & contemplated that a contract would be entered into. *Harvey v. As the proved insufficient for the contemplated purposes, pltf. demanded repayment of the advances. Deft. did not comply with the request, & pltf. sold the goods by auction:—Held: (1) pltf. was factor, & had an irrevocable authority to sell; (2) if it became necessary for pltf. to protect himself & if he could not within a reasonable time sell privately, he was entitled to sell by public auction; (3) a sale by auction, fairly conducted, was binding, as the price obtained could not but be deemed the market value. *Halliday v. 840 iii. — — —.]—In Feb., A. consigned to B. as factor a cargo of wheat, on which B. advanced 41s. per quarter. At the time of consignment A. wrote: "We understand this cargo will not be sold under 42s., London terms, without our consent." The markets fell, & ultimately, in Aug., B. demanded from A. a remittance to cover depreciation, storage, etc., adding: "Unless this is done within seven days from this date we must sell it at best obtainable price & claim on you for amount of loss." A. refused consent, & B. accordingly sold:—Held: the words "without our consent" could not cover more than a reasonable time, & B. was not bound to continue to hold so long as A. chose, but after due notice might sell.—ADAMS & CO. v. ATHYA & CO. (1878), 16 Sc. L. R. 20.—SCOT.

841. — — —.]—Mere advances made by a factor, whether at the time of his employment as such, or subsequently, cannot have the effect of altering the revocable nature of an authority to sell, unless the advances are accompanied by an agreement that the authority shall not be revocable. Whether such an agreement has been made, or might be properly inferred, is a question upon the evidence for the jury.

In an action for damages for an alleged improper sale by deft. of certain sugars placed in his hands by plffs. the judge directed the jury that, by the mere relationship of factor, the factor did not by making advances acquire any right in derogation of the right of his principal to give directions as to the time & manner of sale, & that any such right on the part of the factor must be made out of an agreement which might be inferred from the evidence or might be implied by proof of usage:—Held: no misdirection. — DE COMAS v. PROST & KOHLER (1865), 3 Moo. P. C. C. N. S. 158; 12 L. T. 682; 11 Jur. N. S. 417; 13 W. R. 295; 16 E. R. 59, P. C.

842. Foreman—General authority as such.]—A. was owner of a sawmill, & B. his foreman. B., as agent of A., but without any express authority, entered into a contract in writing to supply C. with a quantity of Scotch fir staves:—Held: this contract was binding on A., inasmuch as B. must be presumed to have had a general authority to enter into such contracts as the one in question. — RICHARDSON v. CARTWRIGHT (1844), 1 Car. & Kir. 328.

843. Other agents—Holding out.]—Where A., a married man, sells, with her concurrence, goods cattle without deft.'s knowledge or authority. Subsequently M. sold cattle to plff., who was unaware of previous sales, & only knew M. as manager. On deft. refusing delivery:—Held: selling cattle was not within ordinary scope of employment of a manager, & deft. not knowing of the previous sales, such sales could not be relied on by plff. to show an implied authority in M. to bind deft.

To prove holding out, the third party must show that he contracted with the agent on the strength of the course of dealing from which the implied authority is to be inferred. — ROBINSON v. TYSON (1888), 9 N. S. W. 297.—AUS.

g. Station-master—Authority as such.]—Cattle were killed on defts.' railway through negligence, & afterwards sold by a station-master:—Held: the sale was not within the ordinary duty of a station-master. — O'RORKE v. GREAT WESTERN RY. CO. (1864), 23 U. C. R. 827.—CAN.

PART V. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 16.

845 i. Agent—Authority to sell.]—Plff. purchased a piano from deft.'s salesman, who warranted the instrument to be sound & in good order. In an action for breach of warranty:—Held: a warranty given by a salesman intrusted with the management of a shop or wareroom in which articles were publicly exposed for sale was covered by the doctrine in Howard v. Sheppard (1866), L. R. 2 C. P. 148, where the rule to be deduced from the earlier case of Brady v. Todd (1861), 9 C. B. N. S. 592, was explained. — v. WILLIAMS (1880), 5 A. R.

845 ii. — — —.]—The sales agent for deft. co., which manufactured metal roofing, warranted that the roofing material was reasonably suitable for the purpose for which it was sold:—

Held: it was within scope of the authority of a selling agent of a trading co. to give such warranties on its behalf as were ordinarily given to promote the sale of goods of the class in which it dealt. — LARAMIE v. GALT ART METAL CO. (1908), 12 O. W. R. 860.—CAN.

845 iii. — — —.]—An agent who sells a cow in a fair has an implied authority to give a warranty in open market on behalf of the owner; the facts that the purchaser knows that the actual vendor is only an agent for another, & that neither of the parties is in the cattle trade, do not affect this principle. — ROONEY v. FIELDEN (1899), 33 L. T. 100.—IR.

845 iv. — — — Evidence of authority to warrant.]—An agent to sell a vessel telegraphed to plff., "Will you buy ketch A. f. Carries 22,000 ft." Plff. examined the ketch & agreed to buy it. A bill of sale was executed by the owners, containing no mention of its carrying capacity. Plff. found that it would not carry more than 16,000 ft. Defts. insisted on the truth of the representation made by their agent as to the carrying capacity of the vessel:—Held: an agent employed to sell was not thereby authorised to warrant, & the fact that defts. insisted on the truth of the statements made by their agent was not conclusive evidence of authority to warrant. — LATTER v. BROGDEN, O. B. & F. 116, C. A.—N.Z.

a. Agent warranting horse—Authority to sell machinery.]—An incorporated co. is not bound by an unauthorised warranty of one of its horses, made by machinery, although the agent sold the agent employed by the co. to sell farm horse for the co. & had previously sold two or three horses for it. — *GALLANT v. 844. — — —.]—A., living in the same house with B., was the owner of certain goods therein, which goods she, A., for a fraudulent purpose permitted B. to raise & receive money upon by way of bill of sale in his own name to C., who believed them to be B.'s goods. The goods being seized upon a fi. fa. against A. within 21 days of the date of the bill & before its registration:—Held: the sale to C. was valid, B. being in effect the agent of A. in the transaction. — Low v. MCGILL, No. 212, ante.

SUB-SECT. 16.—AUTHORITY TO WARRANT.

845. Agent—Authority to sell.]—If A. constitutes B. his agent for sale of a certain article, B. is thereby invested with authority to do all that is usual in the trade on sale of the article; he may have authority to warrant the goodness of the article so as to bind A., though A. never gave him any express authority to that effect. — DINGLE v. HARE (1859), 7 C. B. N. S. 145; 29 L. J. C. P. 143; 1 L. T. 38; 6 Jur. N. S. 679; 141 E. R. 770.

b. Horse dealer—Authority to sell & receive price—Warranty of fitness for breeding purposes—Measure of damages.]—Plff. gave a stallion to M., a horse dealer, & told M. to sell the horse to the best advantage. He gave M. no authority to warrant, but left the selling & price entirely in his hands. The horse was Canadian-bred, but from imported Clydesdale stock. M. sold the horse to defts. for $750, taking in his own name two promissory notes of $375 each. The horse was sold for breeding purposes & warranted to be an imported Clydesdale. Defts. knew nothing of plff., & dealt with M. as the owner. M. afterwards indorsed these notes to plff. To an action on one of the notes, defts. set up a counterclaim for breach of warranty:—Held: (1) plff., by his conduct, clothed M. with the apparent ownership of the horse, & by so acting, authorised M. to make all such warranties as are usual in the ordinary course of the business of selling horses; (2) from the circumstance of the horse being sold for breeding purposes, there was an implied warranty of fitness for breeding; (3) defts. were entitled to damages for breach of warranty that the horse was an imported Clydesdale, & the measure of damages was the difference in value between an imported horse & a Canadian-bred one. — Brady v. Todd (1861), 9 C. B. N. S. 592, distd. — TAYLOR v. GARDINER (1892), 8 M. R. 310.—CAN.

c. Special agent—Authority to sell.]—A chartered bank employed an agent to sell agricultural machinery: he warranted the machinery to work well & satisfactorily in the threshing of grain:—Held: a special agent could not bind his principal without express authority to warrant. — COMMERCIAL BANK OF MANITOBA v. BISSETT (1901), 7 M. R. 586 (6).—CAN.

846. Company officials warranting genuineness of share certificates.]—Pltf., having purchased for value shares in deft. co., discovered, upon application for registration, that his vendor's name was not registered for the shares, & that the transfer & certificate had both been forged by the co.'s secretary. It was part of the co.'s duty to receive & examine transfers & certificates, to have transfers registered, to procure the preparation, execution, & signature of certificates with all requisite & prescribed formalities, & thereupon to issue them to the persons entitled to receive them. One of the prescribed formalities was the signature of a director as well as that of the secretary:—Held: the co. had authorised its secretary to warrant the genuineness of certificates, & was estopped from disputing its liability upon a certificate issued by him, notwithstanding his forgery of the document.—SHAW v. PORT PHILIP COLONIAL GOLD MINING CO., LTD. (1884), 13 Q. B. D. 103; 53 L. J. Q. B. 369; 50 L. T. 685; 32 W. R. 771, D. C.

I agree with Stirling, L.J., in regarding that decision as one that may possibly be upheld upon the supposition that the secretary there was in fact held out as having authority to warrant the genuineness of a certificate; if that be not so, then in my opinion the decision cannot be sustained (LORD LORE-BURN, C.). *Reid. 847. Servant warranting horse—Authority of sell.]—If a servant sells a horse with warranty, it is the sale & contract of the master, but it is the warranty of the servant, unless the master gives him authority to warrant it, for a warranty is void which is not made & annexed to the contract; but there it is the warranty of the servant & the contract of the master.—SEIGNIOR & WOLMER'S CASE (1623), Godb. 360; 78 E. R. 212.

849. ——— Instructions not to warrant.]—If a horse-dealer send his servant to sell & the servant, contrary to his instructions, warrant the horse, the horse-dealer may be bound; but another person, not a horse-dealer, will not be bound by the unauthorised warranty of either the horse-dealer or his servant, or his own servant, since he has only given a particular authority (LORD ELDON, C.)—*BANK OF SCOTLAND v. 850. ———.]—The servant of a private owner instructed to sell & deliver a horse on one particular occasion is not by law authorised to bind his master by a warranty, & the buyer takes it at the risk of being able to prove that the servant had in fact his master's authority for giving it. It is otherwise in the case of the servant of a horse-dealer or livery-stable keeper whose business is to deal in horses.—BRADY v. TODD, No. 105, ante.

The rule to be deduced from the case of Brady v. Todd seems to me to be this—if the servant or agent of a private individual entrusted on one occasion to sell a horse without authority from his master takes upon himself to warrant the soundness of the animal the master is not bound, but if the servant of a horse dealer, or even one who only occasionally assists him in his business, being employed to sell gives a warranty, the principal is bound even though the agent or servant was expressly forbidden to warrant (BYLES, J.). Distd. Brooks v. Hassall (1883), 49 L. Jackson*, [1917] 2 K. B. 822.

851. — Authority to sell & receive price.]—A servant employed to sell a horse & receive the price has an implied authority to warrant the horse to be sound; & in an action upon the warranty it is enough to prove it was given by the servant without calling him, or showing he had any special authority for that purpose.—ALEXANDER v. GIBSON (1811), 2 Camp. 555.

852. — Intrusted with sale at fair.]—A servant intrusted by his master with the sale of a horse at a fair may have an implied authority to give a warranty to purchaser.—BROOKS v. HASSALL (1883), 49 L. T. 569.

853. — Sent to give receipt—Altering terms of warranty.]—Where, on purchase of a horse, the vendor had given a warranty of soundness generally, & the servant sent with the receipt to the agent of the other party inserted, at his request, but without a special or general authority from his master, "warranted sound to the regiment":—Held: the master was not bound by this alteration of warranty, notwithstanding the money afterwards came to his hands.—STRODE v. DYSON (1804), 1 Smith, K. B. 400.

854. — Statements of principal to servant.]—Pltf. purchased a mare of deft. through A., who, as he swore, had warranted her quiet to ride. Deft. admitted he had told A. he had received such a warranty when he had bought her a short time before, & A. admitted he had told pltf. that he believed the mare to be quiet to ride, but he denied that he had warranted her to pltf. to be so:—Held: the jury had, in the circumstances, been justified in finding that A. had been authorised by deft. to give a warranty, & had done so.—WATERS v. MADELEY (1885), 2 T. L. R. 2.

855. Servant of horse-dealer warranting horse—Authority as such—Instructions not to warrant.]—The agent or servant of a horse-dealer has an implied authority to bind his principal or master by a warranty, even though (unknown to the buyer) he has express orders not to warrant. Evidence of a general practice amongst horse-dealers not to warrant where the horse has been examined by a veterinary surgeon, & certified by him to be sound, is not admissible to rebut inference of authority to warrant.—HOWARD (HOWARTH) v. SHEWARD (1866), L. R. 2 C. P. 148; 36 L. J. C. P. 42; 15 L. T. 183; 12 Jur. N. S. 1015; 15 W. R. 45.

856. — Authority to deliver—Warranty given after sale.]—An authority to sell implies an authority to warrant; but where an agent is employed merely to deliver, it is necessary to show an express authority to warrant in order to bind the principal.

Where the servant of a horse-dealer, on delivering a horse to deft., made certain statements, & signed a receipt, including a warranty; & it appeared the contract of sale had been made before delivery:—Held: the master was not bound by the statements or receipt of the servant, as no express authority to give a warranty was proved.—

The horse was in fact suffering from mange, which the servant well knew:—Held: (1) in absence of a finding of the jury that deft. was a horse-dealer, deft. was not bound by any warranty as to soundness given by his servant in respect of a horse offered for sale; (2) even if deft. had been a horse-dealer he would not have been bound, as the warranty given did not relate to soundness, but to an incidental matter, & was not within the implied authority of the servant.—BALDREY v. In debt by A. against B. on the cheque: Held: C. was clearly deft.'s agent; delivery by C. supported the averment in the declaration of a delivery by B. to A.—SAMUEL v. GREEN (1847), 10 Q. 869. Agent giving security for charges.—Employed to get possession of goods.—Pltf. discharged the cargo of a stranded vessel at request of the captain, for the purpose of saving the cargo merely, & not with a view of completing the voyage. After the cargo had been discharged, & while it was in possession of pltf., it was sold to deft. Pltf. gave it up to deft.'s agent on receiving a promise from him that his charges should be paid. This promise was made without special authority from deft.:—Held: (1) the agent's employment to obtain possession of the goods gave him authority to give security for any charges for which there was a lien on the goods; (2) an action could be sustained by pltf. against deft. on the promise made by deft.'s agent.—KINGSTON (HINGTON) v. WENDT (1876), 34 L. T. 181; 24 W. R. 664.

870. Agent promising to pay.—Authority to pay.—An agent who has authority to pay a debt of his principal has authority to promise to pay it; & where an agent acting within scope of his authority makes a payment on account of a debt of his principal, & nothing more is said or done, a promise to pay the balance of the debt will be inferred so as to take the case out of Stat. 871. Agent of grantee of bill of sale extending time for payment.—Authority as such.—A bill of sale empowered the grantee to take possession of the goods & sell them (inter alia) in case of default in payment. Before certain payments under the bill of sale became due, the grantor applied to an agent of the grantee for further time, which was granted. Before this time elapsed the agent took possession of the goods, & informed the grantor that on payment of £40 by the following Saturday the bill of sale would be given up. The grantor tendered £40 the following Saturday to a clerk at the grantee's office, but he said he had no authority to receive it, & told the grantor to come again on Monday. The money was again tendered on the Monday, but the goods had meanwhile been removed from the grantor's house & were sold:—

Held: (1) the agent had authority from the grantee to extend time for payment; (2) there was no default within the meaning of the bill of sale; (3) the grantor was entitled to recover the value of the goods.—*ALBERT v. 872. Bank manager advising customer as to investment.—Authority as such.—Where a bank has granted an overdraft to a customer, whether secured by mtge. or not, the fact that it is for the benefit of the bank that money should be procured by the customer so as to enable the bank debt to be reduced & its security to be improved does not show that the manager of a branch of the bank has implied authority to assist the customer, & for that purpose to make representations to an intending lender. Where the branch manager of a bank, which did not & could not advise on investments, advised a customer to invest money in a loan on mtge. to another customer to whom the bank had granted an overdraft:—Held: the branch manager had no authority to advise pltf. so as to render the bank liable.—*BANBURY v. 879. House agent assessing damages—Authority as such.]—Deft. hired a furnished house from pltf. on the terms that he was to make good any articles broken or damaged, & any damage to the house through carelessness, "such loss to be assessed in the usual manner." W., the house agent through whom the house had been let to deft., made the usual inventory at commencement of the tenancy, & on its termination again checked it, assessing the damage done during the term at a trifling sum. Pltf. claimed a large sum of damages, alleging W. had no authority to assess the damages :—Held : (1) W. was acting within his authority in making the assessment ; (2) the assessment was binding on pltf. —AITKEN v. 881. 882. Manager of mine making contract with commissioners—Authority to manage mine & communicate with commissioners.]—The agent employed by a miner in the management of his mines, & in his communications with comrs. for setting out the metes & bounds & fixing the rents & duties in respect thereof, is not the agent of the miner for the purpose of making a contract with the comrs. not within the powers conferred upon them in that character.—A.-G. v. 883. Postman receiving letters for post—Authority as such.]—Although it is settled law that an offer is to be deemed accepted when the letter containing the acceptance is posted, yet a town postman is not an agent of the post-office to receive letters ; & delivery to him of a letter of acceptance of an application for allotment of shares will not, for the purpose of fixing the time of acceptance, be regarded by the ct. as a posting of the letter.—Re LONDON & NORTHERN BANK, Ex p. 884. Servant giving conditional bond—Authority as such.]—Where, on a suit being instituted in an inferior ct. against a barge-master, the bailiff, by process from the ct., attaches one of deft.'s barges while his servant is navigating it, & the servant, to release the barge & its cargo, gives the bailiff a bond conditioned for his master's appearance at the next ct., it is a legal bond, & cannot be avoided by a plea that the bailiff had no right to take it, or that it was taken by duress.—SUMNER v. FERRYMAN (1709), 11 Mod. Rep. 201 ; 88 E. R. 989.

885. Surveyor agreeing to amount of compensation—Authority as such.]—Notice to treat for part of a shop was served by a local authority upon pltf., who sent in a claim for compensation, which was not accepted. The surveyors for both parties met, & a sum for compensation was agreed upon between them. The solrs. prepared a formal agreement on the lines of this arrangement, but could not agree as to certain clauses. Subsequently pltf.'s solrs. served upon the local authority a counter-notice stating that pltf. declined to sell part only of the premises comprised in the notice to treat, & that he was willing & able to sell the whole of his interest in the premises & required the authority to purchase all his interest therein. Pltf. moved for an injunction to restrain further proceedings under the notice to treat :—Held : (1) the arrangement made by the surveyors did not amount to an agreement, & would not bind the principals until they accepted it ; (2) pltf. was not estopped from claiming his rights under Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18), s. 92.—POLLARD v. Holding out.—Evidence of.]—Agents for the sale of applts.' goods acted under a written authority which provided that all contracts were to be made in applts.' name, & were to be submitted to them for approval. In an action by resps. against applts. on a contract made by agents for the sale to resps. of applts.' goods:—Held: (1) the limitation contained in the document being unknown to resps., they were entitled to give evidence that applts. held out the agents as having authority to enter into contracts without reference to applts.; (2) documents relating to prior transactions, & tending to show that the principals knew that the agents were holding themselves out as having authority to make contracts similar to that sued upon, were not rendered inadmissible by the mere fact that what was done by the principals in furtherance of such transactions was done after the date of the contract sued upon.—*INTERNATIONAL PAPER Co. v. 901. Letters.—From principal to agent.]—Where a contract is to be collected from correspondence with an agent, & the last act of the agent in the matter which concludes the contract is to inclose in his own letter one from his principal agreeing to the proposed stipulations, the defence that the agent was not duly authorised is impossible (STUART, V.-C.).—CAYLEY v. WALPOLE (1870), 39 L. J. Ch. 609; 22 L. T. 900; 18 W. P. 782.

902. ——— Proof of scope of authority.]—The consignor of goods, before hearing of the bkpy. of the consignee, has sent three letters to the manager of a bark in L., inclosing bills drawn by himself upon certain parties, & referred therein to debts as persons who would settle any irregularity that might occur respecting the acceptances. These letters were communicated to debts., & assented to by them. Another letter to the manager inclosed a bill drawn upon the consignee for the price of the goods in question:—Held: the letters were admissible in evidence, & were sufficient evidence to show an authority in debts. to stop the cargo in transitu.—*WHITEHEAD v. a. Statements.—Of agent.—How or proof of authority.]—Where an agent gives his clerk a number of blank notices to quit signed by him with instructions to take them to the lands, fill them up, & have them served, the statements of the clerk are admissible to prove the agent's authority to serve the notices.—*POLLOK v. c. Affidavit by agent.]—In an action for goods sold, the question was the authority of M. to bind debts., as their agent:—Held: an affidavit made by M. describing the nature of his agency, & filed by debts. on motion for new trial in another suit brought by pltf. against them, was clearly admissible against debts.—THAYER v. STREET, 23 U. C. R. 189.—CAN.

903. — — — —.]—In an action for the breach of a warranty on the sale of a horse by the servant of a private owner at a fair:—Held: a letter from pltf.'s attorney to deft., referring to the alleged warranty & averring a breach of it, & an answer from deft., simply denying there had been any breach of warranty, afforded evidence whence the jury was justified in finding that the servant had authority in fact to warrant.—MILLER v. LAWTON (1864), 15 C. B. N. S. 834; 3 New Rep. 430; 143 E. R. 1013.

an authority to indorse upon a different occasion are irrelevant, & inadmissible to show that he had no authority to make the indorsement in question.—PRESCOTT v. FLINN, No. 354, ante.

905. — — — —.]—From agent to principal—Admitted as such by principal—How far proof of authority.—An admission of letters as written by A., "the agent of deft.", is an admission of agency. But a letter so admitted is only evidence of agency quoad hoc & is not necessarily evidence of a general agency, or of an agency to make the particular contract. That depends on the nature & terms of the letter.—HUNT v. WISE (1859), 1 F. & F. 445.

Part VI.—Delegation.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

906. Agent cannot delegate.—The maxim Delegatus non potest delegare merely imports that an agent cannot, without authority from his principal, devolve upon another obligations to the principal which he has undertaken to fulfil personally, & as confidence in the particular person employed is at the root of the contract of agency, such authority cannot be implied as an ordinary incident in the contract. Where the exigencies of business render necessary the carrying out of the principal's instructions by a person other than the agent originally instructed, the rule must be relaxed so as to enable the agent to appoint a sub-agent & substitute, & to constitute, in the interests & for protection of the principal, a direct privity of contract between him & such substitute.—DE BUSSCHE v. ALT, No. 3, ante.

907. — — — —.]—When a person has been intrusted by a principal to do a thing, that person may not delegate his trust & authority & appoint another person to do the thing for him. Nothing requires greater trust than the collection of money, & where a principal authorises money to be sent direct to him or through his agent, that agent has no authority to trust any one else.—DUNLOP & SONS v. DE MURRIETA & CO. (1886), 3 T. L. R. 166, C. A.

908. — — — —.]—Under-steward of corporation.—By charter, Gravesend corp'n. was to have a capital seneschal, or high steward, and a sub-seneschal, or under-steward, by the latter of whom the judicial & ministerial functions of a recorder were to be performed, but no authority was given him to appoint a deputy, although a bye-law of the corp'n.

required that the under-steward, or his sufficient deputy should be attendant at every ct. to discharge all duties of his office:—Held: the under-steward could not appoint a deputy generally to discharge all his ministerial duties. Semble: he might appoint a deputy to do some particular ministerial act with assent of the corp'n.—R. v. GRAVESEND CORPN. (1824), 2 B. & C. 602; 4 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 117; 2 L. J. O. S. K. B. 94; 107 E. R. 507.

909. — — — —.]—Broker.—A principal employs a broker from the opinion he entertains of his personal skill & integrity; & a broker has no right without notice to turn his principal over to another of whom he knows nothing (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—COCKRAN v. IRLAM, No. 951, post.

910. — — — —.]—Master of ship.—Action for not accounting for goods delivered in this country to deft., the master of a ship, to be sold by him abroad:—Held: there being a special confidence reposed in deft. with respect to sale of the goods, he had no right to hand them over to another person & to give them a new destination in search of a market.—CATLIN v. BELL (1815), 4 Camp. 183.

912. — — — —.]—Ship's husband.—A ship's husband is entitled to do all things usual in management of the vessel, to appoint an agent when in the ordinary sense the authority of an agent is required, but not to appoint a ship's husband to act in his place; he has no right without express sanction to intrust the performance of his duty to his firm or to any third person.—DOEG v. TRIST (1897), 13 T. L. R. 320; 2 Com. Cas. 153.

PART VI. SECT. 1.

906 i. Agent cannot delegate—Fire insurance agent.—W., a general agent of an insurance co. with authority to grant interim receipts, employed S. to solicit applications. S. was in the habit of issuing interim receipts, although he had no authority from the co. to do so. In an action to recover the amount of insurance under an interim receipt issued by S. to pltf.:—Held: as the agency of W. involved the exercise by him of judgment & discretion in the matter of accepting or rejecting risks, he could not delegate his authority to S.—SUMMERS v. COMMERCIAL UNION INSURANCE CO., p. 399, m, post.

906 ii. — — — —.]—Pltf's. claimed under an interim receipt given by H. on behalf of S., the agent of defts., an insurance co., with authority to effect interim insurances binding on the co. on receiving himself the premium in cash. H. had taken a promissory note for the premium at the time of the delivery of the interim receipt payable in three months, which was duly paid:—Held: (1) S. could not act through the medium of a sub-agent, since the authority of the original agent involved trust & confidence & was in the nature of delectus persone, & the mandatory could not legally discharge his duties by handing them over to another not selected by the mandator; (2) the powers of a sub-agent could not exceed those of the agent, & H. could only have effected an interim insurance binding on the co. on receiving the premium in cash. *London & Lancashire Life Assce. Defts. afterwards received from D., or settled in account with him, the value of their respective shares:—Held: (1) the jury were warranted in finding that defts. had authorised the sale or had by their subsequent ratification so adopted his act as to render them jointly liable to pltfs. for the commission due on the sale; (2) the position of defts. was not so altered by the fact of pltfs. having drawn upon D. a bill at three months' date for the amount of the commission as to release them from liability upon dishonour of the bill.—*KEAY v. SECT. 2.—IMPLIED AUTHORITY TO DELEGATE.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

922. General rule.—An authority to delegate is to be implied where, from the conduct of the parties to the original contract of agency, the usage of trade, or the nature of the particular business which is the subject of agency, it may reasonably be presumed that the parties to the contract of agency originally intended such authority should exist, or where, in the course of the employment, unforeseen emergencies arise which impose upon the agent the necessity of employing a substitute.—*DE BUSSCHE v. Limerick, & was handed by the attorney to another attorney, for execution there. He delivered the writ, had deft. arrested, & afterwards applied to the sheriff to let deft. go at large to vote at an election then pending. An action for an escape was brought against the sheriff, & a verdict found for pltf. A motion was made to set aside the verdict, on the ground that the second attorney, as employed by the first, was to be considered as pltf.'s attorney:—Held: the second attorney was employed by the first as an agent merely to deliver the writ to the sheriff, & the maxim Delegatus non potest delegare applied.—ACHESON v. MASSEY (1827), 1 L. Rec. O. S. 185, K. B.—IR.

917 i. — Unless expressly authorised.—A naked authority may be delegated to another where the party having such authority is expressly authorised so to do by the instrument appointing him.—MOORE v. KIRWAN (1853), 2 Ir. Jur. 188.—IR.

h. Acts not amounting to delegation.—Two joint owners of land gave H., the third joint owner, a power of attorney authorising him to make agreements for sale of the land. H. gave an estate agency co. authority to sell the land, & the co. sold certain lots to pltf.:—Held: H. did not delegate to the co. the power of sale conferred upon him by his co-owners, but merely authorised the co. to find purchasers & to carry out the sales, the terms of which were fixed by him.—ROGERS v. HEWER (1912), 19 W. L. R. 868; 1 W. W. R. 481; 1 D. L. R. 747; reversd. on other grounds, 22 W. L. R. 807; 8 D. L. R. 288.—CAN.

923. Whether power to delegate a question of fact.]—To a declaration alleging that deft. made his promissory note payable to the order of S., who indorsed to pltf., there was a plea denying the indorsement by S. It was proved that S.'s wife had authority from her husband to indorse bills & notes; that she told her daughter to indorse S.'s name on the note, which was done in the mother's presence, who handed the note to pltf.:—Held: (1) the extent of the authority given to S.'s wife was a question of fact to be determined by the jury; (2) there was evidence for the jury of an authority to indorse by the hand of another.—LORD v. HALL (1849), 8 C. B. 627; 2 Car. & Kir. 698; 19 L. J. C. P. 47; 14 L. T. O. S. 253; 137 E. R. 653.

PART VI. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 3.

k. Agent to sell timber limits—Delegation of authority to broker.]—Deft. was agent to sell timber limits on behalf of M. & Co. & himself jointly, either for cash or credit, & out of the proceeds to pay all charges, wages, etc., & all drafts & renewals, & retain for himself all advances & commission; balance, if any, to M. & Co. M. & Co. failed, & pltf., their assignee, made a new agreement with deft., by which he was to receive the purchase-money on trust to pay himself half the total price. Deft. placed timber in the hands of K. for sale as broker. K. failed to pay a sum of $1,300, proceeds of sale of timber:—Held: the employment of K. was reasonable & proper, & the loss from his failure to pay over must fall on the estate & not on deft. personally. Speight v. Gault, 22 Ch. D. 727; Parkinson v. Hanbury, L. R. 2 H. L. 1, apld.; Goulard v. Carr, 13 Q. B. D. 598 n.; Wheeler v. United Telephone Co., 13 Q. B. D. 597; Savage v. 1. Bailiff.]—A cty. et. bailiff can lawfully employ an assistant to make a lawful seizure under an execution issued to the bailiff, or to execute a civil process which includes making such seizure.—R. v. POLSKY (1916), 1 W. W. R. 451; 27 M. R. 271.—CAN.

931 i. Signature—Bill of lading.]—A number of cases of wine were delivered to S. & Co., defts.' agents, at the port of A. to be forwarded to pltf. at H. The bill of lading was signed by S. & Co., p.p. K., & described the goods as shipped in good order & condition. On examination of the goods previous to delivery, it was found that several of the cases had been tampered with, & a number of bottles of wine emptied of their contents. K., by whom the signature of S. & Co. was affixed to the bill of lading at A., had no written authority so to do, but was the chief clerk & proxy of the firm, & acted in the usual course of business:—Held: the appointment of S. & Co. as defts.' agents authorised them to perform all things usual in the line of business in which they were employed, & involved power to do particular acts by others within scope of their business, & K. as their chief clerk was competent to sign the name of the firm to bills of lading in the ordinary course of business, without any written authority so to do.—IRONNE v. MONTREAL S.S. Co. (1886), 7 R. & G. 312; 7 C. L. T. 375.—CAN.

931 ii. — Notice to quit.]—The copy of a notice to quit served upon a tenant by the landlord's agent, under a power of attorney authorising the agent to serve such notices in his own name, was signed by a clerk in the agent's name & with the agent's authority:—Held: the signature was sufficient.—M'MULLEN v. TUTE (1877), 11 L. L. T. 64.—IR.

Sect. 2.—Implied authority to delegate: Sub-sects. 3 & 4. Sect. 3: Sub-sect. 1.]

having signed a slip for a policy of insurance, the signature of his clerk, in his absence, to a policy made in pursuance thereof, is a good execution of the power, that being only a ministerial act, which he might authorise another to do for him; but he must himself execute the power in all matters in which his judgment & discretion are requisite.—MASON v. JOSEPH, No. 1069, post.

932. — Notice.]—By the Clifton Suspension Bridge Act, 11 Geo. 4 (c. lxix.), s. 109, it was provided that in all cases where it might be necessary for the trustees to give notices they should be in writing, & signed by the trustees or their clerks by their order:—Held: where the clerks were attorneys in partnership, notices signed in their names by persons in their employment, who had authority generally to sign documents in the style of the firm, were insufficient.—MILES v. BOUGH (1842), 3 Q. B. 845; 3 Gal. & Dav. 119; 12 L. J. Q. B. 74; 7 Jur. 81; 114 E. R. 732.

933. — Of claim to vote.]—Applt. gave his agent a written authority to make & sign on applt.'s behalf a claim to vote in one of the parliamentary divisions of a county, or in the administrative county, or both, as he might seem to be qualified. A notice of claim was thereupon prepared, & signed with applt.'s name by a clerk of the agent under his direction:—Held: the affixing of the signature to the notice of claim by the clerk instead of the agent did not establish that applt. had not given due notice of his claim within Parliamentary Voters Registration Act, 1843 (c. 18), s. 38.—Brown v. Tombs, [1891] 1 Q. B. 253; Fox & S. Reg. 196; 60 L. J. Q. B. 38; 64 L. T. 114; 55 J. P. 359; 7 T. L. R. 49.

934. Deputy registrar.—Effect of death of registrar.]—15 Car. 2, c. 17, creating the corpn. of the Bedford Level, directed that they should appoint a registrar, etc., & other officers at their pleasure, the duty of which registrar was to register titles to land within the Level, & he took an oath of office. The corpn. having at the request of the registrar elected a deputy registrar:—Held: (1) the latter must be considered as much a deputy of the principal registrar as if nominated by him; (2) however such deputy were properly or not constituted in the first instance, yet his authority necessarily expired on the death of his principal; (3) however the acts of a legal deputy to a ministerial officer may be good after the death of his principal before notice thereof to those who are interested in his acts, as being done under a colour of authority, yet the titles of landowners within the Level registered by the deputy after the death of his principal was known were invalid.—R. v. BEDFORD LEVEL CORPN. (1805), 6 East, 356; 2 Smith K. B. 535; 102 E. R. 1323.

935. Sale of ship.]—Where, in consequence of damage to a ship during the voyage, it becomes impossible to prosecute the adventure, the master has authority to sell her for the benefit of all parties interested; & a person employed by him to superintend the sale may lawfully pay over the proceeds to him, or to his order.—IRELAND v. THOMSON (1847), 4 C. B. 149; 17 L. J. C. P. 241; 136 E. R. 400.

936. Receipt of money.]—An attorney must necessarily in the ordinary course of business authorise his clerks to receive moneys & to do many other acts for him, in his name, & such acts are binding on the attorney & his client.—HEMMING v. HALE (1859), 7 C. B. N. S. 487; 29 L. J. C. P. 137; 6 Jur. N. S. 554; 8 W. R. 46; 141 E. R. 905.

938. Renewal of lease.]—The owner of premises placed them in the hands of F., his country solr., for the purpose of renewing pltf.'s tenancy in certain premises in London which was about to expire. F. communicated with C., his London agent, who instructed B., a land agent in London, to enter into a contract with pltf.—Held: F. entitled to delegate his authority to B.—DEW v. METROPOLITAN RY. CO. (1885), 1 T. L. R. 358, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 4.—POWER TO DELEGATE IN CASES OF SUPERVENING NECESSITY.

939. Illness of agent.]—An order having been made for payment of a sum of money out of ct. to a lady who was appointed attorney for certain parties in America, who were cestuis que trust of the fund, it appeared the lady was too ill to attend personally to receive the money; & the solr. in the case was allowed to receive it on her account, her receipt being given for it, & her signature thereto verified by affidavit.—HOLLAND v. HARPER (1853), 20 L. T. O. S. 216.

940. Exigencies of business.]—DE BUSSCHE v. ALT, No. 3, ante.

941. Drunkenness of driver.]—An omnibus belonging to defts. was being driven along a public highway by H., their servant. A police inspector honestly thinking that H. was drunk, told him he was not to drive any further, & the omnibus must be driven home. V., a passer-by who had formerly been in defts.' employment as conductor only & not as driver, volunteered to drive & did drive the omnibus home, a distance of about a quarter of a mile, the conductor & H. acquiescing in his doing so. V. drove negligently or unskilfully & by reason thereof ran over & injured pltf.:—Held: (1) as defts. might have been communicated with, there was no necessity for their servants to delegate to V. the duty of driving the omnibus home; (2) defts. were not liable for the negligence of V. Qu.: whether if there had been any such necessity defts. would have been liable.

"It is not prima facie within the scope of a coachman's employment to delegate the duty of driving to other persons" (A. L. SMITH, L.J.).—GWILLIAM v. TWIST, [1895] 2 Q. B. 84; 64 L. J. Q. B. 474; 72 L. T. 579; 59 J. P. 484; 43 W. R. 566; 11 T. L. R. 415; 14 R. 461, C. A.

942. Driver handing over driving while investigating machinery of car.]—A motor car having been repaired by defts., was sent back to the owner under charge of a driver in defts.' employment. He received instructions from defts. not to give up the driving to any one. At one stage of the journey a man not in defts.' employment accompanied the driver, who, hearing a noise at the back of the car, trusted the driving to his companion while he went to the back of the car to see the cause. His companion negligently drove the car against pltf.'s van. In an action to recover damages in the ct. the jury found a verdict for pltf. The Div. Ct. held, as there was no necessity for keeping the car going while the driver examined the machinery, nor for intrusting the driving to his companion, debts. were not liable for negligence of the latter. Upon appeal:—Held: as the question of the necessity to intrust the driving to a third person was not raised in the ct. ct. nor by notice of appeal to the Div. Ct., it could not be raised afterwards, & the verdict & judgment for pltf. must stand.—HARRIS v. FIAT MOTORS, LTD. (1907), 23 T. L. R. 504, C. A.

SECT. 3.—POSITION OF SUB-AGENT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—PRINCIPAL'S RIGHTS AGAINST SUB-AGENT.

943. In general.—Where an agent is appointed, who must appoint a sub-agent, the act of the sub-agent is not necessarily the act of the agent. If, however, negligence of the sub-agent can be treated as negligence of his immediate principal, the sub-agent may be treated as a mere servant of the agent, & there would be no privity of contract between him & the principal. The clerk of a banker receives money for the banker, & if he embezzles the money it is the loss of the banker, not of the customer (CROMPTON & BLACKBURN, J.J.).—COLLINS v. BROOK (1860), 5 H. & N. 700; 29 L. J. Ex. 255; 6 Jur. 999, Ex. Ch.

944. —Where the relationship of principal & agent has been created between a principal & a sub-agent employed by his agent & the principal has been no party to any termination of the sub-agent's agency, the agent cannot without authority from the principal change the sub-agent's position in the transaction from that of an agent to, for example, that of a purchaser from the principal (THESIGER, L.J.).—DE BUSSCHE v. ALT, No. 3, ante.

945. —MAINWARING v. BRANDON (1818), 8 Taunt. 202.

946. Deputy appointed by bailiff.—Where a bailiff employed another person as deputy to act for him, the deputy to account weekly to the bailiff:—Held: an action of account did not lie at the instance of the principal against the deputy, for the deputy was to receive to his master's use, & the immediate bailiff had account against his deputy.—MALMESBERRY (ABBOT) v. LE GODE (A.) (1330), Y. B. 4 Edw. 3, 17, pl. 8.

947. Agent appointed by trustee.—A trustee ad auctorem made a letter of attorney to S. to manage & receive rents & profits of lands. S., having done so, & accounted to the trustee, on being sued by the cestui que trust insisted that the trustee, not he, was to account, & he, having already accounted to the trustee, might be quiet as to pltf. The trustee was dead:—Held: S. must account to pltf. whether the trustee was alive or dead.—POLLARD v. DOWNES (1682), 2 Cas. in Ch. 121; 22 E. R. 876.

948. —A mere agent of the trustee may not be accountable to the cestui que trust; but otherwise with respect to a substituted trustee.—MYLER v. FITZPATRICK (1822), 6 Madd. 360; 56 E. R. 1128.

949. Insurance agent engaged by factor.—The rule of equity is, that if an order is sent by a principal to a factor to make an insurance, & he charges his principal as if it was made, if he never, in fact, has made that insurance he is considered as the insurer himself. In a transaction between merchants in different countries one sends to the other to insure, who pretends to do it, & charges his correspondent as if done, he shall, after a loss happens, be charged as the insurer; that is a right principle; but if such factor employs an agent, that equity will not extend over that agent (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—TICKEL v. SHORT (1750-1), 2 Ves. Sen. 239; 28 E. R. 154.

950. Agent's son employed by agent.—Bill for discovery & account. A son employed under, paid by, & accounting to deft., his father, may be a witness, but is not accountable to his father's principal.—CARTWRIGHT v. HATELEY (HATELY) (1791), 1 Ves. 292; 3 Bro. C. C. 238; 30 E. R. 349.

Annotation:—Reid. Ireland v. Thomson (1847), 4 C. B. 149.

951. Broker employed by del credere agent.—C consigned goods to M., his broker, upon a del credere commission for sale, & drew bills upon him in advance, which M. accepted, but never paid. Afterwards, without the knowledge of C., M. placed the goods with H., another broker, upon a del credere commission & upon an agreement to divide the

PART VI. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.

943 i. In general.—Where a mandator has employed another person to perform the duty intrusted to him, no action accrues to the principal against the sub-agent, but he must sue the mandator, who on his part must sue the sub-agent. This principle is not intended to apply to cases where in the ordinary course of business it becomes necessary for the agent to employ a sub-agent. If the custom is established & well known, it would be no violation of that principle to hold that a privity is thus created between the principal & the sub-agent.—KENNEDY v. LYNES (1909), 26 S. C. 271; 19 C. T. R. 515.—S. AF.

943 ii. Account.—Where a receiver was appointed in respect of properties about which there was litigation, in which pltf. was found to be the proprietor:—Held: a suit for account by pltf. did not lie against the tesholders employed under the receiver, as they were his sub-agents & not liable to render an account to pltf.—JATINDRA NARAIN ACHARYA CHOWDHURY v. MOHARAM AKAND (1908), 12 C. W. N. 1035.—IND.

m. Agent employed by factor.—Persons employed by a factor or agent, who is their principal, are not personally responsible for transactions carried on in the name of their principal.—DIXON v. ERU (1884), 7 L. N. 213, Q. B. 1884.—CAN.

n. Clerk of agent.—The general rule is that clerks of an agent are not agents of the principal.—HOPS v. DIXON (1875), 22 Gr. 439.—CAN.

o. Sub-agent employed by agent to purchase—Buying for himself.—An agent to purchase land employed a sub-agent to complete the negotiations for sale. The latter bought for his own benefit & in his own name:—Held: though the right of the principal was founded indirectly on the sub-agent's agreement to act, the cause of action did not arise upon this agreement as creating a trust in the land, but upon a constructive trust raised by the ct., & not created or intended by the parties. Bartlett v. Pickersgill (1759), 4 East, 577 n. discd.—PORTER v. TE KORAMO, 4 J. R. N. S. S. C. 1.—N.Z.

p. Sub-agent warranting proper execution of mortgage.—Pltf.'s solr., having in his hands for investment money of pltf., requested an agency co. to invest it, & the co. asked defts. to invest it. They invested it on a mtge., purporting to be made to B., the certified owner of certain property. The certificates had, in fact, been stolen by H., who came to defts., represented himself to be B., & forged the signatures necessary to obtain the loan. A member of deft. firm made the affidavit of execution in which he swore that the mtge. was made by B., who was personally known to him, & the money was advanced by pltf. B., the true owner, forced pltf. to remove the mtge. from the register, & pltf. sued for loss sustained:—Held: (1) there was privity between pltf. & defts., who had received a consideration, & defts. were liable to pltf. for his loss, they having in effect warranted that the person who executed the mtge. was B., the real owner; (2) even if defts. had not received any actual consideration they were guilty of negligence & liable on the principle that if a person undertakes to perform a voluntary act he is liable if he performs it improperly, but not if he neglects to perform it. Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Colten v. Wright, 8 E. & B. 647; Starkey v. Bank of England, [1903] A. C. 114; Bank of England v. Culler, [1908] 2 K. B. 208; *Bank of England v. commission with him, & obtained his acceptances for the amount. H. having sold the goods & become bkpt., his assignees received the proceeds of the sales, the acceptances of H. were proved under his commission & a dividend received upon them. In an action of money had & received by the assignee of C., who had also become bkpt., against the assignees of H.:—Held: (1) there was no privity between C. & H.; (2) the sale by H. was against C. unauthorised; (3) the assignees of H. were liable to the assignee of C. for the proceeds of sale.—COCKRAN v. IRLAM (1814), 2 M. & S. 301; 105 E. R. 393.

952. Banker employed by agent.]—A. having received money as agent for B. & others, in specific proportions for each, paid it over to C. as a banker in his own name, & having drawn out part of it, directed C. not to pay away the remainder, except by his order:—Held: (1) C. was bound to hold the money for A.; (2) B. could not recover the remainder of his share from C., though he had given C. notice that A.'s agency was at an end.—PINRO v. SANTOS (1814), 1 Marsh. 132; 5 Taunt. 447; 128 E. R. 763.

953. Agent appointed by managing owner of ship.]—A., B., & others, were owners of a ship in the service of the East India Co. B. was managing owner, & employed C. as his agent for general purposes, & amongst others to receive & pay moneys on account of the ship; & C. kept a separate account in his books with B. as managing owner. To obtain payment of a sum due from the East India Co. on account of the ship, it was necessary that the receipt should be signed by one or more of the owners, besides the managing owner, & upon a receipt signed by B. & one of the other owners C. received on account of the ship £2,000 from the East India Co., & placed it to B.'s credit in his books as managing owner. The part owners having brought money had & received to recover the balance of that account:—Held: (1) C. had received the money as agent of B., & was accountable to him for it; (2) there was no privity between the other part owners & C.; (3) the action was not maintainable.—SIMS v. BRITTAIN (1832), 4 B. & Ad. 375; 1 Nev. & M. K. B. 594; 110 E. R. 496.

954. Agent appointed by ship-broker—Custom.]—Deft. was a shipowner, pltf. a ship-broker. Deft. had employed B., a ship-broker in London, to procure a freight. Pltf. was a correspondent of B., & the terms of business between them were to act as agents in their trade for one another on terms of sharing the profits of the job. Pltf., on B.'s instructions, procured a freight, but the bargain went off. B. would not claim any agency charges. Pltf. sued deft., who knew nothing of pltf., for his share:—Held: a misdirection to leave the case to the jury to say if, by usage, one ship-broker was thus authorised by his principal to employ another.—SMITH v. BOUTCHER (1845), 4 L. T. O. S. 116 398.

955. Broker employed by agent for sale.]—Pltfs., landowners in N.Z., were in the habit of shipping wheat from N.Z. to England for sale on the London market, taking bills of lading which made the wheat deliverable to themselves in London, & indorsing these bills to M. & T., merchants & factors at Glasgow, with instructions to sell the wheat in London. M. & T. having no house or agency in London, were themselves in the habit of indorsing these bills of lading to defts., corn factors & brokers in London, for the purpose of their selling the wheat. Indorsement of the bills of lading by pltfs. to M. & T. & by M. & T. to defts. was in each case only for the purpose of selling the wheat & without intention of passing any property in it. Pltfs. knew the sales effected for them by M. & T. were made by brokers employed by M. & T., but were in no way parties to the particular contracts of sale, nor were their names disclosed upon them. Defts. effected sales of certain cargoes of wheat so consigned for sale by pltfs. in the above mode, & paid the proceeds into their own account with their bankers, & from time to time made remittances to M. & T. on account of them. Pltfs. brought an action against defts. for the net balance of the proceeds of the said cargoes of wheat after deducting the remittances made to M. & T. in respect thereof, but without giving credit due to them from M. & T. on other transactions:—Held: (1) there was no privity of contract between pltfs. & defts.; (2) whatever right pltfs. might have had as owners to claim the wheat before it had been sold, they had no right, after such sale, to the proceeds, without giving credit for the sum due to defts. from M. & T. on their general account.

M. & T. were not employed to make a contract of brokerage between pltfs. & defts. It may have been no breach in their agreement with pltfs. to employ a sub-agent, but they had no authority to make a contract between the two. The case differs from that of a manager employed by the owner of an estate to realise the produce with absolute discretion; it is part of the management to employ a broker or agent for the purpose of selling the things to be sold, & the manager has authority to create the relation of principal & agent between the owner of the estate & the person whom he employs to sell (BRAMWELL, B.).—NEW ZEALAND & AUSTRALIAN LAND CO. v. WATSON (1881), 7 Q. B. D. 374; 50 L. J. Q. B. 433; 44 L. T. 675; 29 W. R. 694, C. A.

956. Sub-agent appointed with principal's approval—Charter.]—A. & Co., employed by pltfs. to find a charter for their ship, communicated pltfs.' requirements, with their approval, to defts. Pltfs.' instructions were that a charterparty was to be effected only with a first-class firm. Defts. communicated with R. & Co., by whose agency a charter was effected with a firm in S. Pltfs. lost a considerable portion of the freight. In an action for negligence:—Held: (1) on the facts R. & Co. were agents of the charterers, & not pltfs.; (2) defts. were liable as the last brokers employed by pltfs.—*ECOSSAISE S.S. CO., LTD. v. 957. —Loan.]—Agents, employed for commission to procure an advance of money for their principals, employed for that purpose, with assent of the principals, a sub-agent, on the footing that he should share the commission with them. The sub-agent was aware that the agents were acting for their principals. He succeeded in procuring the advance of the required amount by a co. Without knowledge of the agents or their principals the sub-agent received from the co. a commission for introducing the business to them:—Held: (1) on the facts there was evidence that the contractual relation of principal & agent had been established between the principals & sub-agent; (2) even if no privity of contract existed between them, the sub-agent stood in a fiduciary relation to the principals, & was accountable to them for the commission he had received from the co.—POWELL & THOMAS v. JONES (EVANS) & Co., [1905] 1 K. B. 11; 74 L. J. K. B. 115; 92 L. T. 430; 53 W. R. 277; 21 T. L. R. 55; 10 Com. Cas. 36, C. A.

958. Principal suing agent & sub-agent jointly.—L. appointed A. his agent to manage his estates by a power of attorney containing an express power for A. to appoint a proper person to act as agent under him. A. retained B. as his solr., & employed him to receive rents, & generally in management of the estates. In B.'s books items were entered & charged as against L. A banking account was opened in the joint names of A. & B. into which rents, etc., were paid. A long correspondence took place between L.'s solr. & B. relative to the accounts which had been furnished, in the course of which B. (who was treated rather as agent of L. than of A.) said, if there were errors in them, they should be corrected. L. filed his bill against A. & B., alleging various acts of misconduct & mismanagement, & prayed an account against both A. & B.:—Held: (1) as there was no case of fraud made out against A. & B., a bill for an account could not be sustained against both an agent & a sub-agent; (2) B. not being legally liable to account to L., his submission to correct any errors in the accounts did not make him a proper party to a bill by L. for an account; (3) the bill must be dismissed against both A. & B.—LOCKWOOD v. 964 i. Remuneration—Commission.—In an action by plffs. claiming commission on a sale of defts.' property effected by plffs., & in respect of which sale they alleged they had been employed as agents by defts.:—Held: there was no evidence fit to be submitted to a jury of such employment, the evidence showing only the employment of plffs. by another agent of defts. on the terms that plffs. were to receive from that other agent one-half the commission which he received from defts.—YOUNG v. have sued the brother.—WESTAWAY v. CLOSE (1912), 21 W. L. R. 582.—CAN.

964 iii. —.]—An insurance co. was in course of organisation, & O. signing as general manager, engaged plff. to solicit subscriptions, for which service he was to receive a salary & commission. There was no evidence that O. had any authority, & the act was not ratified, no co. of the name ever becoming incorporated. Afterwards there was an amalgamation under another name, & at a meeting of the provisional directors O. was authorised to make arrangements with agents "out of his own compensation." O., signing as general manager, made another arrangement with plff. for services, & from correspondence it was clear that plff. looked to O. for payment. In an action against the co. for remuneration & commission:—Held: plff. had failed to establish any liability against the co., as any agreement he made for remuneration was made with O. alone, who was not authorised to make the agreements upon which plff. relied.—BROWN v. 961. Sub-agent liable on bill drawn by him payable to principal.—A. employed B. to sell goods for him; C., as B.'s broker, procured a purchaser & drew a bill for the amount, payable to A., which was accepted by the purchaser, but dishonoured:—Held: C. was liable to A. as drawer of the bill.—LE FEVRE v. 962. Effect of payment by sub-agent to agent as apparent principal.—A person employed by ship-owners, as their agent, effected a policy of insurance, & represented himself as principal to the brokers who caused such insurance to be effected:—Held: if the brokers received the amount of the loss from the underwriters & paid it over to the agent, they were not liable to the owners, in an action for money had & received, although part of the money was paid to the agent after they were informed of his having acted in that capacity.—BELL v. 963. Charges for labour & material.—M. being called abroad, requested G. to act for him in relation to the building of a house at W. Under this authority G., by an instrument under hand, appointed V. surveyor of the intended buildings with power to make contracts for work and materials. V. in pursuance of this power on behalf of M. contracted with workmen for the mason work, & on this work these workmen duly entered:—Held: the contract was binding on M.—MARLBOROUGH (DUKE) v. 964 iv. —.]—Principal not bound by agreement between agent & sub-agent.—Defts. arranged with their solr. the price & terms on which they were willing to sell their land. A purchaser was found by plff., who was never employed by defts., & their solr. had no authority to appoint another person as agent. The solr. promised to prepare a contract & send it to defts., but did not mention that plff. was intervening, & nothing was said about commission. Defts. admitted that they were willing to pay a commission to the solr. Defts. knew nothing of plff. & had no reason to believe that he had anything to do with the transaction. The solr. prepared the offer & acceptance in a form in which were inserted the name of plff. as defts.' agent & the promise to pay commission. The form was signed by the intending purchaser & defts. Defts., when signing it, did not read the document & had no knowledge of the introduction of plff.'s name in it:—Held: defts. not liable. Carlisle

B., without A.'s knowledge, employed C. to transact the business, & the goods were shipped by C. & landed on the Continent by C.'s agents:—Held: (1) there was no privity between A. & C.; (2) C. was not entitled to recover his charges or those of his agents from A. though A. had not paid the amount to B.—*SCHMALING v. The purchaser, afterwards discovering that the jewels were counterfeit, arrested the agent, & recovered back the purchase-money:—Held: an action would not lie by the agent against the merchant, although the agent was ignorant of the fraud when he made the sale, especially if the jury did not find that the merchant directed the factor to employ the agent, or ordered him to conceal the fact of the jewels being counterfeit.

The factor was authorised by deft. to sell the jewels, & he cannot authorise another; that which pltf. did was without warrant from deft. (MONTAGUE, J.).—SOUTHERN v. HOW (1816-18), J. Bridge. 125; Cro. Jac. 468; Poph. 143; 123 E. R. 1248.

969. —.]—Deft., a merchant at H., was for several years in the habit of instructing his bankers there to procure their London bankers to accept bills drawn upon them by foreign correspondents of deft., & the London bankers were in the habit of accepting the bills as advised. At the time of the acceptance the bankers at H. debited deft. & credited their London bankers with the amount. For this business deft. paid his bankers at H. one-quarter per cent. commission on the amount. They paid their London bankers a fixed sum of £600 per annum for their general London business, & were charged nothing extra in respect of these acceptances. Deft., except on one occasion, when he wrote to the London bankers, requesting them, in event of a draft being presented for acceptance, to hold it over for a day or two till they received instructions from the bankers at H., never communicated with them except as above. Interest was charged to deft. by the bankers at H. from the day when the bills became due. The London bankers marked all the bills directed to them under the circumstances above as "on account" of deft. The bankers at H. having become bkpt., the London bankers paid the amount of several bills accepted as above which became due subsequent to the bkpcy. In an action by the assignees of the bankers at H. upon a special case:—Held: (1) the assignees entitled to recover the amount so paid against deft., as the credit was given to him by the bankers at H. & not by the London bankers; (2) there was no evidence of any privity between deft. & the London bankers.—*BARKWORTH v. 976. Responsibility of agent—Funds received by sub-agent.]—Where a person employed to receive money for another employs a third person to re-

977. ———.]—M. employed R. & Co., bankers in Edinburgh, to obtain for him payment of a bill drawn on a person resident in Calcutta. R. & Co. accepted the employment & wrote promising to credit him with the money when received. R. & Co. wrote to M. announcing the fact of its payment, but never credited him in their books with the amount. The house in India failed:—Held: (1) R. & Co. were M.'s agents to obtain payment of the bill, & payment having been actually made, became ipso facto liable to him for the amount received; (2) he could not be called on to suffer any loss occasioned by the conduct of their sub-agents, as between whom & himself no privity existed.—*MACKERSY v. F. disappeared with the £20. A. brought an action against the sheriff for the escape; the sheriff paid £25 5s. into ct.; & A. replied, damages ultra:—Held: on this issue deft. was entitled to the verdict.

976 iii. ———. Failure of broker.]—H. employed G. & Co. to dispose of his flour, & G. & Co. employed brokers who received the proceeds of sales of H.'s flour. of the ship, which he, pltf., was authorised to send to his friends in Liverpool or London, & for this purpose to appoint & substitute attorneys & agents:—Held: deft. was not liable by reason of the bkpcy. of the substitutes for moneys due from them, & the principal should bear the loss, inasmuch as, in the circumstances, the substitutes were his own attorneys & agents, there being no evidence that the agent was not justified in appointing the sub-agent.—*SYMES v. 976 vi. ———. Where no necessity for delegation.]—Pltf. purchased a farm from B. for £2,000 & employed deft., who occasionally acted as country agent, to do what was necessary to obtain transfer. The terms of the sale were that instalments of £1,000 & £200 should be paid before transfer, & deft., in the performance of his agency, transmitted to the seller's agent the amounts of the instalments thus payable. Subsequently deft. employed his Cape Town attorneys to obtain certain papers required to pass transfer, but owing to absence of a clerk there was some months' delay. In the meantime the seller surrendered his estate & pltf. lost the greater part of the money he had paid:—Held: there was an unreasonable delay in passing transfer, & as there was no necessity for employing the Cape Town attorneys to obtain the papers, or proof of custom to justify deft. in not doing the work himself, he was liable for the loss sustained by pltf. by reason of the delay.—*KENNEDY v. 981. — Trover.—A. intrusted B. with goods to sell in India, agreeing to take back from B. what he should not be able to sell, & allowing him what he should obtain beyond a certain price, with liberty to sell them for what he could get if he could not obtain that price; B. not being able to sell the goods in India himself, left them with an agent to be disposed of by him, directing the agent to remit the money to himself in England:—Held: A. could not maintain trover against B. for the goods.—BROMLEY v. COXWELL (1801), 2 Bos. & P. 438; 126 E. R. 1372.

982. — Conversion by sub-agent.—A., a London merchant, employed B. & Co., an agency co. in London, to transmit on A.'s behalf the usual shipping documents in connection with a consignment of certain goods by A. shipped at H. for conveyance to S., with instructions to B. & Co. to forward them to their S. correspondent, there to be sold at the best possible price, & the proceeds to be remitted to pltf. B. & Co. sent the documents to C. at S., with orders to sell, etc. B. & Co. did not inform A. who C. was. C. converted the goods to his own use, & A. sued B. & Co. for the price of the goods:—Held: (1) B. & Co. employed C. as their sub-agent; (2) there was no privity of contract between A. & C. to make C. liable to A.; (3) B. & Co. were liable to A. by reason of C.'s default.—MEYERSTEIN v. EASTERN AGENCY CO., LTD. (1885), 1 T. L. R. 595.

983. — Negligence in supervising acts of sub-agent.—A. was appointed by the ct. paid manager of an estate. It was part of his duty to pay moneys received by him as such manager in a certain manner; & from time to time he remitted to his solrs. one moiety of the surplus moneys not required for the purpose of carrying on the business that it might be paid into ct. The solrs. misappropriated the moneys:—Held: (1) A. was justified in employing solrs. for the purpose of the payment into ct., the exigencies of the business justifying him in employing skilled sub-agents; (2) negligence on his part being established, A. was liable.—Re MITCHELL, MITCHELL v. MITCHELL (1884), 54 L. J. Ch. 342; 52 L. T. 178; 1 T. L. R. 153.

PART VII. SECT. 2.

986 i. In general.—[Whole transaction must be ratified.]—Pltf. went to B.C. nine years before the action, leaving his wife behind, to whom he wrote & occasionally sent money. She procured debt. to indorse a note made by her for the price of furniture to carry on a boarding-house (which she subsequently carried on with pltf.'s knowledge), & executed to debt. a chattel mtge. under seal in her own name on the furniture. The rent of the house being in arrear, & part of the mtge. money overdue, the landlord distrained, & debt. enforced his mtge., & pltf.'s wife not dissenting but rather assenting, the goods were sold, & the balance, after the payment of rent &

mtge., was handed over to her. Pltf. thereupon sued debt. in trespass & trover:—Held: as by the action pltf. ratified the conduct of his wife in purchasing the furniture, he should not be allowed to repudiate the mtge., which formed part of the whole arrangement.—HALFENNY v. The sum produced by the sale was carried to a fund belonging jointly to F. & his partners. His partners knew of the money thus produced being carried to their partnership fund, but did not know it was produced by forgery. F. was afterwards convicted & executed for another forgery. Nolaches or connivance was attributable to the other trustees:—Held: (1) the trustees might adopt the transfer, though as against them it would not have been binding, & though it originated in a forgery; (2) the partners of F. were liable for the proceeds of the sale.—*STONE v. charge of forgery, & while in custody the holders of the above bills of exchange applied to J. for payment of them:—Held: the written acknowledgment by J. (after the bills had been dishonoured) that he was responsible for them, & also that he engaged to pay them in case his brother should fail to do so, was not sufficient to make him liable upon the bills, no antecedent authority having been given to W. to accept them, & the subsequent acknowledgment of liability being made to screen his brother from a charge of forgery.—Re LATHAM, Ex p. EDWARDS (1841), 2 Mont. 994. ———.]—A forged instrument cannot be ratified by the person whose name is forged, & he cannot adopt it so as to make himself liable thereon.

J. owed pltf. £20, & sent to him a promissory note for that amount, which purported to bear, & was believed by pltf. to bear, the signatures of J. & deft., J.'s brother-in-law. Before the note became due, pltf. met deft. & mentioned the note to him. He denied the signature to be his, & pltf. said it must be a forgery of J.'s, & he would consult a lawyer with the view of taking criminal proceedings against him. Deft. begged pltf. not to do so, & said he would rather pay the money. Pltf. said he must have it in writing; & if deft. would sign a memorandum, he would take it. Deft. signed a document admitting himself to be responsible to pltf. for the amount of the note:—Held (MARTIN, B., diss.): (1) the foregoing document was no ratification of the forged promissory note, but an agreement on the part of deft. to treat the note as his own & to become liable upon it, in consideration that pltf. would forbear to prosecute J.; (2) this agreement was against public policy & void, as founded upon an illegal consideration; (3) although a voidable act might be ratified by matter subsequent, it was otherwise when an act was originally & in its inception void; (4) the foregoing document was of no effect as a ratification, as the act done—that is, the forged signature to the note—was illegal & void.—*BROOK v. The advance not being repaid, resps. charged the amount against the deposit. Later R. confessed to resps. that he had so used the receipt, & begging applt. not to prosecute him, gave applt. a mtgc. on some property in which he had an interest. Two years later applt. notified the bank of R.'s fraud & demanded payment:—Held:

although R. had falsely represented that he had an authority which he did not possess, his dealing with the receipt had been ratified by applt., & the fact that R. had committed a criminal offence did not render his act incapable of ratification, there having been no undertaking on the part of either applt. or resp. to forbear to prosecute. *McKenzie v. M., who was acting for W. M. in his absence, & that she agreed to pay him the £200 & keep it out of the contract. After the work which pltf. contracted to do had been completed, F. drew an order on M. M. for the amount to which pltf. was entitled, which M. M. accepted in these terms: "Accepted by M. M."—Held: the acceptance, being one which purported to be binding only upon M. M., was incapable of ratification by W. M., & the doctrine of ratification was inapplicable.—*CRAIG v. that the position of the bank is altered for the worse. But there is no principle on which his mere silence for two weeks from the time when he first knew of the forgery, during which the position of the bank was in no way altered or prejudiced, can be held to be an admission or adoption of liability or an estoppel.

The names of A. & B. appeared on a bill as drawers & indorsers to B. L. Co. The B. L. Co.'s Inverness bank discounted it for C., who signed it as acceptor. They had no previous dealings with A. or B. The bill being dishonoured when due, notice to that effect was sent to A. & B., & received late on a Saturday, but they did not communicate with the bank. On the following Monday, Apr. 14, C. brought to the B. L. Co. a blank bill with A. & B.'s names as drawers & indorsers, apparently in the same handwriting as the previous bill. It was agreed to accept it as a renewal of the previous bill, but for a less amount, the difference being paid in cash by C. Three days before it was due notice was sent to A. & B., & again when it was dishonoured, & then through the B. L. Co.'s law agent. A fortnight after the first notice the B. L. Co. were informed for the first time that A. & B.'s signatures were forgeries, & they declined to pay the amount of the bill. A. alleged that he called on C. on Apr. 14 about the first bill, & C. admitted that he had forged his name, handed him the bill, & solemnly assured him that it had been taken up by cash; & so assured, he did not think it necessary to communicate with the bank. He admitted that on that day he drank with C. & borrowed £4 of him. He denied any knowledge of the second bill until he received the bank notices. C. was convicted of the forgery. The B. L. Co. charged A. with payment of the bill on the ground that he had either authorised the use of his name or subsequently adopted & accredited the bill, & was estopped from denying liability:—Held: on the facts proved A. had neither authorised nor assented to the use of his name, & the circumstances did not raise any estoppel against him.—*M'KENZIE v. Insurance without orders by bailee of goods.—Pltf., a wharfinger, effected a policy of insurance against fire on "goods in trust or on commission," intending thereby to cover the goods of customers. No charge for insurance was made to customers, nor were they informed of the existence of the policy. On a fire happening:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover the entire value of the goods of customers which had been destroyed, & not merely the value of his own lien on them.

A person intrusted with goods can insure them without orders from the owner, & even without informing him that there was such a policy. 999 i. Invalid transaction.—In certain leases the lessor was described as the surviving trustee of a will. In that capacity he, as owner, & not as agent for another, demised lands, in which he had not at the time of the respective demises any equitable or legal estate whatever, nor any power enabling him to grant leases; but he was, as agent, in receipt of the rents of the demised lands for the persons who were beneficially interested under the will:—Held: these leases, quod contracts, could not be sustained on the ground of a subsequent ratification of them by those persons.—BYRNE v. RORKE (1869), 1 R. 3 Eq. 642.—IR.

999 ii. ——Though a subsequent ratification may supply the want of authority in an agent at the time of his acceptance of an offer, it must be shown in such case that there was a contract purporting to be made by & with the agent, which, if the agent had authority, would be a valid binding contract.

At a meeting of a dispensary committee, an agreement in writing for the purchase by them, as agents for the board of guardians, from deft. for £60, of a plot of land for a doctor's residence & dispensary, was signed by deft. & by the chairman on behalf of the committee. The committee had at the time no authority from the board of guardians to contract for the purchase of land. Deft. subsequently withdrew his offer, & refused to carry out the agreement. After such withdrawal & refusal the agreement came before the board of guardians, & was approved by them. Neither the agreement nor the approval was under seal. In a suit by the guardians for specific performance:—Held: (1) there being nothing under the seal of the guardians to give effect to the agreement in the only way in which they could bind themselves, there was not any contract which could be ratified by them, so as to make their approval relate back to the date of the agreement, & thus render the withdrawal by deft. inoperative; (2) the guardians were not entitled to enforce the agreement. *Kidderminster Corp. v. 1001. Act done with fraudulent intention of deriving personal benefit therefrom.]—Where an agent makes a contract purporting to sell goods in the name of a principal, but with the fraudulent intention of selling them on his own account & for his own benefit, it is competent for the principal to ratify & take the benefit of the contract as against the buyers.

V. was agent of T. for purposes of entering into & rescinding contracts of sale. V. on T.'s behalf sold certain goods to M. & H. Subsequently, not purporting to act as T.'s agent, he repurchased the goods sold, & resold them purporting to act as T.'s agent, but really intending to sell them for his own benefit. The buyers, on discovering or suspecting he was selling on his own behalf, repudiated the contract of sale. After the repudiation T. ratified & adopted it:—Held: he could so do, notwithstanding V.'s fraud & the buyers' repudiation.—Re TIEDEMANN & LEDERMANN FRÈRES, [1899] 2 Q. B. 66; 68 L. J. Q. m. Joint agents cannot ratify each other's acts.]—A. & B., general agents of deft. co., jointly appointed W. as general agent of the co. at L. with authority to grant interim receipts. W. employed S. to solicit applications, but S. had no authority from the co. to issue interim receipts. S. subsequently had a conversation with A. in which he told the latter that he was in the habit of issuing interim receipts, & A. agreed to his doing so & said S. was to be considered as W.'s agent. S. signed an interim receipt to cover an insurance of pitf.'s property which was subsequently destroyed by fire. In an action to recover the amount of the insurance under the terms of this receipt:—Held: there was no evidence of ratification by the co., as, even if authority to act as agent independently of W. had been given by A., such authority would not have been valid because not given by A. & B. jointly, they being joint agents of the co.—*SUMMERS v. 1011. ———.—Distress by equitable owner—Ratification by legal owner.—]—A distress for rent upon a warrant signed by one who has only an equitable interest in the land cannot be rendered valid by a ratification subsequently given by the legal owner. By a subsequent ratification, the distrainer has an authority in him at the time, but only where the authority is put forward at the time, & the act is manifestly done under it, for the ratification can only operate on the act as it is; it adopts the act as actually done by or for the benefit of him for whom it is alleged at the time it is so done. If it does more, it changes the nature of the act, which he alleges to be done in his own right & for his own benefit, & turns it into an act alleged to be done in

The charterparty, which amounted to a demise of the ship, was made between C. & Sons, "as agents for the owners," & applts., & provided that the owners should pay for insurance on the ship. A policy of insurance was effected by insurance brokers on the instructions of C. & Sons, agents of the owners, "as well in their own name as for & in the name & names of all & every other person or persons to whom the subject-matter of this policy does or may or shall appertain in part or in all." The name of applts. was not mentioned in the policy, which was a valued policy, & contained a collision clause. During the continuance of the policy the B. came into collision with another ship. Legal proceedings being taken in the cts. of the United States of America, the collision was found to have been caused by negligence of the master & crew of the B., & applts. were compelled to pay damages to the owners of the other ship:—Held: applts. were not entitled to recover from the underwriters the damages so paid by them as being a loss covered by the policy, there being no evidence that it was effected on their behalf, or that they were within the contemplation of the parties at the time it was made.—BOSTON FRUIT CO. v. Deft. was not told who the principal was. The broker issued a provisional cover note, but the principal repudiated the insurance. The broker, without informing deft., issued a fresh cover note, containing deft.'s name as underwriter, to pltf., who desired to reinsure an interest in the same goods. Deft. signed a policy in the ordinary Lloyd's form, bearing the same

At the time both deft. & C. believed that M. was purchasing for himself, or on behalf of himself & others. Pltf. consented to allow her name to be used as purchaser, & this was handed to C. a few days after the receipt of the deposit. The transaction was not completed within the ten days, but the negotiations were carried on after that period:—Held: C., who was merely a dummy, could not enforce the contract & had no interest in it. At the date of the receipt by deft. to C., C. was unaware of the existence of pltf., & could not be acting on her behalf, & pltf. could not ratify or take advantage of the contract. Keighley, Maxsted v. on mtgs. executed to pltf. by the adoptive mothers of deft. (who were also defts.) subsequent to his adoption. Pltf. contended that the mtgs. had become effectual as against deft. by reason of his subsequent conduct. Evidence was given that he had promised his adoptive mothers to redeem the mtgs., & that he had stood by & allowed pltf. to carry out the provisions of the mtgs. deeds to his own detriment by paying maintenance to deft.'s adoptive mothers, & by paying off certain mtgs. which had been created by them previous to the adoption of deft.:—Held: the promise to redeem could not have the effect of ratification, for the ratification of the unauthorised contract of an agent can only be effectual when the contract has been made by the agent avowedly for or on account of the principal, & not when it has been made on account of

1017. —Heir.]—During the life of D., owner in fee of land which was let to tenants from year to year & week to week, the property was managed by deft. as her agent, deft. receiving the rents & paying them into a separate earmarked account at his own bank. D. having died intestate in 1867, deft. continued to receive the rents & pay them into the bank exactly as before, not informing the tenants of D.'s death, but stating to several persons that he was acting as agent & receiver for the heir, whoever he might be. Deft. thus acted till 1880, when, more than 12 years after D.'s death, he claimed the property on his own account. The assignee of D.'s heir having in 1881 brought an action against deft. to recover possession of the land & for an account of the rents & profits:—Held: (1) deft.'s acts in receiving the rents as agent for the heir, though unauthorised, might be ratified by the true owner, & were ratified by pltf. bringing his action within a reasonable time after the heir was ascertained; (2) pltf. was entitled to judgment for recovery of possession of the land & to an account of the rents & profits since D.'s death.—*LYELL v. The contract was not under the corporate seal, nor was it signed by an agent of pltfs. appointed for that purpose under the corporate seal; but subsequent to the date of the breach a resolution recording the letting to deft. was duly entered in pltfs.' books & sealed with the corporate seal:—Held: the resolution, being after the breach, was too late to operate as a ratification.—KIDDERMINSTER CORPN. v. 1026. Exercise of option—Before option expires.]—Acceptance by an agent acting without authority of an option of purchase, which has to be exercised within a limited time, is not made effective by the principal's ratification after the time has expired.

Articles of partnership between two persons provided that, in the event of one of the partners dying, the surviving partners should be at liberty to purchase the share of the deceased partner upon his giving notice to that effect within 3 months after the death. Upon the death of one of the partners, notice was given on behalf of the surviving partner, who was of unsound mind, by his solr., within the 3 months, but without any authority so to do. Afterwards an order was made under Lunacy Act, 1890 (c. 5), authorising a notice being given on behalf of the surviving partner, & notice was given, but after expiration of the 3 months:—Held: the subsequent notice did not ratify the first notice so as to make it valid from its date, & the notice was invalid.—DIBBINS v. 1031. Payment—Before money returned by creditor.]—Where a creditor accepts payment of a debt from a stranger without debtor's authority, it is competent to creditor, on discovering want of authority & before any ratification of payment by debtor, to undo the payment by returning the money to the stranger; & debtor cannot in such case ratify the payment by placing a plea of payment on the record in an action brought against him for the amount by creditor.

Deft. being indebted to pltf., S., who had acted as his attorney in the matter of pltf.'s claim (the amount of which was disputed), but whose authority had been countermanded, paid to pltf. £60 in discharge of the disputed claim. Pltf. afterwards at the request of S., & before any ratification by deft., repaid to S. the £60, & sued deft. for the debt. Deft. pleaded as to £60 payment, & relied upon the payment made by S.:—Held: (1) it was competent to pltf. & S., before ratification by deft., to cancel what they had done; (2) the plea of pay-1032. — To person pleading set-off.—At time of trial.]—It is a good answer to a plea of set-off that the amount has been paid by a person professing to act as agent for & on account of pltf., though without his authority, & that the latter ratified the act at the time of the trial.

The treasurer of a corpn. paid their clerk, deft., the amount of his year's salary, both parties believing at the time that the treasurer had the authority of the corpn. to make such payment; but the treasurer had no such authority, & the corpn. afterwards repudiated the payment & dismissed deft. from their service. In an action against deft. for recovery of certain moneys paid to him on account of the corpn.:—Held: the corpn. was entitled at the trial to ratify the act of their treasurer, & deft. could not set off the amount of his salary as due to him from the corpn.—*SIMPSON v. 1033. Prosecution for nuisance.—After issue but before hearing of summons.—A committee appointed by a metropolitan vestry under Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (c. 170), s. 58, for the purpose, inter alia, of executing the Metropolis Management Acts, so far as they related to the public health of the parish, being informed by the sanitary inspector that a nuisance existed upon certain premises endangering the health of the inhabitants, directed the inspector to serve notice upon the owner of the premises under the Acts requiring him to abate the nuisance, & in default to take proceedings. The inspector, in pursuance of such direction, served the required notice, & upon the owner failing to comply with it, laid an information against him for penalties under the Acts, & a summons was issued. After the issue of the summons & before the hearing of the information, the vestry by resolution approved the acts of the committee in causing the notice to be served & the information to be laid:—Held: the approval of the vestry, although given after the service of the notice, & the issue of the summons, was sufficient, & the owner was liable to be convicted.—*FIRTH v. 1034. Removal of master.—After termination of voyage.—A., professing to act as agent of B., the owner of a vessel, under a power of attorney removed C., the master, from command during the voyage for alleged misconduct. 1035. Stoppage in transitu.—Before expiry of transit.—I., a merchant in America, shipped certain cargoes of goods to the account of C. & T., merchants in England, against whom a fiat in bkpcy. issued on May 8. Immediately on the arrival of the cargoes on May 5, 7, & 9, defts., during the continuance of the transit, gave notice to the masters & assignees of a claim to stop the goods in transit on behalf of I. Defts. were not agents of I., nor had they received any authority from I. to make the stoppage. On May 11 pltf., the official assignees of C. & T., demanded from the masters & consignees the cargoes then on board the vessels in port & undelivered, but delivery of them was refused. On the same day the masters handed over the cargoes to defts., who on May 12 refused to deliver them to pltf., the assignees of C. & T., on demand. On the 13th, H., having received from I. a power of attorney, executed on Apr. 28, to stop the goods in transit, on the same day adopted & confirmed the previous stoppage of defts., & I. before commencement of the action adopted & ratified the acts of defts. & H.:—Held: (1) there could be no valid stoppage in transit after demand of the goods by pltf. on May 11; (2) the ratification by I., after the transit was ended, was too late & had not the effect of altering retrospectively the property in the goods, which at that time, notwithstanding the act of defts., had become vested in pltf.—*BIRD v. 1036. — Power received after stoppage.]—R., a merchant resident in Jamaica, on Feb. 29, 1860, ordered from P. & G., merchants at B., in America, goods to be shipped to him at K., in Jamaica, at his risk & expense. The goods were shipped & sent on Mar. 28 following. On Mar. 31, while the goods were on their voyage, a fiat of insolvency was issued against R., & H. was appointed official assignee. Previously, however, on Mar. 28, P. & G. were advised of the failure of R. by a letter from a firm in Jamaica, & on Mar. 29 by a letter from R. himself, who, at the same time, informed them that he had handed the goods to N. (one of resp. firm) as agent for P. & G., for whose firm N. had previously acted as agent & transacted business. The letters of Mar. 28 & 29 reached P. & G. on Apr. 16, & on that day they executed & sent a letter & a power of attorney to N. to do & transact on their behalf whatever was necessary for their interests in the consignment of the goods to R. The power of attorney was not received by N. until May 5. The vessel containing the assignment arrived at K. on Apr. 21, & on that day N. demanded on behalf of P. & G. & obtained possession of the goods, which he afterwards disposed of. An action of trover having been brought by H., applt., the official assignee of R., against resp. firm of R. & N. for the value of the goods, the jury found for pltf. for the amount the goods had sold for; but leave was reserved to defts. to set aside the verdict & enter a nonsuit, which was afterwards directed, on the ground that, as R. had signified to N. his refusal to receive the goods before his insolvency, the property in them had reverted to P. & G., & had never passed to pltf., the official assignees:—Held: (1) resp. N., being sufficiently proved to have been the agent of P. & G., before R.'s insolvency, the possession taken by him of the cargo on Apr. 21 was an effectual stoppage in transitu on behalf of P. & G.; (2) the letter & power of attorney sent by P. & G., though not received until after the

In an action against B.'s administratrix, in ignorance of the agreement, confirmed the sale of the picture was not an adoption by her of the agreement so as to make her liable to pay £100.—CAMPANARI (CAMPANASI) v. 1038. —.]—Pltfs., through D. & Co., brokers, sold 682 bags of linseed, at a certain price per quarter, to H., & H. afterwards, through same brokers, sold the linseed at an increased price to deft. The time for deft.'s payment of the purchase-money was to arrive before the time fixed for H.'s payment. Deft. being in want of the linseed to complete a contract he had made, sent one of his clerks to D. & Co. for the delivery order with instructions to follow up the matter & get the order. The clerk was taken by D. & Co. to pltfs., from whom he obtained the order only on his promising that deft. would pay pltfs. for the seed, as pltfs. required to be paid before they parted with the order. On the following day deft. sent a cheque to D. & Co. for £900 on account of the linseed, which had not been measured at that time, so that the precise quantity of it was not then known. Upon its being measured it was found that pltfs. were entitled under their contract with H. to receive £971 15s. 6d. In an action by them against deft. to recover the difference between this amount & £900, the amount of the cheque:—Held: there was no evidence to warrant a jury in finding a ratification by deft. of the contract the clerk had made, it not being proved that the clerk had communicated to deft. what had passed between him & pltfs. when he obtained the order.—FITZGERALD & GREENHILL v. DRESSLER (1859), 7 C. B. N. S. 374; 29 L. J. C. P. 113; 33 L. T. O. S. 43; 5 Jur. N. S. 598; 141 E. R. 861.

Limitation, constitute a defence; but before the principal can properly be said to have ratified or adopted the act of his agent or waived his right of complaint in respect of such act it should be shown that he has had full knowledge of its nature & circumstances, in other words, that he had presented to his mind proper materials upon which to exercise his power of election; & it by no means follows that, because in a case like the present he does not repudiate the whole transaction after it has been completed he has lost a right (actually vested in him) to the profits derived by his agent from it (THIESIGER, L.J.).—DE BUSSCHE v. Defts., who were to open a street through the land, applied to the agents, who conveyed to them by deed of gift the piece of land required, believing that the opening of the street would increase the value of the adjoining land of their principals. After this partition was made between A. & B. by mutual deed of release, & the land through which the proposed street was to be laid out became the sole property of A., & in the deed thereof executed by B. to A., & on a plan annexed thereto, the land released to A. was described as bounded by the proposed street. A similar plan was annexed to the deed given by A. to B. Defts. afterwards entered on the land & opened the street, for which A. brought trespass:—Held: A.'s agent had exceeded his authority in conveying the land to defts., & A. had not ratified

When ratification must be under seal.]—An instrument under seal executed on behalf of a principal by an agent without authority must be ratified under seal, & a parol ratification is insufficient; but where the seal is not essential to the validity of the instrument, a parol ratification, though it does not make the instrument binding as the deed of the principal, gives it the effect of a written contract by him.

Where a ship, on being sold, was transferred by an instrument executed under seal by the auctioneer, without authority, & the owner subsequently ratified the sale by conduct:—Held: (1) 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 31, did not require the transfer to be under seal; (2) the ratification gave to the instrument the effect of a written transfer according to the Act.—*HUNTER v. 1047. Acceptance of allotment of shares.—Letter of authority given after act done.]—R. having applied evidence. He proved also that he had paid a great advance in rent, which had been duly received by D. Pltf. insisted it was necessary to show a written authority from D. to T.:—Held: there was no evidence or grounds for leaving it to the jury to presume any authority, either written or parol, from D. to T.—JACK v. ALEXANDER, ROWE, 496, K. B.—IR.

1044 v. — Letters to third party—Res inter alios acta.]—To establish a valid ratification of an agent's acts it is necessary to prove an intention by the principal to confirm & adopt the unauthorised acts done on his behalf, & that intent must be expressed with full knowledge of all the material circumstances or with the object of confirming the agent's acts in all events. Where pltf. founded an allegation of express ratification by deft. on the terms of a letter addressed by deft. to another person & not to the agent or pltf., nor intended to be communicated to them:—Held: the letter, being res inter alios acta, did not establish a ratification.—*REID v. to sign as agent for deft., but who had not, at the time he signed the agreement, authority from deft. to close a sale. The agreement when it came to deft.'s knowledge was ratified & confirmed by her by a letter (not under seal) to pltf.'s solrs.:—Held: in order to bind deft. it was not necessary that the instrument should be under seal, & the ratification was sufficient.—*Hunter v. PART VII. SECT. 6, SUB-SECT. 2.

o. Agreement to pay.—Subsequent vote in council without reference to contract.]—The Provincial Secretary of Q., without the authority of an Order in Council, issued a letter to D. in which he stated that the Govt. would provide in the next budget for $3,000 on account of printing work undertaken by D., & that such sum would be payable to anyone to whom D. indorsed the letter. D. indorsed the letter to applts., who sought to recover upon it:—Held: a subsequent Act of the legislature appropriating a certain sum for work of the class which D. had performed was not a ratification of the promise contained in the letter, since it merely gave the Executive power to pay the amount without forcing them to do so.—JACQUES-CARTIER BANK v. THE QUEEN (1895), 25 S. C. R. 84.—CAN.

Sec. 6.—What amounts to ratification: Sub-sect. 2.]

for shares in a co. wrote to the co. requesting that the letter of allotment might be handed to H., one of its promoters. The shares were allotted to R., & on H.'s applying for the allotment a bundle containing numerous letters of allotment was handed to him. It was disputed whether the allotment to R. was amongst these, but it was proved that when H. received the bundle, R.'s letter to the co. had not been posted, but was afterwards sent by R. to H. & by him produced to the co. R. never paid anything in respect of the shares, but, his name having been inserted by the liquidator in the list of contributories:—Held: (1) the letter, though not in H.'s hands when he received the allotment, was a ratification of what he did; (2) the evidence showing that the allotment letter of R.'s shares was in the bundle handed to H., R. had notice of the allotment, & must be settled on the list.—Re LAFFITTE & Co., LTD., DE ROSAZ'S CASE (1869), 21 L. T. 10, C. A.

1048. Admission to copyhold—Delay in dissent.]—Though the admittance may be invalid, by reason of its having been made by the steward out of the manor, yet the jury, after the lapse of 35 years, during which the property has been enjoyed, & more than once transmitted on assumption of validity of the entry under the admittance, are warranted in finding that the admittance has been ratified by the lord.—DOE v. GUTTERIDGE v. SOWERBY (1860), 7 C. B. N. S. 599; 29 L. J. C. P. 291; 2 L. T. 150; 6 Jur. N. S. 870; 8 W. R. 393; 141 E. R. 950.

1049. Approval of building specifications—Work proceeded with.]—A. bought certain land from a ry. co. subject to a condition that he was to erect no building or make any specifications except according to specifications approved by the co.'s principal engineer. Specifications were sent by A. to the resident engineer for transmission to the principal engineer for approval. The resident engineer did not send them to the principal engineer, but told A. he might proceed. The plans were not seen by the principal engineer until the work had been proceeding for 2 months, when he at once refused to approve them:—Held: (1) the approval of the resident engineer was not binding on the co.; (2) the fact that A. had been allowed to continue the work for 2 months was not, in the circumstances, such an acquiescence on the part of the co. as to exempt A. from being restrained from further prosecuting the works.—A.-G. v. BRIGGS, A.-G. v. BIRMINGHAM & OXFORD JUNCTION RY. CO. (1855), 1 Jur. N. S. 1084.

1050. Borrowing—Deposit of security—Correspondence as to value of security.]—A. accepted bills for the accommodation of B., who deposited title-deeds of A. with C., the holder of the bills, as security for their payment; A. wrote to C. referring to the existence of the debt, saying "the security you hold is a great deal more than I really owe by half. I should be very sorry to take what I owe you for the property":—Held: the letter was a sufficient memorandum to entitle C. to hold the premises to the full amount of the bills, though B. had no direct authority at the time of deposit to deposit the deeds with C.—Re BELL, Ex p. SKINNER (1832), 1 Deac. & Ch. 403, C. of R.

1051. — Mortgage.]—Deft. M., previous to his departure for India, executed a power of attorney constituting his wife, his partner, & another person his attorneys in a great variety of matters specified in the power. He was the owner of real estates in Essex, the title-deeds of which were left in the custody of his wife. During his absence, the attorneys, believing they had authority to do so, purported to mtgc. the real estates to pltf. co. Mrs. M. deposited the title-deeds with the co. & covenanted that M. should execute a legal mtgc. On M. learning this proceeding he was dissatisfied & blamed his wife for having consented to part with his title-deeds. The mtgc. deeds sent to him for execution did not reach him, & were never executed. On his return to England he negotiated with pltf. co. for a further loan & wrote a letter to the co. containing the words "I propose to borrow from your co. a sum of £6,000 to be secured on my Essex property which you now hold in addition to the sum of £12,000 already advanced by your co. & secured thereon," but the negotiation was ineffectual. Deft. repudiated the former mtgc. On an application by pltf. co. for a receiver:—Held: (1) the question whether the letter was written with full knowledge of all the circumstances of the case could not be determined until the cause was in a more advanced state; (2) on the record as it then stood it did not appear sufficiently that deft. had ratified the transaction.—HOPE INSURANCE CO. v. MUNNINGS (1822), 1 L. J. O. S. Ch. 49.

1052. — — — Admission of charge in negotiations for further loan.]—A merchant, being abroad, empowered certain persons in England to receive moneys, adjust claims & do other acts. Money being wanted by his firm in England, of which firm he was a partner, his attorneys deposited certain deeds with the H. Co. to secure £12,000, & covenanted that he should execute the mtgc. The power of attorney was not sufficient authority, but the merchant, on his return to England, having written a letter to the H. Co., requesting the loan of £6,000 "to be secured on my Essex property which you now hold, in addition to the sum of £12,000 already advanced," & professing his readiness to 1049 i. Approval of building specifications—Work proceeded with.]—A wife, proprietor of a piece of land upon which a house has been built on a contract made with her husband in his own name & the builders, is responsible for the price of the house, because she consented to the construction & her husband acted as her agent without declaring it; & even if her husband might not be considered as her agent, she would still be held responsible, but only as to the extent of the extra value given to her property by the construction.—DELANGER v. PAQUETTE (1884), 11 Q. L. R. 67.—CAN.

p. Bill of exchange—Acceptance per procuration—Statement of principal.]—In an action on a bill of exchange expressed to be accepted "per procuration" by deft.'s clerk, evidence was given of a conversation with deft. in which he stated that A. (the drawer) had drawn a bill on m which pltf. h. held, & that A. ought to pay it, because it was drawn for his benefit:—Held: there was sufficient proof to leave to the jury of a recognition of the clerk's authority to accept.—MORRISON v. SPURR (1856), 3 All. 288.—CAN.

1051 i. — Mortgage bond—Presence at execution.]—Two of certain co-sharers in a patni taluk executed a bond to pay off rent due on the estate. In an action in which all the co-sharers were defts.:—Held: liability under the bond only extended to the co-sharers who actually signed the bond, & to such other co-sharers as, by their presence at the time of execution, might be considered to have acquiesced in it.—*MOHESH CHUNDER BANERJEE v. q. Building contract—Making payments on account.]—The managing director of a ry. co. entered into contracts for & on behalf of the co. for the construction of the road, erection of station-houses, & maintenance of way, at certain prices set forth in the schedules, under which the contractor entered upon the execution of the works, constructed the road & some of the station-houses, & during the progress of the work had been paid large amounts on account of his work according to the scheduled prices, after which the co. refused to allow him to complete the contracts, alleging that the prices agreed to be paid were exorbitant, & that the agent had not been authorised to enter into them:—Held: the co. bound by the contracts, on the ground of ratification & acquiescence therein.—*BUFFALO & LAKE HURON R. 1053. — Pledge of goods—Mere delay without alteration in situation of parties.—Where a principal, whose goods had been pledged by a factor without authority, omitted for some time to make any demand, or to make any communication to the pledgee:—Held: such omission could not be considered as an affirmation of the act of the factor, unless it appeared the delay had caused an alteration in the situation of the parties—in that of the principal for the better, or of the pledgee for the worse.—ROBERTSON v. KENSINGTON, No. 511, ante.

1054. Charterparty—Loading of cabin—Acceptance of goods so loaded & charging freight therefor.—Deft., a merchant in London, chartered a vessel of pltf.'s to bring from B. a full & complete cargo at £3 5s. per ton. Deft.'s agents at B. filled the carrying part of the vessel, & also the cabin, with their own goods, & consigned them to deft., as their factor, for sale. There was contradictory evidence as to the terms upon which the cabin was filled. The bill of lading was annexed to a bill of exchange drawn by the agents upon deft., which bill of exchange was sold to a third party. On the ship's arrival in London pltf. claimed freight for the cabin at the then current rate of £7 per ton. Deft. insisted that he was entitled to the use of the cabin as well as the other part of the ship at the rate of £3 5s. per ton, but he charged his agents for freight at the rate of £7 per ton, & allowed them commission at that rate. The goods were stopped, the bill of exchange not having arrived at maturity, when this action was brought to recover the above rate of freight for the use of the cabin. Deft., after action brought, paid the bill, & obtained possession of the goods:—Held: (1) deft. was not, under the terms of the charterparty, entitled to load the cabin; (2) the judge properly directed the jury that, although deft.'s agents at B. had no authority from deft. to put goods in the cabin, yet, as deft. adopted their act by accepting the goods & charging his agents freight in respect of them, he was bound to pay pltf. the current rate of freight at the time of loading; (3) the action was not brought too soon since the taking of the goods for the purpose of obtaining freight rendered deft. liable irrespectively of his actual possession after action brought.—MITCHESON (MICHESON) v. NICOL (1852), 7 Exch. 929; 21 L. J. Ex. 323; 19 L. T. O. S. 229.

Held: (1) the reply of defts. indicated that they stood by the act of the bailiff; (2) there was evidence of ratification by defts. of the illegal distress which entitled pltf. to damages.—CARTER v. ST. MARY ABBOTTS, KENSINGTON VESTRY (1900), 64 J. P. 548, C. A.

1056. — Leaving matter in agent's hands.—A landlord is not liable for the tortious act of a broker in seizing what his warrant does not authorise him to seize, unless he ratifies the broker's act, with knowledge of what he has done; but he is responsible for any irregularity by the broker in dealing with the distress he was authorised to make—as for selling the goods without notice of the distress, & without appraisement.

A., who received the rents & generally managed the property of B., signed in B.'s name, but without B.'s authority, a warrant to distrain the goods of C., a tenant, for rent in arrear, & after the goods had been distrained informed B. thereof, who said she should leave the matter in his hands:—Held: there was sufficient evidence that the distress was authorised or ratified & adopted by B.—HASELER v. LEMOYNE (1858), 5 C. B. N. S. 530; 28 L. J. C. P. 103; 22 J. P. 788; 4 Jur. N. S. 1270; 7 W. R. 14; 141 E. R. 214.

1057. — Receipt of proceeds of sale.—A landlord authorised bailiffs to distrain for rent due to him from his tenant of a farm, directing them not to take anything except on the demised premises. The bailiffs distrained sheep of another person, supposing them to be the tenant's, beyond the boundary of the farm; the sheep were sold, & the landlord received the proceeds:—Held: the landlord was not liable in trover for the value of the sheep, unless it were found by the jury that he ratified the act of the bailiffs with knowledge of the irregularity, or that he chose, without inquiry, to take the risk upon himself & to adopt the whole of their acts.—LEWIS v. READ (REED) (1845), 13 M. & W. 834; 14 L. J. Ex. 295; 4 L. T. O. S. 110, 419; 153 E. R. 350.

1058. — —.—A principal is not liable in trespass for the wrongful act of his agent unless he authorises it beforehand or subsequently assents to it with knowledge of what has been done; it is not sufficient that he receives benefit from it, unless at the time of the receipt he has notice of the illegality.

1054 i. Charterparty—Acceptance of benefit.—Defts. instructed their agents to charter a ship to carry certain goods from N.Y. to S. The agents chartered pltf.'s ship, & the voyage was carried out & the goods duly delivered & received by defts. On the way to S. the vessel called at H., where one of defts., who had previously received the charterparty, visited her. He was also present at S. when the goods were delivered. On neither occasion did he make any objection to the freight payable under the charter, but subsequently refused to pay it high, & that his agents had exceeded their authority in entering into the charterparty at that rate:—Held: not having made any objection either at H. or S., though fully acquainted with the rate of freight agreed to be paid, & having received the full benefit of the contract, he had thereby ratified it, & must fulfil his obligations thereunder.—LOOMER v. STARR (1874), 3 N. S. D. 439.—CAN.

1054 ii. — Acts attributable to position of master.—In an action on a charterparty entered into by an agent professing to act for both master & owner, but who in fact had no authority from the master:—Held: subsequent conduct of the master being referable to his character & duty as such did not amount to ratification of the charterparty.—HASONBLOY VISRAM v. CLAPHAM (1882), 1 L. R. 7 Bom. 15.—IND.

r. Composition with debtor—Receipt of dividend—Delay in dissent.—During pltf.'s absence his bookkeeper & principal clerk signed on his behalf an agreement of composition with a debtor, & in pursuance thereof, collected from the assignee the dividend realised from the estate. Pltf. was informed by his clerk by letter of what he had done & did not object at the time, but on his return in the following month he claimed the whole debt from debtor, crediting the dividend as a payment on account:—Held: in the circumstances there was a ratification of the clerk's act.—NEIL v. VINEBERG (1882), 5 L. N. 118.—CAN.

2. Compromise—Delay in dissent.—Where a creditor receives an offer of compromise from his debtor & refers to his agent about it, & the latter, unknown to the creditor, accepts it & gives discharge therefor, the creditor after twelve months cannot repudiate the settlement; his quiescence is equivalent to ratification.—OGLIVIE FLOUR MILLS CO. v. PINARD (1915), Q. R. 49 S. C. 282.—CAN.

t. Contract for delivery—Acceptance of freight.—A shipper denied the right of his agent, to whom freight was paid, to make a special bargain for delivery, & of the agent's clerk to sign the bill of lading:—Held: he could not deny the agent's authority so to do, having accepted the freight paid, & it was too late to object to the clerk signing, the master having accepted the cargo.—BEARD v. STEELE (1873), 34 U. C. R. 43.—CAN.

1059. ———.]—In an action for rent, deft. by his counterclaim alleged an illegal distress by breaking an outer door. At the trial it was shown that pltf. gave no authority to the broker to break open the door, & although he received the proceeds of the distress, he did not then know of the illegal act of the broker:—Held: pltf. not liable for the act of the broker.—GREEN v. WROX, [1877] W. N. 130.

1060. Execution—Creditor becoming party to interpleader issue.]—An execution creditor does not, by becoming a party to an interpleader issue, ratify or adopt the act of the sheriff, so as to render himself liable in trespass for the seizure of the goods which are the subject of the interpleader issue.—WILSON v. 1063. ——— Failure to interfere.]—Where a debtor is taken in execution by the orders of an attorney's clerk, in circumstances imposing no liability on the attorney, a subsequent refusal by the attorney to interfere for debtor's release is not a ratification so as to render him liable for trespass.—KINNING v. BUCHANAN (1850), 15 L. T. O. S. 305.

1064. Expenses incurred—Letter expressing approval.]—A relative of a deceased lady ordered pltf., an undertaker, to perform a funeral which was suitable to her rank; & her son, many months before he took out administration to the deceased's effects, wrote a letter to the relative who ordered the funeral in which he expressed his approbation of all that had been done. In an action against deceased's son, charging him as administrator for funeral expenses:—Held: the action was maintainable.—LUCY (LACEY) v. WILKINSON (1837), 3 Bing. N. 1064 iii. ——— Delay & failure to dissent.]—A telegraphic repairer whilst engaged in the business of the co. accidentally received a severe gunshot wound, & was sent for medical treatment to a physician by the operator under whom he was working. The operator had no authority to contract debts on behalf of the co., except to a trifling amount. The occurrence was communicated to the co. No proof was given that the co. had notified the physician that they would not be liable until after the expenditure had been incurred.—Held: where a principal, having received information by letter from his agent of his acts touching the business of his principal, does not within a reasonable time express his dissent to the agent, he is deemed to approve his acts, & his silence amounts to a ratifica-

1065. False Imprisonment—Failure to deny authority.]—Judgment having been entered up against pltf., on a warrant of attorney, for £60 given to deft. to secure payment of a debt by instalments of which less than £20 were due, deft.'s attorney caused pltf. to be arrested under a ca. sa., indorsed to levy £21 10s. Deft., having been informed that pltf. had been arrested by a person who had joined in the warrant of attorney, wrote a letter in answer not denying that such arrest had taken place by her authority. The writ was afterwards set aside by order of a judge. In an action for false imprisonment:—Held: (1) deft. was liable in trespass for the act of her attorney in improperly causing pltf. to be arrested; (2) there was evidence to go to the jury that deft. had authorised the arrest.—COLLETT v. FOSTER (1857), 2 H. & N. 356; 26 L. J. Ex. 412; 29 L. T. O. S. 229; 5 W. R. 790.

Annotations:—Consd. Smith v. Keal (1882), 9 Q. B. D. 340, C. A. I agree with the view taken by Bramwell, B., in Collett v. Foster, viz., that we should be very cautious how far we extend the doctrine of an implied authority given to agents (POLLOCK, B.).

1066. ——— Failure to interfere.]—Deft.'s son, a youth about 17 or 18, in his employ, caused a servant whom he suspected of obtaining money from him by false pretences to be apprehended & taken before a magistrate, who remanded him, but ultimately discharged him. After the remand, the son told his father what he had done; the latter did not prohibit his son from proceeding in the matter, but said, as he (the son) had begun it, he would not interfere:—Held: there was no evidence for a jury of either previous authority or subsequent ratification by the father.

If the son had knocked pltf. down & the father had said, "I think it served him right," that would not be a ratification of the son's act so as to make the father a trespasser (ERLE, C.J.).—MOON v. TOWERS (1860), 8 C. B. N. S. 611; 141 E. R. 1306.

1067. Hiring—Acting as chairman when lease agreed to.]—Where, during the negotiations for the hire of a hall for a fête, W. was abroad & her son who was acting for her occupied the chair at a meeting which passed a resolution accepting an offer to organise the fête & guaranteeing £200 towards the expenses, but neither he nor his mother knew the terms of the hiring agreement before the fête was held, & the hiring agreement only professed to bind the members of the T. league of which the son was not a member:—Held: (1) no ratification by the son on his own behalf could possibly be inferred; (2) W. could not be held liable on the ground that she had ratified the agreement.—ROYAL ALBERT HALL CORPN. v. WINCHILSEA (LADY) (1891), 7 T. L. R. 362.

w. Increase of salary to servant.—Opportunity to see entries in books.]—During applt.'s absence from the colony applt.'s wife raised the wages of resp. applt.'s agent in regard to his business.—Held: the facts that applt. had an opportunity of seeing an account in his ledger in which wages at the increased amount were entered as due, though the increase was not drawn, & that if he did examine the account he did not object to it, were no evidence of ratification by applt.—JONES v. TAYLOR (1902), 22 N. Z. L. R. 514.—N.Z.

1069. Insurance—Covering ship—Agent's books open to principal—No dissent.]—H., managing owner of a ship, directed an insurance broker to effect an insurance on the entire ship, upon an adventure in which all the part-owners were jointly interested; the amount of the entire premium was carried to the ship's account in H.'s books, which were open to the inspection of all the part-owners, who saw the account & never objected to it; it did not appear that the insurance broker knew the names of all the part-owners, or whether or not they had given authority to H. to insure:—Held: (1) the jury were warranted in inferring a joint authority to insure; (2) all the part-owners were jointly liable for the premium to the insurance broker, notwithstanding he had debited H. alone, & divided with him the profits of commission upon effecting the insurance.—ROBINSON v. GLEADOW (1835), 2 Bing. N. C. 156; 1 Hodg. 245; 2 Scott, 250; 132 E. R. 62.

1069. — Execution of policy—Offer to settle.]—A policy of insurance, executed in the name of the principal by the clerk of an agent who had authority to underwrite policies in the principal's name, was after execution shown to the principal, who offered terms of settlement:—Held: the principal had ratified the act of the clerk.—MASON v. JOSEPH (1804), 1 Smith, K. B. 406.

1070. Investment—Receipt of interest on same.]—Pltf. deposited £300 in the hands of P., deft.'s testator, who let same at interest upon a mtge. of houses & took the mtge. in pltf.'s name. The mtge. afterwards proved defective. It did not appear that pltf. ever assented to this mtge., or that he gave deft. a general authority to dispose of it at interest as he thought fit, or that he laid any restraint upon deft. that he should not dispose of it without his approbation; but it did appear that pltf. had received interest for several years, & in the receipts had taken notice of the principal being in mtge. upon the security:—Held: this amounted to an approbation of the security.—CLARKE v. PERRIER (1679), 2 Freem. Ch. 48; 22 E. R. 1050.

1071. Legal proceedings—Compromise of—Acquiescence.]—Pltf.'s solr. made a compromise of the suit, as pltf. alleged, without his knowledge or consent, but it having been proved pltf. had been subsequently made acquainted with the arrangement, & had to some extent acted upon it & acquiesced in it for several months:—Held: he was bound by the arrangement from his own acquiescence.—CLIFFORD v. TURNELL (1848), 11 L. T. O. S. 197.

1072. — Delay in dissent.]—An action for breach of promise of marriage having been compromised in June, 1887, pltf. brought a second action in Feb., 1888, alleging that the compromise of the former action had been made by her counsel without her consent:—Held: in so far as the compromise fell within scope of counsel's authority, the delay on pltf.'s part precluded her from objecting to it.—ELLENDER v. WOOD (1888), 4 T. L. R. 680; 32 Sol. Jo. 628, C. A.

1073. — Institution of—Delay in dissent.]—A shipowner applied to the ct. to set aside an order condemning him in costs of unsuccessful legal proceedings taken in his behalf by the managing owner, on the ground that the proceedings had been instituted without his knowledge, consent, or ratification, & the first intimation he had of the proceeding was a notice received by him about a month previous to the present application condemning him in costs of such proceeding:—Held: the application must be refused as it did not appear that the applicant, though he had no knowledge of the institution, was not aware of the pendency, of the proceedings, & because he had not at once applied to the ct. on becoming aware of the proceedings, instead of delaying to take any steps for over a month.—THE BELLCALIN (1886), 54 L. T. 544.

1074. Letting—Allowing tenant to take possession.]—A's agent contracted to grant a lease to B. for 7 or 14 years, & B. was put into possession. On B. claiming a lease determinable at his (B.'s) option, A. contended that the lease must be determinable at his (A.'s) option, & denied the agent's authority to agree to a lease determinable at B.'s option:—Held: (1) by putting B. into possession under the agreement, A. was precluded from denying the agent's authority; (2) it was immaterial that A. had mistaken the legal effect of the agreement.—POWELL v. SMITH (1872), L. R. 14 Eq. 85; 41 L. J. Ch. 734; 26 L. T. 754; 20 W. R. 602.

1075. — Bringing action on lease.]—Pltf. in a case for an injury to his reversionary interest in copyholds was trustee for a person who had demised the premises:—Held: an allegation that pltf. was possessed of the reversion was not a variance, as the bringing of the action by pltf. as reversioner was an adoption of the letting by the cestui que trust, who was his agent.—VALLANCE v. SAVAGE (1831), 7 Bing. 595; 5 Moo. & P. 576; 9 L. J. O. S. C. P. 181; 131 E. R. 230.

1076. — Receipt of rent.]—Where an agreement for the letting of land was given in evidence in an action by A., his wife, & B. against the alleged tenant for breach of same, which agreement purported to be made by an agent for A.'s wife & B. only, but A. had received rent from deft.:—Held: there had been no ratification by A. of the agreement ab initio, the agent at the time of entering into the agreement not having professed to have authority to act for the husband & the subsequent receipt by A. of the rent not making him in the

1074 i. Letting—Allowing tenant to take possession.]—Pltf.'s agent, without authority under seal, by deed leased to deft. certain land belonging to pltf. The evidence showed that the lease when signed was delivered to pltf., & that he several times requested the agent to go & see whether deft. had performed his covenants under it; that he had never objected to the lease, but had been on the lot, & had had it surveyed after deft. took possession of it. The jury found that pltf. had adopted the lease & re-delivered it as his deed:—Held: their finding was right, & the lease was binding upon pltf.—PETTINGREW v. DOYLE (1886), 17 C. P. 31.—CAN.

1074 ii. — Bringing action for account against agent.]—E., to whom deceased had promised to leave his estate, not being aware that there was an heir, granted a binding lease. On the heir establishing his right he sued E. for an account of the rents, but refused to recognise the lease. In an action by leasee to bind the heir with the lease:—Held: the heir was not bound, & his suit against E. was not a ratification of E.'s acts.—MORFATT v. NICHOLL (1862), 9 Gr. 446.—CAN.

1074 iii. — Failure to deny authority.]—Where the authority of an attorney under power is restricted in the power, & he enters into a contract in excess of such authority, but the principal, on becoming aware of it, does not repudiate it, the other party may enforce his remedy for breach of such contract.—BROWN v. HARDY (1868), 5 W. W. & A. B. L. 245.—AUS.

1074 iv. — Failure to repudiate.]—Where the granting of a lease has been brought to the knowledge of the principal it is his duty to repudiate same if the agent had not authority to execute it. To act otherwise is an adoption & ratification of the act of the agent.—WADDEN v. WADDEN (1893), 7 Nfld. L. R. 795.—NFLD.

Annotations:—Distd. Durant v. Roberts & Keighley, Maxsted, [1900] 1 Q. B. 629, C. A. Holroyd, J. when dealing with ratification distinctly says that the argument as to ratification would have had weight if the agent had professed to act for A. at the time when he made the contract; in my judgment a man keeping an intention locked up in his own mind is not "professing" to act for another when he makes the contract (A. L. SMITH, L.J.). Appvd. Keighley, Maxsted v. Durant, [1901] A. C. 240. Refd. Bobbett v. Pinkett (1876), 1 Ex. D. 368.

1077. Licence—Delay in dissent.]—Where plffs. agent granted a licence to carry on for two years mining works on ground not opened, & watched the working until the adventure proved successful & plffs. objected that, according to the custom of the district, the agent had no right to grant a licence for more than one year:—Held: plffs. were precluded from then objecting by reason of their having stood by without interfering with defts. works.—HARRISON v. AMES (1850), 15 L. T. O. S. 321.

1078. Notice to quit—Bringing action on notice.]—A notice to quit given by an agent of the landlord to receive rents is not sufficient, without a recognition by the landlord; the bringing of an action founded on the notice is not of itself a recognition.—DOE d. RHODES v. ROBINSON (1837), 3 Bing. N. C. 677; 3 Ilodg. 84; 4 Scott, 396; 6 L. J. C. P. 235; 1 Jur. 356; 132 E. R. 571.

1079. ———.]—Where a lease for 21 years contained a proviso that in case either landlord or tenant, or their respective heirs & exors. wished to determine it at the end of 14 years, & should give six months' notice in writing under his or their respective hands, the term should cease:—Held: (1) a notice to quit, signed by two only of three exors. of the original lessor, to whom he had bequeathed the freehold as joint tenants, expressing the notice to be given on behalf of themselves & the third exor., was not good under the proviso, which required it to be given under the hands of all three; (2) the notice to quit being such as the tenant was to act upon at the time, no subsequent recognition of the third exor. would make it good by relation; nor was his joining in the ejectment evidence of his original assent to bind the tenant by the notice.—RIGHT d. 1078 i. Notice to quit—Bringing action on notice.]—A notice to quit was signed by a person as agent & receiver for C. Ejectment was afterwards brought upon such notice:—Held: the bringing of the ejectment was a sufficient recognition by C. of the act of the agent, without further proof of the agency.—CONNER v. MCCARTHY (1826), Batt. 643.—IR.

1078 ii. ———.]—On an ejectment by a landlord founded on a notice to quit signed by his agent:—Held: the subsequent bringing of the ejectment was not in itself a sufficient proof or recognition of the agent's authority to serve notice to quit.—FREWEN v. AHERNE (1841), 4 Ir. Law. Rep. 181 (E.).—IR.

1080 i. Payment—To agent by promissory note—Acceptance of subsequent payments.]—Deft. was indebted to plffs. for rent, & to plffs. agent for goods supplied. He gave the agent his promissory note, payable to the agent, for the sum of two debts. The agent discounted the of the property, on the direction of mtgee., but without mtgor.'s knowledge, paid rent to mtgee. He afterwards paid rent to mtgor. less the rent paid to mtgee., & there was no evidence that mtgor. required him to pay her the balance. In 1880 mtgee. brought a foreclosure action. Mtgor. set up Real Property Limitation Act, 1837 (c. 28):—Held: a payment to take the case out of the statute must be a payment by a person liable,—in the present case, by a person bound to pay the principal or interest of the mtge. money; the tenant's payment here was not on behalf of the mtgor., but was simply a payment which the tenant as tenant was bound to make; in the circumstances, there could be no ratification, the character of the payment not being variable by anything done subsequently between mtgor. & mtgee.—HARLOCK v. 1081. ——— Agreement to indemnify & instructions not to make further payments.]—Pltf. had maintained the natural son of deft.'s brother for a space of 15 months, during which time he had expended £120, & had lent H. in cash £50. Pltf. had applied to deft. by letter for payment of £70; & deft. had sent £35. In his letter to pltf. deft. said he could pay over to pltf.'s bankers £35, the remainder of the money owing to pltf. by H., & continued—"but I beg in future you will not lend any money in my name, as I will not be answerable for it":—Held: not sufficient for the jury to draw the inference that H. had acted as agent of deft., & that deft. had afterwards sanctioned the agency so as to make him liable.—ELLABY v. SAUNDERS (1847), 8 L. T. O. S. 367.

1082. ——— Delay in dissent.]—If the attorney of a party authorise A. to pay money for his client, & A. pay it, & the attorney mention the matter to his client, who does not disclaim the transaction till several months after, this is evidence to go to the jury that the authority to pay was authorised by the client.—PARKER v. DUBOIS, No. 217, ante.

1083. ——— Knowledge of custom & silence.]—Pltf., a broker, on instructions of deft. bought three lots of sugar for him, numbered 67, 68, & 69. By the conditions of sale the goods were to remain at the wharf, at seller's risk, till the warrants were delivered to the buyer. On May 25 deft. requested pltf. to obtain a warrant for lot 67 & clear it at the Custom House, which he did. At the same time pltf. paid & obtained warrants for the other lots, which was the ordinary course of proceeding among brokers, they getting discount allowed by the seller. It was proved that deft. knew of this practice, & that it had been done in this instance. On June 22 deft. instructed pltf. to clear lot 68.

note, & appropriated the whole amount. After the due date of the note plffs. received from deft. two quarters' rent accrued after the date of the above transaction:—Held: plffs. had acquiesced in the transaction, & must be treated as paid.—NORTHERN LOAN & LAND CO. v. LICHTSCHNEAL (1888), 6 L. R. N. Z. 643.—N.Z.

1080 ii. ——— Of sum loaned to person unauthorised by borrower to receive same—Payment of interest charges.]—KNOX v. BORTIN (1893), Q. R. 4 S. C. 311.—CAN.

According to the ordinary practice, if the warrants had not been obtained previously, they would have been obtained on the Saturday, & the duty would have been paid on the following Monday. The warrants, however, had been previously obtained. A fire broke out after business hours on Saturday, & lot 68 was destroyed:—Held: (1) the conduct of deft. amounted to a ratification or adoption of the previous payment; (2) the sugar was then standing at the buyer's risk; (3) pltf. could recover the money paid for it as money paid for deft.'s use.

Knowledge on the part of the principal that it was the ordinary course of business for the broker to make prepayment, & acquiescence by silence, amounts to a specific permission to the broker to do so (ERLE, C.J.).—SENTANCE v. HAWLEY (1863), 13 C. B. N. S. 458; 1 New Rep. 323; 7 L. T. 745; 143 E. R. 182; sub nom. HAWLEY v. SENTANCE, 11 W. R. 311.

1084. — Partial indemnity.—Where a broker, according to usual practice, pays the deposit for the buyer, who afterwards recognises the payment by part payment to the broker, this is not an admission to dispense with production of the bought & sold notes, there having been no acceptance of part of the goods sold.

In an action for the loss upon a resale of goods sold under a contract, with conditions stated at length in the declaration, the bought & sold notes not being produced at the trial, it appeared that the conditions were those usual in tea-sales; that deft. was in the trade & acquainted with the conditions; that the brokers had paid the deposit required by the conditions, & deft. had recognised the amount so paid as a debt from him to the brokers, & included it in a composition which he paid to them as his creditors:—Held: the payment was not an admission of liability upon the contract.—DANIEL v. PIDDING (1845), 6 L. T. O. S. 192.

1085. Proclamation by colonial governor.—Failure of Crown to interfere.—Seem: the non-objection on the part of the Crown to a notification or proclamation issued by a Governor of one of its ceded colonies does not imply that the Governor had authority in the subject of the proclamation, nor will its non-interference render the proclamation valid on the ground of acquiescence.—*CAMERON v. 1086. Purchase.—Acceptance of goods bought.—Pltf., a factor abroad, having exceeded the price limited for purchase of hemp, deft., who objected to the contract, but afterwards reshipped & disposed of some of it on a new risk, was ordered to account for the whole at cost price.—*CORNWAL v. 1091. — Action against agent for negligence in purchase.—A. purchased from B. through C.'s agency an annuity, after C.'s bkpcy. A. sued C. for negligence as the agent in the purchase of the annuity, but the action was compromised on C. paying costs & engaging to assist A. in a proof under the bkpcy. A. claimed to prove for the consideration money on the ground that the grant of the annuity was a colourable transaction contrived for the purpose of obtaining A.'s money in payment of a debt due from B. to C., but the ct. rejected the proof on the ground that the transaction was a substantial one:—Seem: even if the transaction had been colourable, the conduct of A., after bkpcy. & with full knowledge of all the circumstances, in bringing an action against C. for negligence as the agent in the purchase of the annuity was, as against the creditors, an election to adopt the annuity & would defeat the proof under the bkpcy.—Re HOWARD & GIBBS, Ex p. SHAW (1826), 2 Gl. & J. 106.

1092. — Assignment of right purchased.—In 1863, a ry. co. under the powers of a special Act, which incorporated Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18), & Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 20), acquired land, without the underlying minerals, & constructed their ry. across it, within the 4 years for that purpose limited by the special Act. In 1904 the co.'s solrs., acting without authority, to prevent injury to the ry. by subsidence entered into an informal agreement on behalf of the co. to purchase the minerals from A., the owner. Subsequently by a contract under seal, the co. assigned the benefit of the agreement to B., who, claiming the minerals adversely to A., disputed its validity:—Held: the co. by assigning the 1093. — Claiming goods purchased.]—In an action for the price of house furniture ordered by deft.'s son in deft.'s name it appeared that deft., some months afterwards, came to reside in the house &, on the goods being taken under a writ of execution against the son, claimed them as his:—Held: there was evidence from which a jury might infer his adoption of the order.—BROOKS v. MERRY-WEATHER (1862), 3 F. & F. 144.

1094. — Correspondence as to delivery.]—Where a contract for the sale of iron made by a broker is not binding on the parties owing to a material variance between the bought & sold notes, the fact that the buyer without referring to the terms of either the bought or the sold note, & in the belief that the contract is binding, authorises the broker to propose terms to the seller as to delivery of the iron & payment of the purchase-money is not a ratification of the contract contained in either the bought or the sold note.—SIEVEWRIGHT (SIVEWRIGHT) v. 1093 i. Purchase.—Taking possession of property bought.]—S., acting as agent for deft. co., purchased a piece of land from pltf., paying $100 on account & giving a mtgo. note for the balance. The co. were notified of the transaction within a week after the giving of the note & took no steps to repudiate it. They entered into possession of the land, dealt with it as their own, & received the rents & profits.—Held: assuming that S. was not legally authorised to give the note at the time he did, the co. had ratified his act.—RYAN v. 1093 iii. — Disapproval followed by orders to insure purchased property.]—The managing director of an English co. without authority contracted for the purchase of real estate for use of the co. at O., in Canada, & went into possession & used the property for purposes of the co. The purchase was immediately communicated by him to the English directors, & they disapproved thereof, but did not act repudiating the purchase; on the contrary, they directed the buildings to be insured.—Held: this conduct was an adoption of the contract by the directors.—CONANT v. MIALI (1870), 17 Gr. 374.—CAN.

1093 iv. — Negotiations for return of chattel.]—B. sold a racehorse to H., a minor, upon a representation by H. that his mother would pay. H. on former occasions had, to the knowledge of B., purchased horses for which the mother afterwards paid. The mother allowed the son to keep a pack of hounds at her residence, & paid for his equipment as master. The mother entered into negotiations with B. for the return of the horse—a course which B. agreed to accept upon two alternative conditions, which the mother agreed to consider; & this incident was relied upon by B. as a ratification by the mother of the contract with the son:—Held: the negotiations were not of such character as to amount to ratification by the mother.—BARRETT v. IRVINE, [1907] 2 I. R. 462, 474.—IR.

1095 i. — Delay in dissent.]—An agent was instructed to purchase a racehorse, a condition being that a veterinary surgeon's certificate that the horse was sound was first obtained. The agent obtained a qualified certificate, but paid the money. Pltf. kept the horse for several months, & made no offer to return it, but leased the horse to B. & tried to sell it.—Held: pltf. had not rescinded the contract. Ratification may be shown by mere acquiescence, or by not disavowing within a reasonable time, or by acts or omissions from which it can be inferred. If a party intends to rescind he must show it by clear unequivocal acts inconsistent with ratification.—COX v. LESLIES, LOVE & Co. (1910), S. R. Q. 80.—CAN.

1095 ii. — —.]—A contract of sale was completed by delivery to resp. as vendors & to appts. as vendees of bought & sold notes. Appts. retained the bought note & made no objection either to the terms of the contract or to the authority of C. & M. as brokers to bind them. Subsequently disputes arose as to inspection & delivery of the goods, & resp. were obliged to sell the goods elsewhere at a loss. In an action for damages for breach of contract.—Held: appts. were bound by the contract entered into by C. & M., the evidence disclosing an implied authority to C. & M. to complete the contract on appts.' behalf, & as, even if there had not been any original authority to C. & M., there was such acquiescence by appts. as amounted to ratification, appts. only having disputed C. & M.'s authority after the dispute as to inspection & delivery arose.—TRENT VALLEY WOOLLEN CO. v. OELRICHS (1894), 23 S. C. R. 682.—CAN.

1095. — Delay in dissent.]—A. shipped goods to India, & in his letter of instructions to his agent B. directed him to invest the proceeds in certain specified articles of merchandise, or in bills at the exchange of the day, & remit them to England. B., instead of complying with his orders, invested the proceeds in a commodity not specified in his letter of instructions, & transmitted a bill of lading for same, which reached A. on May 29, who notified an agent of B., on Aug. 7, his dissent from what had been done, the goods having in the meantime been lost at sea.—Held: the laches of A. in delaying his notice of abandonment so long discharged B.'s liability.—PRINCE v. CLARK (1823), 1 B. & C. 186; 2 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 266; 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 69; 107 E. R. 70.

1096. — Failure to return goods to vendor.]—Although a husband is not cohabiting with his wife, yet if she improvidently takes up goods of a tradesman for which he would not otherwise be liable, he assents to the contract if, having any control over the goods, he does not cause them to be returned to the vendor.—WAITMAN v. 1097. — Seizure of part of property purchased.]—A., knowing of B.'s bkpcy., at the request of B.'s for use in connection with the construction of their line of railway, it appeared that the articles were sold to H., manager or defts., & were used by him in connection with the building of the road; that pltf. was employed by H. to do certain work on the road; & that this act of H. was ratified by defts., who paid pltf. for the services rendered by him.—Held: the sale of the articles sued for was made to defts. & not to H. individually.—MCDONALD v. BROAD COVE COAL CO. (1900), 32 N. S. R. 486.—CAN.

y. — Under hire-purchase agreement.—Retaining copy of agreement & receipts for instalment.]—Deft., an illiterate woman, permitted her daughter to sign a hire-purchase agreement for a piano, whereunder pltf. retained property in the piano until full payment. Pltf. sued to recover the piano; & deft. alleged ignorance of the clause in the agreement entitling them to resume possession. A copy of the agreement signed by the daughter had remained in deft.'s house three years, & she kept the receipts for payment. The jury having found no ratification by deft.:—Held: the verdict was perverse & there must be a new trial.—HEINTZMAN v. GRADAM (1888), 15 O. R. 137.—CAN.

z. Receipt of bailed goods by bailor's manager.—Delay in dissent.]—Pltf. bailed a horse to deft. to be returned to him at a certain time. Before the time elapsed deft., not requiring the horse any longer, returned it to H., who was in pltf.'s employment both at the time of bailment & return, & who told deft. that pltf. had sent him for the horse. H. was known to deft. & to others generally as being in the employment of pltf. as a general manager of his business. About two months after the return of the horse deft. met pltf. & told him that he had delivered it to H. Pltf. neither approved nor disapproved of this. Three years afterwards an action was brought:—Held: pltf. was estopped by his conduct from complaining of the delivery to H.—BOUCHETTE v. ANDERSON (1876), Temp. Wood, 64.—CAN.

wife & with B.'s money bought 30 South Sea bonds, & gave them to her. B.'s assignee seized 22 as part of bkpt.'s estate:—Held: he could not maintain trover against A. for the money with which he purchased the other 8; as the seizing part of the bonds was an affirmation of deft.'s act & pltf. could not avow the act as to part & disavow it for the rest.—WILSON v. POULTER (1730), 2 Stra. 859; 1 Barn. K. B. 118, 284; 93 E. R. 898.

1098. Receipt of money—Correspondence between principal & third party.—A., a solr., employed by a mtgor. & a mtgee., received the interest on the mtge. debt regularly. After a time he fraudulently obtained from mtgor. a portion of the principal. At first mtgee. received his interest regularly from A. at his office; but ultimately A. allowed the interest to fall into arrear till a large sum became due on the mtge. During this time mtgee. made no application to mtgor. in consequence of the irregularity in payment. In Sept., 1853, mtgor. paid mtgee. £43 13s. 9d., as a half-year's interest on the principal remaining due; that led to an explanation & discovery of the fraudulent receipt of the principal by A. Mtgee. did not repudiate the payment at the time. On Feb. 24 mtgor. wrote to inquire in what way he should pay the half-year's interest just due, expressing his fear that A. would not be able to make good his defalcations to mtgee. On the 26th mtgee. wrote requesting payment by cheque, & on Mar. 4 mtgee. again wrote, saying he believed A. was hopelessly involved, & suggesting the loss should be divided between them:—Held: (1) A. was agent of mtgee. to receive the interest but not the principal; (2) in order to bind mtgee. by the acts of A. in receiving the principal it was necessary to show either that what he did was with intention of adopting the acts of A. or that the position of mtgor. was altered; (3) in the circumstances mtgee. was not bound.—KENT v. THOMAS (1856), 1 H. & N. 473.

1099. — Treating sum as debt from agent.—

1098 i. Receipt of money—Correspondence.—W., a real estate agent, obtained from pltf. an offer to purchase the property of deft., his principal. He wrote deft. he had received an offer for fourteen days at $850, which meant $807.50 net to deft. Deft. wrote accepting, & transmitting documents of title. Pltf.'s attorney wrote a cheque to W. or order for $850 & W. gave him his receipt. Deft. sent his brother to W., who declined to hand over the cash to him, whereon deft. wrote him a letter authorising him to pay over to his brother. In acknowledging this W. refused to hand over the purchase-price until the transfers were registered. Pltf. & deft.'s brother, as his agent, then wrote a joint letter to W. instructing him to pay the money to the U. bank, but instead he converted it.—Held: deft. had ratified the unauthorised receipt of the purchase price by W., & pltf.'s payment was good & he was entitled to specific performance of the contract. Phosphate, Lime Co. v. Green, 1 R. 7 C. P. 57; Marsh v. Joseph, [1897] 1 Ch. 247, affd.; Hunter v. Parker (1841), 7 M. & W. 322; Simpson v. Eggington, 16 Exch. 545; *Lyall v. a. Removal of goods—Acceptance of sale at destination.—In an action on a repvein bond against principal & sureties, the breach assigned was the non-return of a portion of the timber repveined, for which defts. in repvein, the subsequent pltf., obtained a judgment. It appeared that the timber, when repveined, was on the banks of a river some distance above the point where it was intended to be shipped, & by directions of F., pltf. in repvein, it was put in the possession of L., who was F.'s general agent for looking after his lands in that part of the country. L. authorised deft. in repvein to take it down to the shipping point, where it was again taken possession of for F., by a person appointed by L. to receive it there, & shipped for F. L. had been forbidden by F. to permit this removal to the shipping point, but defts. in repvein were not aware of it, & such removal was to the benefit of whoever might be the owner.—Held: the receipt of the timber at the shipping point by F. was a ratification on his part of the removal, though such removal was in violation of his orders.—PATTERSON v. FULLER (1872), 32 U. C. R. Q. B. 240.—CAN.

1100 i. Sale—Acceptance of purchase-money.—R. delivered cattle to J. to consign to G. D., who had previously acted as agent for R., on receipt of a telegram from J., assuming to act as agent for R., took possession of & sold the cattle & remitted the proceeds to R., less commission. In an action brought by R. against D. for negligently selling, R. stated that he had received the proceeds of sales, but that D. had no authority to sell the cattle on his account.—Held: the receipt of proceeds of sale by R. operated as a ratification of the authority of D. & made D. his agent.—HICKETSON v. DEAN & LAUGHTON (1870), 4 S. A. R. 78.—AUS.

1100 ii. — — — — ——BUCOVETSKY v. COOK (1910), 16 O. W. R. 257; 1, O. W. N. 998.—CAN.

W. lent a sum of money to defts. on the security of the rates. W.'s brother, authorised to receive the interest on his behalf, received & misappropriated the principal. W. afterwards treated the sum received as a debt from his brother, took a warrant of attorney from him to secure payment, & failed to inform defts. of his intention to repudiate the payment:—Held: W. had ratified the payment to his brother.—R. v. TENBURY GRDNS., No. 709, ante.

1100. Sale—Acceptance of purchase-money.—Semble: the owner of a ship receiving the proceeds of a sale of the ship by the master abroad is estopped from disputing such sale, & so are parties deriving title under him with knowledge of the facts.—THE MARGARET MITCHELL (1858), Sw. 382; 4 Jur. N. S. 1193.

1101. — — — — — Purchase-money earmarked.—Confirmation by the owner of a sale abroad of a British ship by the master will not be inferred from vague expressions of approval, if the owner at the time was not aware of the true state of the facts relating to the sale. Acceptance of purchase-money generally operates as a ratification of the sale, but not so if the money was received without the intention of appropriating it, or if received in ignorance of the facts relating to the sale.

The owner of a ship, being ignorant of the true state of facts relating to the sale of his ship abroad by the master, received as proceeds of the sale bills of exchange at 60 days; before the bills became due he became aware of the true circumstances, & his ship having arrived, he arrested her; when the bills fell due he obtained payment of them, & paid the money into ct.:—Held: such receipt of the purchase-money by him did not amount to a ratification of the sale.—THE BONITA, THE CHARLOTTE (1861), 1 Lush. 252; 30 L. J. P. M. & A. 145; 5 L. T. 141; 1 Mar. L. C. 145.

1102. — — — — — Action for price.—The trustee of a bkpt.'s estate applied, under Bkpcy. Act, 1869 (c. 71), s. 72, to the Bkpcy. Ct. to declare a bill of sale, made by bkpt. previously to his bkpcy., fraudulent & void as against himself as trustee, &

1100 iii. — — — — ——Pltf. sued the owners of land & their agents in the alternative for specific performance of a contract for the sale to him & purchase by him of land entered into by the agents with him, or for other relief. The purchase-money was paid by pltf. to the agents, possession was taken by pltf. & improvements made, & possession retained for six years, but no conveyance or transfer was made to pltf.:—Held: (1) a ratification of an act or transaction will be implied wherever the conduct of the person on whose behalf it is done or entered into is such as to indicate an intention to adopt it in whole or in part; (2) the receipt of the purchase-money or part thereof operated as a ratification of an unauthorised sale; (3) in the case of an agent exceeding authority ratification might be implied from silence or acquiescence.—TAYLOR v. HIGGLESON (1910), 15 W. L. R. 273.—CAN.

1101 i. — — — — — Purchase-money earmarked.—In an action on a written agreement purporting to be made between pltf. & deft. by M., his agent, for the sale by deft. of a plot of land, it appeared that M. had received $200 from pltf., but had paid it over to deft. in a cheque which included other sums:—Held: as the money was not knowingly received as being part of the purchase-money, there was no such receipt of part of the purchase-money as amounted, according to Hunter v. Parker (1841), 7 M. & W. 322, & other cases, to ratification.—MARGOLIS v. BIRNIE (1912), 21 W. L. R. 462; 5 D. L. R. 534.—CAN.

Ct. having made the order prayed for, & the assignee having accordingly paid over the proceeds of sale:—Held: the trustee could not afterwards bring an action of trover against the assignees under the bill of sale to recover the difference between the value of the goods & the amount realised by the sale, inasmuch as by the proceedings in bkpcy. to recover the proceeds of sale he had affirmed such sale & waived the tort.—SMITH v. 1103. — Authority to deliver given after sale.]

—D., managing owner of a ship, through plffs. his agents sold her to T., & received a bill upon the O. Bank for the amount of purchase-money, which was duly paid. D. had no express authority at the time from defts., owners of 23-64ths of the ship, to sell her, but the latter knew a sale was contemplated; & after the sale they executed a power of attorney reciting they had agreed to sell the vessel to T. & had actually received the purchase-money, & empowering plffs. to transfer their respective shares & to hand over the vessel to purchaser. Defts. afterwards received from D., or settled in account with him, the value of their respective shares:—Held: (1) the jury were warranted in finding defts. had authorised the sale of the ship by D. or had by their subsequent ratification so adopted his act as to render them jointly liable to plffs. for commission due to the latter on the sale; (2) the position of defts. was not so altered by the fact of plffs. having drawn upon D. a bill at 3 months' date for the amount of the commission as to release the former from liability upon the discharge of the bill.—KEAY v. FENWICK (1876), 1 C. P. D. 745, C. A.

1104. — Delay in dissent.]—By an agreement dated Aug. 31, 1855, & made between A. & B. (father & son) of the one part, & plff. of the other part, A. & B. agreed to sell certain lands to plff. The agreement was signed by B. on behalf of himself & his father. Although there was not sufficient evidence of previous authority from the father to the son, it was clearly established that the father had full notice of the agreement a few days after it was signed. A. & B. afterwards desired to sell the property to another party. Plff. filed a bill for specific performance:—Held: the father by his subsequent conduct had ratified the contract made by his son.—BIGG v. STRONG (1858), 32 L. T. O. S. 98; 4 Jur. N. 1106. — —.]—Plff. entered into a contract by letter with C., general manager of a ry. & harbour co., for purchase of some land belonging to the co. In pursuance of the terms of contract a branch line of rails was laid down by the co., & possession was given to plff., who placed machinery upon the land in such a manner that the knowledge of what was done must have come to the directors. Nine months after the date of contract the co. informed plff. that C. had no authority to contract, & repudiated the contract:—Held: though C. had no authority to enter into the contract, what subsequently passed amounted to a ratification of it.—WILSON v. WEST HARTLEPOOL RY. & HARBOUR CO.

addressed to him a memorandum stating that he would require to send to plffs. in Boston for certain articles specified, which deft. gave to T., an express-man, who handed it to plffs. Plffs. treated it as an order from D., with whom they had dealings, & sent the goods & invoice to him by T., & D. refused to receive them. T. then delivered them to deft., who paid T. for them, & took his receipt. Plffs. remaining ignorant of this transaction, demanded payment of D., which he refused:—Held: by bringing assumpsit for goods sold & delivered against deft. they waived the tort, ratified the sale by T., & treated him as their agent, & payment to him discharged deft.—DALTON v. HAMILTON (1869), 1 Han. 422.—CAN.

1104 i. — Delay in dissent.]—Plff. authorised M. to sell two horses. M., instead of selling, exchanged one of the horses with deft. for another horse & a sum of money. The money was paid over to plff.'s wife, & there was evidence tending to show that she informed her husband of the facts. There was no denial on his part that he had knowledge. The exchange was made in Dec., & the horse taken in part payment remained on plff.'s premises all the winter. Plff. returned home in the latter part of Mar. & did not take steps to rescind the transaction until some time in June:—Held: there was acquiescence amounting to ratification.—MCDONALD v. 1104 ii. — —.]—T., plff.'s agent to make sales of land, was authorised to appoint M. as selling agent, & a number of sales by M. were duly ratified by plff. M. submitted deft.'s offer to T., who consented to a sale & notified plff., but no reply was received until some months later, when plff., who had in the meantime transferred his properties to another agent, repudiated the transaction. Plff. was aware that deft. had commenced digging a cellar on the land, & it was not until deft. had erected a brewery & made improvements that he heard that the purchase was disputed:—Held: T. & M. had acted within their authority, & ratification, if necessary, was to be implied from plff.'s conduct, for if he wished to repudiate, he should have done so within a reasonable time.—Leroux v. Brown (1852), 12 C. B. 801; Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co. (1885), 54 L. J. Ch. 1035, cited.—MCDONALD v. CATRNS (1896), 2 Terr. L. R. 219.—CAN.

1104 iii. — — Admissibility of evidence.]—Agents for sale of applts. goods acted under a written authority which provided that all contracts were to be made in applts.' name, & were to be submitted to them for approval:—Held: (1) the document was capable of the construction that the agents had authority to bind applts. by provisional contracts unless the latter gave notice that they would not perform them, & applts. not having given such notice within a reasonable time, the jury might infer that they had assented to this contract; (2) the document justified the inference that the agents had authority to inform parties whether their proposals had been accepted by applts., & a statement by agents that the contract was being performed by their principals was admissible as evidence of ratification of the contract.—INTERNATIONAL PAPER CO. v. SPICER (1906), 4 C. L. R. 739.—AUS.

1107. — [A. & B. being tenants in common, A., without any authority from B., contracted for the sale of the estate. B., on being informed of it, objected, & said the price was too low; a mtgee. threatening to sell the estate under his power unless the sale proceeded, B. allowed the matter to go on, & gave no notice to the purchaser that he dissented; an abstract was delivered, & negotiations as to the title went on for about 3 years.—Semble: it was too late for B. to object that the agreement was entered into without his authority.—PHILLIPS v. HOMFRAY, FOTHERGILL v. PHILLIPS (1871), 6 Ch. App. 770.

1108. — Letter requesting agent to return deposit.—Deft. having a house to sell, No. 17, H. Street, employed B. to act as his agent in selling it. Pltf. being in want of an investment, applied to B. for an order to see No. 7 in same street. B. gave him a card to view No. 7, & upon being satisfied with it he paid a deposit of £20 for purchase of the house. An agreement for sale of the house was subsequently drawn out for the signature of pltf. & deft., but in that agreement No. 17 was the house agreed to be sold, & not No. 7. Upon this being discovered, pltf. refused to sign the agreement, but upon B. representing to him that it was really the house he had seen, he eventually signed the agreement, & paid a further deposit. The agreement was then shown to deft., who, finding that a wrong term was inserted, namely, 68 years instead of 64½, refused to sign. Pltf. applied to B. to return him the deposit, which he declined to do without an order from deft. Pltf. went to deft., who gave him a letter to B., requesting him to return the money. B. having again refused, an action was brought to recover same from deft. —Held: (1) the letter to B. was evidence to go to a jury of a ratification by deft. that B. was acting as his agent; (2) deft. was liable to repay to pltf. the money received by B. as such agent.—BENHAM v. BATTY (1865), 6 New Rep. 42; 12 L. T. 266; 13 W. R. 636.

1109. — Parol assent—Delivery of samples.—A. & B. being jointly interested in a quantity of oil, A. entered into a contract for the sale of it, without the authority or knowledge of B., who, upon receiving information of the circumstances, refused to be bound by it, but afterwards assented by parol, & samples were delivered to the vendees. In an action against vendees.—Held: (1) B.'s subsequent ratification of the contract rendered it binding; (2) it was to be considered as a contract in writing within Stat. Frauds.—*SOAMES v. 1110. — Sending invoice to & demanding payment from purchaser.—Defts. bought goods at the shop of A., after notice that A. had committed an act of bkpcy. by absconding, & claimed to set off against the price a debt due to them from A. A flat having afterwards issued against A., his assignees sent in an invoice, & demanded payment for the goods so bought by defts. —Held: the assignees did not thereby so affirm the sale as to disentitle them to maintain trover for the goods upon a subsequent demand & refusal.—VALPY v. SANDERS (SAUNDERS) (1848), 5 C. B. 886; 17 L. J. C. P. 249; 11 L. T. O. S. 201; 12 Jur. 483; 136 E. R. 1128.

1111. Seizure of bankrupt's goods—Surrender by bankrupt's assignees of interest therein.—The house of pltf., an uncertificated bkpt., was broken open, & effects acquired by him subsequent to his bkpcy. taken by defts., who had become his creditors since bkpcy. & did not know who his assignees were. The bkpt. having sued defts. in trespass, they obtained after a rule for a plea a surrender of the assignees' interest in the effects seized.—Held: (1) this was a ratification of the seizure; (2) pltf. could not recover.—*HULL v. 1112. Signature of agreement—Acting on faith of same.—In assumpsit for not receiving corn sold, it appeared that by the course of the corn market the seller's broker delivered a sample & order for delivery of the corn to the buyer, who had till next market day to refuse it if he found the bulk vary from the sample; & that the buyer sent his servant to examine the bulk & having done so, refused the contract.—Held: although the broker's note was not of itself a sufficient memorandum of the contract signed by the buyer or his agent within Stat. Frauds, the broker being prima facie the agent only of the seller & not of the buyer, yet, the buyer having acted upon the order by sending his servant to examine the bulk, was such an adoption of the broker's agency as made him agent for both parties, & his note was sufficient within Stat. Frauds (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—KINNITZ v. SURRY (1805), Paley on Agency, 171.

1113. — Correspondence & receipt of money.—Pltf. having purchased deft.'s lands at an auction, signed a memorandum of the contract, which the auctioneer's clerk also signed as a witness. At the same time the clerk received & signed a receipt for the deposit, which was paid over by the auctioneer to deft.'s attorney. Deft. being unable to make out the title, the attorney wrote to pltf. advising pltf. to relinquish the purchase.—Held: neither the receipt of the money nor the letter amounted to a ratification so as to constitute the clerk deft.'s agent to sign the memorandum.—*GOSBELL v. 1114. — Delay in dissent.—The several owners of lands in the parish of C. entered into an agreement that a particular common should be enjoyed as a cow pasture for 99 years; & this agreement was signed by the bailiff of one of the owners, so far as he had power. Though no particular authority could be shown, yet, after an acquiescence of over 30 years on the part of this owner.—Held: an authority should be presumed, & he should be bound by the act of his servant.—*TUFTON v. 1115. — Delay in obtaining information.]—II., a brewer, sent P. to bid at a sale by auction of property described as in the occupation of S. at £20 a year, & B. & S. at 2s. a week each. S., B., & S. were really under-tenants of C., another brewer, who had a lease for 9 years at £20 a year. At a sale the lease was read over & the property sold subject to it. It was knocked down to P., & he signed the contract, which contained no reference to the lease. An abstract was delivered omitting the lease. H. took no steps to repudiate the contract until after a copy of the lease had been applied for & furnished some weeks afterwards. The vendor filed a bill for specific performance of the contract for sale subject to the lease:—Held: the unauthorised act of P. had not been ratified by H.—CABALLERO v. HENTY, No. 572, ante.

1116. — Parol consent to execution of deed.]—In an action on a covenant which had been entered into by certain creditors of C., of which deft. was one, with pltf.s, trustees for such creditors, there was an issue taken on a plea of non est factum. At the trial there was evidence that the deed had been signed for deft. by his son; & that on its being afterwards shown to deft. he was asked if the son had authority to execute it for him, when he stated his son had authority, & that he adopted it. It was also shown that deft. had confirmed the proceedings which had been taken by pltf.s. as trustees under the deed:—Held: there was evidence of a delivery of the deed by deft., sufficient to sustain a verdict for pltf.s., notwithstanding the absence of proof of the son having been authorised to execute the deed by an instrument under seal.—TUPPER v. FOULKES (1861), 9 C. B. N. S. 797; 2 F. & F. 166; 30 L. J. C. P. 214; 3 L. T. 741; 7 Jur. N. S. 709; 9 W. R. 349; 142 E. R. 314.

1118. Submission to arbitration—Acting on previous correspondence.]—Deft. co. served the owner of lands with a notice to treat under Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (c. 18). Two years afterwards the co. entered into possession. In the course of a correspondence between the landowner & the co. the landowner received a letter purporting to have been written on behalf of the co., agreeing to a proposal that the value of the land should be submitted to arb'n. under the above Act. This letter, which, with many others, was written by a clerk to a former solr. of the co., signing himself in this instance "for law clerk," was repudiated by the co. as unauthorised:—Held: the co. could repudiate the letter of the clerk giving its assent although it had acted upon his previous correspondence.—KEMP v. SOUTH EASTERN RY. CO. (1872), 26 L. T. 110; 20 W. R. 306, C. A.

1119. Tender—Pleading tender made.]—At an interview between pltf. & deft. at deft.'s house when deft. was willing to pay £10, A., who was present, offered to fetch that sum, but was prevented by pltf.'s saying he could not take it:—Held: (1) the offer was a good tender; (2) although deft. did not at the time take notice of what was done, yet his pleading it afterwards was a sufficient ratification of A.'s act.—HARDING v. DAVIES (1825), 2 C. & P. 77.

1120. — Receipt of—Attempt to compromise claim for non-delivery.]—In an action to recover the difference in the market value of certain shares in a ry., sold but not delivered to pltf. by deft., pltf. alleged a readiness upon his part to comply with the conditions of the contract, & a tender of the money to the brokers from whom he had made the purchase. Deft. in a letter to pltf.'s attorneys, in answer to one from them informing him that a tender had been made by pltf. to the brokers, had not repudiated the brokers as his agents, or denied their authority to receive the money, but evinced a wish to come to certain terms:—Held: (1) such conduct amounted to a recognition by him that the brokers were authorised, & the tender was good & valid; (2) a verdict found for pltf. should not be disturbed.—JACKSON v. JACOB (1837), 3 Bing. N. C. 809; 3 Hodg. 219; 5 Scott, 79; 6 L. J. C. P. 315; 1 Jur. 262; 132 E. R. 645.

1118 I. Submission to arbitration — Knowledge amounting to approval.]—In a suit defended by an agent (am-mokhtar) on behalf of deft., the agent applied for a reference to arb'n., although he had no power so to do under the am-mokhtarnamah. After the submission of the award objection was made on behalf of deft. that the agent had no authority to apply for or consent to the reference:—Held: although the agent was not authorised to apply for or consent to a reference, deft., having been aware of the proceedings & tacitly ratified the action of his agent, could not be allowed to question the legality of the award.—SATURJIT PERTAB BAHADOOR SAHI v. DULHIN GULAB KOER (1897), 1 L. R. 24 Calc. 459.—IND.

e. Substitution of notes — Treating substituted note as existing security.]—A note payable to D. or bearer for $348.40, with interest at 15 per cent., was made to D. & delivered to him as recvee of the township for money loaned by the latter, & was left with S., the treasurer, for pltf.s. Subsequently deft. gave his own note for $278, payable to S. (but not to order), S., without authority from pltf.s., giving up to him the former, the difference between the two notes being a loan to S. himself, though included in deft.'s note. S. having died, his accounts with pltf.s. were adjusted by pltf.s. with his surety, who was charged with the note sued on, which he arranged by giving the note for $278 & his own note for $70; & a balance of $183 was, as agreed to by pltf.s., paid by him & a receipt therefor given to him in full of pltf.s.' claim against S. After this settlement pltf.s., by a resolution in council, recognised this note for $278 as amongst their existing securities, thus showing that they were aware of its having been received in substitution of the note sued on:—Held: taking the whole transaction together, there was such ratification of the acts of S. by pltf.s. in the subsequent adjusting of his accounts with his surety that, coupled with the receipt of the note for $278 with other notes & money in full satisfaction of all claims on the note sued upon, it was evidence to go to the jury of the payment of this note under a plea of payment.—NORTH GWILLIMBERG TOWNSHIP v. MOORE (1865), 15 C. P. 445.—CAN.

1. Trespass—Receipt of boomage.]—The facts that a co. is entitled to boomage on all lumber coming within the boom & receives boomage are not an adoption of the act of the owners of lumber in fastening it to the land of a riparian proprietor.—DEVER v. SOUTH BAY BOOM CO. (1872), 1 Pug. 109.—CAN.

1121. Trover & conversion—Crediting debtor with additional sum over that realised.]—On Dec. 9, 1909, pltf. was removed to defts.' infirmary suffering from temporary insanity. On Dec. 17, 1909, the relieving officer of defts. seized & illegally sold goods of pltf., which she valued at £150, for £4. The guardians knew of the sale in Jan., 1910. On Apr. 1, 1910, defts. informed pltf.'s solr. that the relieving officer had acted without instructions & on his own responsibility, but they gave her credit for £2 12s. 6d. Pltf. having recovered, claimed damages for wrongful sale & conversion of goods. A jury having found the guardians had adopted the act of the relieving officer:—Held: pltf. entitled to judgment.—BARNES v. ST. MARY, ISLINGTON, GUARDIANS (1911), 76 J. P. 11; 10 L. G. R. 113.

1122. Withdrawal of fund in court—Bonâ fide receipt by principal of costs out of.]—Without the knowledge or authority of X., a solr., A., another solr., used X.'s name in proceedings wherein by acts of fraud & forgery A. obtained an order for the payment out of a fund in ct. & was thereby enabled to get the fund paid out by a cheque from the Paymaster-General, with which he opened a fictitious account at the bank. Two days later & after the account had been partially drawn upon, X. was told by A. that his name had been made use of for a formal party. X. reprimanded A. for this, but, without inquiring into the nature of the business, accompanied A. to the Paymaster-General's Office & received a cheque for £15 for costs; over £10 of this he paid to A. for out-of-pocket expenses, & the balance of £4 5s. 6d. he handed to his partner Y., who entered it to the credit of the firm in their books without knowing anything of the circumstances in which the money had been paid. A large portion of the fund formerly in ct. having been lost:—Held: (1) in the circumstances X. had not condoned or ratified the use of his name by A. & was not liable for the whole of the loss sustained, but only for the amount of the £15 cheque which he took; (2) Y. was liable only for the £4 5s. 6d. received by him for the partnership. 1123. Work executed—Acceptance & sale of ship as repaired.]—Where pltf's. contracted with the agent of an absent shipowner to effect certain specified repairs (all confined to damage by stranding), & instead of doing the work as stipulated, alleged that they had, on the agent's authority, done the equivalent thereto or better, & in the same contract stipulated that they should be paid for repairs due to deterioration at scheduled prices stated by them, & it appeared that the agent's authority to pltf's. knowledge was limited to the specified repairs:—Held: the facts that the shipowner had taken the ship as repaired & sold it did not amount to a ratification of the contract.—FORMAN & CO. PROPRIETARY, LTD. v. THE LIDDESDALE, [1900] A. C. 190; 69 L. J. P. C. 44; 82 L. T. 331; 9 Asp. M. L. C. 45, P. C.

1124. — Adoption by corporation of surveyor's acts.]—The city surveyor of Manchester having certified under Manchester Improvement Act, 1867 (c. xxxvi.), s. 38, that there was imminent danger from a building of which pltf. was the owner & occupier, the town clerk, assuming to act on behalf of the corpn., issued a direction to the surveyor "to cause the building mentioned in his certificate to be taken down or repaired in such manner as he should think requisite." The surveyor employed a builder to take down & rebuild certain parts of the building; the builder was paid by the corpn. for so doing, & the corpn. afterwards recovered the amount from pltf.:—Held: the acts of the surveyor, authenticated by the town clerk, were the acts of the corpn.; or, at all events, they were ratified & adopted by them so as to justify what was done under the certificates.—CHEETHAM v. MANCHESTER CORPN. (1875), L. R. 10 C. P. 249; 44 L. J. C. P. 139; 32 L. T. 28; 39 J. P. 343.

1125. — Agreement to pay.]—In an action for work & materials it appeared that pltf. was employed in rebuilding certain stables, but finding it difficult to do so without rebuilding the adjoining stables, which were in a ruinous state, he applied at deft.'s house & received directions to do the work from one who, though he had done some jobs for deft., had no authority to order anything to be done for deft., who was at the time out of the country. Deft. did not know of the work being done until the bill for it was sent in, when after some delay he said, as the work had been done, rather than have litigation he would pay for it. The jury found for pltf. On motion for a new trial:—Held: (1) deft.'s delay in answering, followed by the promise to pay, was a sufficient ratification, though accompanied by a disclaimer of authority; (2) the ratification might be after action.—RICHARDSON v. OXFORD (COUNTRESS) (1861), 2 F. & F. 449.

1126. — Knowledge amounting to approval.]—A benefit building society is bound by orders for necessary repairs given by the secretary, though not previously sanctioned by the number of trustees required by the rules for transacting the ordinary business of the co. or entered in the minute-book, where the trustees knew at the time the repairs were being made.—ALLARD v. BOURNE (1863), 15 C. B. N. S. 468; 3 New Rep. 42; 143 E. R. 863.

SUB-SECT. 3.—BURDEN OF PROOF.

1127. On person alleging ratification.]—A. placed money in the hands of B., a solr., for investment. B. misappropriated the money, & to cover the fraud, obtained from C., another client, upon a false representation, a transfer of C.'s equitable interest under a previously executed mtge. No money of A. was paid to C. In a suit to set aside the transfer it was contended that C. had ratified & confirmed the transaction:—Held: (1) the burden of proving a case of acquiescence lay on A., & could not be discharged except by proving (a) C. was aware of the time & manner in which A.'s money was deposited with B., (b) no part of it had been employed for C.'s use or benefit; (2) the transfer must be set aside.—*WALL v. SECT. 7.—EFFECT OF RATIFICATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1128. General rule.—A subsequent ratification by a principal of a contract by an agent is equivalent to a previous authority.—MACLEAN v. DUNN, No. 1158, post.

1129. —.—.]—That an act done for another by a person not assuming to act for himself, but for such other person, though without any antecedent authority, becomes the act of the principal, if subsequently ratified by him, is the known & well-established rule of law. In that case the principal is bound by the act, whether it be for his detriment or advantage, whether it be founded on a tort or a contract, to the same extent as by & with all the consequences which follow from the same act done by his previous authority (TINDAL, C. J.).—WILSON v. TUMMAN (TUMMON) (1843), 6 Man. & G. 236; 6 Scott, N. R. 894; 1 Dow. & L. 513; 12 L. J. C. P. 306; 1 L. T. O. S. 256, 314; 134 E. R. 879.

PART VII. SECT. 7, SUB-SECT. 1.

1128 i. General rule.—A contract made by an agent is complete before he has advised his principal of it, & before the latter has sent a ratification to the other party to the contract. HUBBARD v. THOMPSON CO. (1903), 5 Que. P. R. 372. CAN.

1128 ii. —.—.] Where the act of the agent has been communicated to & ratified by the principal, it becomes the act of the principal in point of law. PETSONJEE NERSEEWANJEE v. GOPI MAHOMED SAHIB (1871), 7 Madras High C. Rep. 369. IND.

g. Ratification retroactive as regards place & time.—He who makes a purchase at his domicile from an agent enters into the contract there & cannot be considered as having made the sale at the place where it is ratified by the principal, such ratification being but a suspensive or resolutive condition according to the facts of each case, the fulfilment of which is retroactive to the date & place of the contract.—TRUDEL v. ARNARD (1912), 14 Que. P. R. 202. CAN.

fectured at the place where the order is taken. In supposing that the order be subject to ratification, such ratification will be retroactive to the day & place when & where the sale was effected.—GENDREAU v. LAVIGNE (1917), 18 Q. P. R. 321. CAN.

1132 i. Ratification equivalent to prior command.—The rule as to ratification by a principal of acts done by an assumed agent is that the ratification is thrown back to the date of the act done, & that the agent is put in the same position as if he had authority to do the act at the time the act was done by him.—PICKLES v. WESTERN ASSURANCE CO. (1902), 40 N. S. R. 327. CAN.

1132 ii. —.—.] Release of agent's guarantor.—A motor car co. employed P. & Co. to ship a motor car & deliver it to their order. P. & Co. employed plff. as their agent to carry out these instructions. When the car arrived the through bill of lading was not forthcoming. Plff., as consignee of the car, thereupon communicated with M., who had acted as agent for the motor car co., & agreed to deliver the car to M. upon his undertaking to indemnify plff. against all claims in consequence of the delivery of the car by plff. without pro-

1132. Ratification equivalent to prior command.—If a servant sells a horse with warranty, it is the sale & contract of the master, but it is the warranty of the servant, unless the master gives him authority to warrant it, for a warranty is void which is not made & annexed to the contract; but if the master do agree unto it after, it shall be said that he did agree to it ab initio. As where a servant does a disseisin to the use of his master, the master not knowing of it, & then the servant makes a lease for years, & then the master agrees, the master shall not avoid the lease for years; for now he is in by reason of his agreement ab initio. When the servant promises for the master, that the master shall forbear to sue, etc., & shall by such a day deliver to debt. the obligation, etc., & debt. promises to pay the money at such a day, & the master having notice thereof agrees to it, it is now the promise of the master ab initio, for it is included in his authority that he should agree, compound, etc., & he has power to make a promise.—SEIGNIOR & WOLMER'S CASE, No. 847, ante.

1133. —.—.]—An agent sold goods to be paid for by bills. The purchaser gave the bills, & directed the agent to hold the goods for him, unless he could sell them at a certain profit. While the goods thus remained, the acceptors of the bills stopped payment. The agent thereupon applied to purchaser for further security. Purchaser then gave the agent an order to sell the goods, & pay the bills. Subsequently & before any sale purchaser became bkpt.; his assignees claimed & brought trover for the goods.—Held: (1) they were not entitled; (2) the application by the agent for security must be considered as an application on behalf of the vendor, whose assent to the arrangement might be presumed, it being for his benefit, & whose subsequent assent would relate back to the transaction which required the assent.—*BAILEY v. Both P. & Co. & the motor car co., with full knowledge of all the facts, stated that they were satisfied to have delivery effected to M. upon his letter of guarantee so indorsed. M. having paid all the shipping charges, obtained possession of the car & sold it, but did not account to the satisfaction of his principals, the motor car co., for the proceeds of the sale. P. & Co. then, at the instigation of the motor car co., made a claim upon plff., who sued debts, as guarantors under their indorsement of the letter of guarantee given by M.:—Held: the subsequent ratification by plff.'s principals of the delivery of the car to M. was equivalent to original authority, & no enforceable claim in respect of such delivery could be made upon plff., & plff. had no cause for action upon the letter of guarantee against debts.—*UNION BANK OF AUSTRALIA v. 1135. —[The doctrine Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori æquiparatur means: (1) as applied to cases of contract, that if A., unauthorised by B., makes a contract on his behalf with C., which B. afterwards recognises & adopts, the contract is to be dealt with as having been originally made by his authority; (2) as applied to cases of tort, that where A., professing to act by the authority of B., does that which primâ facie amounts to a trespass, & B. afterwards assents to & adopts such acts, A. is treated as having from the beginning acted by his authority, & B. becomes a trespasser unless he can justify the act. In some cases also where an act, which if unauthorised would amount to a trespass, has been done in the name & on behalf of another, & without previous authority, a subsequent ratification may enable the party on whose behalf the act was done to take advantage of it, & treat it as having been done by his direction; but this doctrine must be taken with the qualification that the act of ratification must take place at a time & in circumstances when the ratifying party might have himself lawfully done the act which he ratifies.

The doctrine is one intelligible in principle, & easy in its application, when applied to cases of contract. If A. B., unauthorised by me, makes a contract on my behalf with J. S., which I afterwards recognise & adopt, there is no difficulty in dealing with it as having been originally made by my authority. J. S. entered into the contract on the understanding that he was dealing with me, & when I afterwards agreed to admit that such was the case, J. S. is precisely in the condition in which he meant to be; or, if he did not believe A. B. to be acting for me, his condition is not altered by my adoption of the agency, for he may sue A. B. as principal, at his option, & has the same equities against me, if I sue, which he would have had against A. B. (ROLFE, B.).—BIRD v. BROWN, No. 1035, ante.

1137. —[Defts. made an offer to pltf. subject to the proviso that it should be withdrawn if not accepted within a month. On the last day of the month pltf. posted an acceptance, addressed to an unauthorised agent of defts., by whom it was not received until after the month had expired. Defts. by their subsequent conduct ratified the act of the agent in receiving the acceptance on their behalf:—

Held: (1) as the agent must be regarded as being authorised to receive the acceptance, the acceptance dated from the time of posting; (2) the acceptance was in time.—MORRELL v. STUDD & MILLINGTON, [1913] 2 Ch. 648; 83 L. J. Ch. 114; 109 L. T. 628; 58 Sol. Jo. 12.

1138. —[Act of public agent.]—Deft., a naval commander, stationed on the coast of Africa, with instructions to suppress the slave trade, was requested by the Governor of Sierra Leone to obtain liberation of two British subjects detained as slaves at the Gallinas by the son of the king of that country, & in effecting that object to use force, if necessary. He proceeded to the Gallinas with an armed force, & having landed at Dombocorro, took military possession of a barracoon belonging to pltf., a Spaniard carrying on the slave trade at the Gallinas. He communicated with the king of the country, & the two British subjects having been released, deft. concluded a treaty for the abolition of the slave trade in that country. In execution of this treaty, deft. fired the barracoon of pltf. & carried away his slaves to Sierra Leone, where they were liberated. Some of pltf.'s goods, used in the slave traffic, were claimed by the king as forfeited, & delivered up to him; other goods were destroyed. These proceedings having been communicated to the Lords of the Admiralty, & the Secretaries of State for the foreign & colonial departments, they respectively, by letter, adopted & ratified the act of deft. :—Held: (1) pltf. might maintain trespass for seizure of his slaves; (2) ratification of deft.'s act by ministers of state was equivalent to a prior command, & rendered it an act of state, for which the Crown was alone responsible.—BURON v. DENMAN, No. 432, ante.

1140. Ratification of one act not authority to commit further similar acts.]—The ratification by the shareholders of a co. of a particular act of the directors in excess of their authority does not authorise them to do similar acts in future.

One of the articles of assocn. of a registered co. provided that the directors' power of borrowing on the credit of the co. should be limited, so that "the total amount should not exceed in the aggregate, as an existing debt at the same time, one half of the then actually paid-up capital of the co." The articles contained no restriction on the borrowing powers of the co., & the directors' power of borrowing was capable of being extended by the votes of one half of all the shareholders at a general meeting. The directors obtained a letter of credit for an amount exceeding one half of the then paid-up capital of the co., which was ratified by a general meeting. The letter subsequently expired & was renewed, & a second letter was obtained. These latter acts were never ratified :—Held: though the limitation above mentioned was merely a limitation of the powers of the directors, & not of the general powers of the co., so that the acts of the directors were capable of ratification, yet the ratification of the first letter of credit did not authorise its renewal nor the obtaining of the second letter.—IRVINE v. 1141. Ratification limited to act ratified.]—Pltfs., tea merchants, were accustomed to send quantities of tea all over the kingdom. It was the practice for debtfs. & other railway cos. to send their carmen to call on pltfs. & ask if there was any tea for L. & N.W. Ry. Co. or whichever railway co. it might be. It was a business arrangement whereby the railway co.'s servants came in uniform & collected the tea on behalf of the railway co. Debt. co. had in their employment a carman, B., who was aware of this arrangement. On Dec. 14 B. went away sick, & was marked in debtfs.' books as being away sick until Jan. 6, when he was marked as left. On Dec. 21 he went to debtfs.' yard & took out a horse & van & put on the co.'s uniform & went to pltfs.' warehouse & obtained possession of three chests of tea, which he afterwards disposed of. Subsequently, on Feb. 24, 1917, debtfs. prosecuted to conviction B. & another man for stealing the tea, & in that prosecution debtfs. laid the property in the tea in themselves. In an action by pltfs. to recover the value of the tea:—Held: all that debtfs. necessarily ratified was a bare bailment. The operation of their ratification was exhausted when it was determined that B.'s possession was to be regarded in law as debtfs.' possession to the minimum extent required to satisfy the law of larceny. There was no ratification of the felonious taking away of the goods, & debtfs. were not liable for the loss thereof.—HARRISON & CROSSFIELD, LTD. v. LONDON & NORTH WESTERN RY. CO., [1917] 2 K. Having paid the price at the request of his principal, A. drew upon him for the amount, & the bill was duly paid. B. afterwards came to London, saw the contract, & ratified all that A. had done. It turned out that the cargo had been fraudulently disposed of by the captain before the date of the contract of sale by C. to A.:—Held: (1) B. could not maintain an action against A. to recover back the money paid as upon a failure of consideration; (2) his only remedy, whether in his own name or in that of A., was against C., the seller.—RISBOURG v. BRUCKNER (1858), 3 C. B. N. S. 812; 27 L. J. C. P. 90; 30 L. T. O. S. 258; 6 W. R. 215; 140 E. R. 902.

1145. ——— Unless personal liability created.]—The promoters of a ry. co. drew a cheque for £500 upon a bank, which advanced the sum in order to pay House fees for the passing of the Bill. The secretary promised to procure immediately a letter from the promoters as further security; he neglected to send it immediately, but about a fortnight after the Act received the Royal assent he wrote to the manager requesting him to allow the directors of the ry. "to draw to the extent of £1,000, to be repaid out of the calls on shares." This contract was ratified by the co. at the first meeting of directors. The amount was credited to the co. in the bank books, & the bank sued & obtained judgment & execution against the co. When no return was made to the legit, an action was brought by the bank against the promoters on their personal contract. The ry. had never been worked, & no calls had been made:—Held: (1) the cheque & letter created a personal liability on the part of debtfs.; (2) the ratification by the co. did not destroy that liability; (3) the provision for payment in the latter did not make the issuing of calls a condition precedent to pltfs.' right of action; (4) the facts did not establish a substituted contract.—SCOTT v. The offer was accepted by S. on behalf of pltfs. Debt. withdrew his offer, & after the withdrawal pltfs. ratified the acceptance of the offer by S. Pltf. on his return repudiated the agreement, but afterwards treated with debt. in such way as to indicate ratification, but always on the assumption that debt. would make the terms of payment to suit pltf., which debt. did not agree to do:—Held: pltf. was entitled to have the registration of the 1148. Allotment of shares.—An allotment of shares in a co. purported to be made on Oct. 24, 1888. This allotment was held to be invalid, because notice of the board meeting had not been duly given to all the directors. Two applicants, to whom shares had been allotted on Oct. 24, claimed to have their names removed from the register. One of these applicants did not pay the money due on application, & wrote a letter in which he expressed a hope that the directors would not enforce the claim against him. The other paid the money due on application, & also the money due on allotment, but wrote to the bankers of the co. that the latter money was paid under protest, & he considered the conduct of the directors in allotting the shares unfair. On Dec. 24 the co. brought an action against the first applicant for the money due from him, & recovered judgment. On Jan. 7, 1889, at a meeting of the directors, at which two directors attended, it was resolved the certificates of the shares allotted should be sealed & issued. At a meeting of Jan. 16, at which four directors were present, the minutes of the meeting of Jan. 7 were signed by the chairman. On Mar. 7, at a duly constituted meeting of directors, a resolution was passed confirming the allotments of Oct. 24, 1888:—Held: (1) the allotments of Oct. 24, 1888, were capable of ratification by the co. & were ratified within a reasonable time; (2) the subsequent ratification related back & confirmed the allotments made by the two directors as unauthorised agents; (3) the applicants must retain their shares.—Re PORTUGUESE CONSOLIDATED COPPER MINES, LTD., BADMAN'S CASE, BOSANQUET'S CASE (1890), 45 Ch. 1149. Alteration in bank's account.—Acquiescence & ratification must be founded on full knowledge of the facts, & must be in relation to a transaction to which effect may be given thereby.

Where the accounts of a bank in liquidation had been changed so as to represent the bank as debtor in respect of a sum which had been borrowed by its manager for his own purposes:—Held: the doctrine of acquiescence & ratification by the liquidating authorities would not avail to render the bank liable to pay a debt which it never owed.—*BANQUE JACQUES CARTIER v. Appointment of naval officer.—Where a commodore appointed a captain under him without having authority for that purpose:—Held: the subsequent ratification of such appointment, by the Lords of the Admiralty, or the King in council, did not entitle the commodore to share as a flag officer in the distribution under His Majesty's proclamation

1151. Cancellation of contract.—Interests of third parties affected.—A petition was presented against a town councillor, alleging that his election was void on the ground that, at the date of his nomination, he had an interest in a contract with the council. It appeared that resp., in answer to an advertisement, had offered to supply to the council, for 12 months, certain goods at specified prices, & the offer was accepted. Afterwards he applied to a committee of the council to be released from his contract. The committee resolved that subject to approval by the council he be released from that date. He was then nominated. After his nomination the council approved the resolution of the committee releasing him:—Held: (1) the advertisement, tender, & acceptance constituted a contract in which resp. had an interest; (2) the ratification after resp.'s nomination of the resolution releasing him did not relate back to the date of resolution, because the interests of persons other than the parties to the contract might be affected; (3) resp. at the date of his nomination had an interest in a contract with the council, & was disqualified, & his election was void.—*Re GLOUCESTER MUNICIPAL ELECTION PETITION, 1900, FORD v. 1152. Closing of Stock Exchange account.—Deft employed pltf., a broker on the Stock Exchange, to purchase shares, which he did. Before settling-day pltf. became a defaulter through inability to meet his engagements, & in accordance with the rules of the Stock Exchange, the accounts which he had opened were closed as between himself & the jobbers at the then current prices as fixed by the official assignee. The account in respect of the shares bought for deft. when closed, as above mentioned, showed a balance in favour of the jobbers as against pltf. According to the practice of the Stock Exchange such closing of the account did not affect the client if he, nevertheless, desired to have the contract completed, & was not in default to the defaulting broker; & the jobber in that case was bound to complete on the settling-day. Pltf., on the same day when he was declared a defaulter & his accounts closed, subsequently informed deft. that he could either have the contract completed, as above mentioned, or he might accept the official price. Deft. said he would do the latter:—Held: deft., having ratified the closing of the account before the settling-day, was liable to indemnify pltf. against the amount for which pltf. was liable to the jobbers on such closing.—HARTAS v. RIBBONS (1880), 22 Q. B. D. 254; 58 L. J. Q. B. 187; 37 W. R. 278; 5 T. L. R. 200, C. A.

1153. Contract.—Where a broker made a contract in writing for the sale of goods, not being authorised by one of his principals at the time, which contract the latter afterwards assented to:—Held: the broker was an agent duly authorised to bind his principal under Stat. Frauds at the time the contract was entered into.—MACLEAN v. DUNN (1828), 4 Bing. 722; 1 Moo. & P. 761; 6 L. J. O. S. C. P. 184; 130 E. R. 947.

1155. Delegation.]—Defts., being instructed by plffs. to insure goods, & unable to procure an insurance in London, wrote to K. & Co., the ship-owners at Newcastle, asking them to get the insurance done. After the loss defts. were unable to get the policy from K. & Co., & K. & Co. collected the loss. Plffs. approved of what was done & endeavoured to recover the money from K. & Co. In an action against defts. for negligence:—Held: defts. not liable, as they had acted reasonably, the policy being a good one, & the loss being caused by misconduct of K. & Co. SMITH v. COLOGAN (1788), 2 Term Rep. 188 n.; 100 E. R. 102 n.

1156. Distress.] Trespass for seizing cattle. Plea that the beasts were seized for services due to the lord. Replication that at the time of seizure deft. was not bailiff. Legal proceedings.] Where the holder of a bill of exchange, without the knowledge or authority of pltf., indorsed & delivered it to an attorney for pltf., in order that an action might be brought upon it in his name, & pltf., after action brought, ratified the act:—Held: (1) the subsequent ratification was equivalent to a prior authority; (2) pltf. had a valid title to sue on the bill. —ANCONA v. HULL GLASS CO. (1849), 19 L. J. Ch. 44; 13 Jur. 1020.

1165. —.—Of chattel which vendor had no right to sell.]—If a principal ratifies the unauthorised purchase by his agent of a chattel which the vendor had no right to sell, he is guilty of a conversion, although he had no knowledge of the circumstances which made the sale unlawful.

Pltf.'s ship was stranded on the African coast, & being unlawfully seized & sold by W., was purchased by T., the agent of defts., Liverpool merchants, without their authority. T. informed defts. of the purchase on their behalf & of the price; & they, without knowing the circumstances which made the sale unlawful, replied, "We duly received your letter informing us of your having purchased the brig, but you do not say from whom you bought her, nor whether you have the register with her. You had better, for the present, make a hulk of her. From your description of her, she is not out of the way in price if she has not sustained much damage." In an action of trover by the owner of the ship:—Held: there was evidence of a conversion, for although defts. did not know the ship had been unlawfully sold, if they ratified the purchase, they were liable. *—HILBERY v. There was no evidence of such approval prior to Oct. 5, 1910, when S. conveyed the land to pltf.:—Held: although the making of the conveyance was a ratification of claim. In trespass for entering the house & seizing & converting the goods, the sheriff justified entering under the writ. Pltf. replied, admitting the writ & warrant, that, after the seizure, A. discharged & forbade debts from further executing the writ, & new-assigned that he brought his action for the subsequent trespass & conversion. Defts., in their rejoinder, traversed the discharge to the sheriff:—Held: (1) construing the direction to the sheriff to withdraw with reference to the surrounding circumstances, it amounted to no more than a partial direction to retire from the possession of the goods to which C.'s claim applied; (2) the subsequent ratification by A. of the detention of the rest of the goods, being an act done for his benefit, was a sufficient justification to the sheriff; (3) the issue was not divisible, & A. would not be entitled to recover, even though it should appear that some of the goods subsequently detained were within the claim.—WALKER v. HUNTER (1845), 2 C. B. 324; 15 L. J. C. P. 12; 6 L. T. O. S. 154; 9 Jur. 1079; 135 E. R. 970.

1171. —. —.]—The sheriff having seized goods in the house of A., under a fi. fa. against him at the suit of B., & a claim having been made by C. under a bill of sale, B. not choosing to contest the claim so made by C., his attorneys gave the sheriff a direction to withdraw, in the following terms:—"A. v. B. Withdraw under the fi. fa. herein, the goods having been claimed." The officer finding that the bill of sale under which C.'s claim was made did not convey the whole of the goods he had seized, retained possession of those to which the claim did not apply; & three days afterwards informed the attorneys for the execution-creditor what he had done. The attorneys, as well as the execution-creditor, expressed their approbation of the course the officer had adopted, the former observing that the direction to withdraw was only intended to apply to the goods that were the subject of the

1172. —. —.]—If a stranger, acting without authority at the time, takes upon himself to trespass in the name & for the benefit of an absent person, such professed agent becomes liable for his unauthorised act, & a right of action is acquired by the person against whom the wrong was committed; but the person in whose name the act was done may, if he thinks fit, afterwards ratify & adopt it. Such ratification has the effect of prior authority, & the result is that if the prior authority of the principal would not have justified the act, both the agent & the principal may be sued as trespassers; & that if such authority would have justified the act, i.e., if the principal could lawfully have authorised it beforehand, then the agent is also justified by matter ex post facto, & the vested right of action is extinguished. Nor is the principle applied exclusively to private transactions in which, if the act be unlawful in itself, ratification does not free the agent from responsibility. It has been equally applied to the exercise of sovereign authority whereby the act of the agent, though originally unlawful, becomes after ratification an act of state, the original right of action is divested, & all civil liability extinguished (WILLES, J.).—PHILLIPS v. SECT. 2.—PRINCIPAL'S RIGHTS AGAINST AGENT.

SUB-SECT. 1.—WHERE AGENT FAILS TO OBEY INSTRUCTIONS.

A. In General.

1173. Notice may amount to instructions.]—An action is maintainable by owners of a ship against the master for carrying goods which the owners had covenanted with third parties not to carry, of which covenant the master had notice, & the carriage of which goods caused plffs. to incur penalties. MUSSEY v. PENNEY (1000), 2 Keb. 88; 84 E. R. 55.

Annotations:—Reid, Swinton v. Chelmsford (1860), 29 L. J. Ex. 382; Barker v. Braham & Norwood (1773), 2 Wm. Bl. 866.

1174. Conditions under which instructions must be obeyed.]—The correspondent of a foreign merchant is bound to obey orders of his principal to insure: (1) where he has effects of the merchant in his hands; (2) where the course of dealing has been that the merchant has been accustomed to send orders for insurance & the agent has been accustomed to comply, unless the agent has given notice to discontinue the course of dealing; (3) where bills of lading are sent to the agent with an order to insure, in which case the agent cannot accept the bills of lading without obeying the order to insure.

One person cannot compel another to make an insurance for him against his consent; but if the directions to insure be given to him to whom the application would naturally be made in the usual course of trade, & he do not give notice of his dissent, he must be answerable for his neglect because he deprives the other of any opportunity of applying elsewhere to procure the insurance (ASHHURST, J.).—SMITH v. LASCELLES (1788), 2 Term Rep. 187; 100 E. R. 101.

Annotation:—Apld. Callender v. O'Richs (1838), 5 Bing. N. C. 58.

1175. No liability for failure to carry out illegal act.]—Where the mate of a ship or a sailor is to receive something at the end of the voyage in lieu of wages, e.g., slaves, he cannot insure it; nor can he recover the value of such a thing in an action against his agent for negligence in not procuring such an insurance.—WEBSTER v. DE TASTET (1797), 7 Term Rep. 157; 101 E. R. 908.

1176. —.]—Pltf. employed deft. to bet on commission, & deft. failed to make certain bets pursuant to pltf.'s instructions; pltf. sued deft. for breach of contract as his agent, claiming as damages the excess of gains over losses which should have been received by deft., had the bets in question been made, after deducting the amount of his commission:—Held: as by Gaming Act, 1845 (c. 109), s. 18, the bets would not have been recoverable at law, pltf. could not maintain the action.—COHEN v. KITTELL (1889), 22 Q. B. D. 680; 58 L. J. Q. B. 241; 60 L. T. 932; 53 J. P. 469; 37 W. R. 400; 5 T. L. R. 345, D. C.

1177. — Except so far as act legal.]—A broker who has neglected to insure the premium according to directions of his principal cannot set up as a defence that he was directed also to insure British capture; for that is not a crime so as to render the whole insurance illegal, though it would be void pro tanto.—GLASER v. COWIE (1813), 1 M. & S. 52; 105 E. R. 20.

See, further, GAMING & WAGERING.

1178. Broker selling below price ordered.]—If a broker, being authorised to sell goods for a certain price, sells them at an inferior price, he is not liable in trover for the amount of the goods; but the proper remedy is by an action upon the case.—DUFRESNE v. HUTCHINSON (1810), 3 Taunt. 117; 128 E. R. 48.

1179. No failure to obey where no instructions.]—Insurance brokers are not liable to an action for neglecting to insert in a policy a liberty to carry simulated papers, if the written instruction given them contained no direction for that purpose, although it may have been verbally communicated to them that simulated papers were to be used in the voyage.—FOMIN v. OSWELL (1813), 3 Camp. 357.

1180. No liability when no damage.]—Where a ship was condemned for carrying simulated papers, & the policy containing no liberty to do so, the assured could not recover upon it:—Held: action could not be maintained against the insurance brokers for having neglected to include the premiums & duties, contrary to instructions given them for effecting the policy, as in the result the assured were not damaged by this neglect.—FOMIN v. OSWELL, No. 1179, ante.

1181. Exact obedience required.]—Where an insurance broker, when instructed to effect a policy on goods, is informed that they were loaded at a prior port to that from which risk is to commence, he is liable to an action for negligence if he effects the policy in common form "beginning with the adventure upon said goods from loading thereof aboard said ship."

A broker is bound to have knowledge & diligence & must execute his orders; but it is not every mistake which makes him responsible. Where the principal imputes misconduct he ought to show that his directions were intelligible & precise. If the instructions had been doubtful I should think pltf. not entitled to recover (GIBBS, C.J.).—PARK v. HAMOND (HAMMOND) (1816), 2 Marsh. 189; 6 Taunt. 495; 4 Camp. 344; 128 E. R. 1127.

Annotation:—Foll. Hickman v. Carstairs (1833), 5 B. & Ad. 651.

1182. —.]—It is the duty of an agent to exercise his authority exactly in the terms in which it is given.

Where the promoter of a co. was authorised to apply for 500 shares in the co. in defts.' name:—Held: not a proper exercise of the authority to apply for 300 shares.—HOLOPHANE, LTD. v. HESSELTINE (1896), 13 T. L. R. 7; 41 Sol. Jo. 23, C. A.

1183. —.]—A procurator or order ought to be executed fully according to the extent or bounds of power given. If it marks precisely what is to be done, he who accepts it ought to keep to what is prescribed in it. If it be indefinite, he should set such bounds to it, or give it such extent, as may reasonably be presumed to be the intention of the person who grants it.—THE HAPPY RETURN (1828), 2 Hag. Adm. 198.

For full anns., see SHIPPING & NAVIGATION.

1184. — Any deviation at agent's risk.]—An agent may deviate from his instructions in his endeavours to do the best for his principal; but he takes upon himself the risk whether his principal will approve of his conduct. If the principal does not express his dissent within a reasonable time, it will be considered that he approves of the arrangements made by his agent, who will then be exonerated from all consequences.—PRINCE v. CLARK (CLARKE) (1823), 1 B. & C. 186; 2 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 266; 1 L. J. O. S. K. B. 60; 107 E. R. 70.

sent in writing of his lessor, applied to the lessor for leave to assign. The lessor signed a licence to assign, which he handed to an agent with instructions not to part with it until he got payment of the rent then due from the tenant. The agent, in the presence of the intending assignee, handed over the licence to the tenant on receipt of a cheque, drawn by the tenant to the order of the agent, for the rent & his professional charges, & the assignment was then completed. The cheque was dishonoured:—Held: (1) the agent being intrusted to hand over a document of title as well as to receive payment, there was no general usage authorising him to take a cheque in payment in lieu of cash; (2) as the cheque was for charges as well as rent, it was not in a form in which it could be handed over to the principal; (3) the agent was responsible to his principal for the full amount of the arrears of rent.—PAPÉ v. 1187. No liability when instructions obeyed.]—A contract for the purchase of a cargo of olive oil, delivered on the quay alongside the vessel, provided that the goods were to be removed from the quay by purchasers after passing the scale, & to be at their risk from the time of weighing; payment to be made by cash for one-half the amount of the invoice, remainder by bills at four months. In an action by the seller against the broker for a breach of duty in delivering the goods to the purchaser, who became bkpt., without receiving payment of cash at the time of delivery:—Held: (1) on true construction of the contract the goods were to be delivered to purchasers at the quay, & cash was not to be paid till after completion of delivery of the 1184 i. Exact obedience required.—Any deviation at agent's risk.]—The owners of several lots of land employed an agent to sell them, at the same time delivering to him blank agreements executed by them, & orally instructing him to reserve timber fit for saw logs. The agent sold one of the lots, & delivered to the purchaser an agreement without any reservation of timber, whereupon the vendors refused to adopt the sale, & commenced felling timber upon the land. Upon a bill filed by the purchaser for specific performance:—Held: (1) the writing contained the true agreement between the parties, & the vendors' remedy against their agent was for breach of their instructions; (2) defts. must pay the value of the timber removed by them, with the costs of the suit.—JURY v. BURROWS (1862), 9 Gr. 367; affl. on rehearing, 1864.—CAN.

1184 ii. —.]—Deft., D., part owner, with plff. & the other defts., of a barque, was authorised by the other owners to sell her, & did so, depositing plff.'s share of the proceeds to his own credit in the bank. Plff. wrote to C. in these terms: "I want you to put my share of the money in the bank, to my credit. I have written D. stating that I have authorised you to do so." C. had, before this letter came to him, drawn the money from the bank, the manager having advanced it to him on his own cheque; but deft., D., upon the letter being shown to him by C., signed a release to the bank from any claim on account of the payment of the money to C.:—Held: (1) D. was not justified in releasing the bank; (2) in so doing he assumed the liability which the bank had incurred by the unwarrantable payment to C. of the money placed to his D.'s credit; (3) plff. was entitled to a decree for the amount of his share deposited in the bank.—BEUGS v. McDONALD, R. E. D. 17.—AUS.

1184 iii. —.]—Plff. asked deft. to buy certain land for him & gave him the money to be paid as deposit. Deft. bought another piece of land by mistake:—Held: plff. could recover the money paid by him to deft., though the latter had paid it over to the vendor, as money had & received to plff.'s use.—ALLISON v. BYRNE (1872), 3 V. R. L. 155.—AUS.

1184 iv. —.]—Insurance in breach of instructions.]—Deft., an insurance agent, was prohibited by plffs., his principals, from insuring grain separators. J. & D. obtained from deft. a policy on plffs.' form insuring a grain separator for $900. A loss occurring, J. & D. sued plffs., who paid the loss & costs of action. Deft. did not pay over to plffs. the premium nor forward the application of J. & D.:—Held: deft. liable on the grounds of negligence & breach of authority for the loss & costs of plffs. at the suit of J. & D. *Continued in Fire Insee. a. Principal's remedy for disobedience.]—Action by agent against principal:—Held: upon the facts deft. had no right to a set-off against plff., nor could he support a plea of payment, or accord & satisfaction; if he had any remedy at all it was by action for negligence in not obeying instructions.—SWORD v. CARRUTHERS (1850), 7 U. C. R. 313.—CAN.

b. —. No liability where subsequent loss due to principal's unreasonable conduct.]—B., as A.'s agent, chartered a ship from C. who by the charterparty was bound to deliver as customary—viz., on the quay side. A. objected to this clause as contrary to his instructions to discharge into lighters, but C. declined to alter the clause, & on A. refusing to take delivery discharged stored the cargo, claiming against A. for damages, freight demurrage & disbursements. A. having been found liable, sued B. for the amount he was condemned in & costs of arbn.:—Held: (1) B. not liable, A.'s refusal to take delivery being unreasonable; (2) in any case B. could not be liable for the costs of an arbn. to which he was not a party.—BARKLY & SONS v. 1188 i. No liability when instructions obeyed.—What amounts to obedience.]—An agent to whom the principal has remitted a sum of money to pay a debt owing by the principal to a third party resident abroad, & who, during the time necessary to find the creditor & obtain a power of attorney enabling him to make payment, has deposited the sum in a local responsible & duly constituted bank, is not responsible upon the subsequent failure of the bank before it is possible for the agent to carry out his instructions.—TEMPEST v. goods by their having been weighed & the invoice made out; (2) the broker was not liable.—GOWER v. JONES (1831), 1 L. J. K. B. 10.

1188. — What amounts to obedience.]—A. having directed his agent B. to invest for him £1,850 at 5 per cent., so that he might call in £1,100 of it ready at any time, & B. having, after A.'s death, brought forward a mtge. security to himself for £2,500, & a deed-poll, executed by himself, declaring £1,850 of it to be the money of A.:—Held: (1) this did not discharge B.; (2) B. must pay the money into ct.—EVERY v. MOULD (1831), 1 L. J. Ch. 23.

1189. — Instructions substantially obeyed.]—In an action by a share-broker against a person for not accepting certain shares in a foreign ry., it appeared there were no shares, strictly so called, in the market, but plff. had bought what was current in the market as shares in that co., namely, a letter of allotment:—Held: this satisfied the authority to buy shares.—MITCHELL v. NEWHALL (NEWARK) (1846), 15 M. & W. 308; 4 Ry. & Can. Cas. 300; 15 L. J. Ex. 292; 7 L. T. O. S. 88; 10 Jur. 318.

1190. — — — — —.]—Deft., who resided at Liverpool, gave to plff., who carried on business at Pernambuco, an order to purchase 100 bales of cotton of a specified quality, in the following terms: "I beg to confirm my letter of Feb. 23, & hope you will have executed fully all the cotton ordered & consider still in force. If executed please regard this as a new order for 100 more." Plff., acting on this order, purchased in the market, & paid for, 91 bales of the specified cotton. No direct evidence was given as to the then state of the Pernambuco market; but the circumstances of the case rendered it reasonable to infer that plff., in purchasing 91 bales, had done all that was practicable. Deft. declined to pay for these bales or the commission on the ground that his order had been inadequately performed:—Held: (1) the order must be construed with reference to the state of market for which it had been given; (2) it had been substantially complied with; (3) judgment was rightly entered for plff.—JOHNSTON v. KERSHAW (1867), L. R. 2 Exch. 82; 36 L. J. Ex. 44; 15 L. T. 485; 15 W. R. 354.

1191. Prompt obedience required.]—A., by letter, requested B. to purchase for him 150 bales of cotton; the letter contained the following terms:—"Upon executing the above & forwarding bill of lading I will accept your draft at 60 days' sight after receipt of bill of lading":—Held: B. was bound to deliver the bill of lading as soon after arrival as he could, without reference to arrival or unloading of cargo.—BARBER v. TAYLOR (1839), 5 M. & W. 527; 9 L. J. Ex. 21; 151 E. R. 223.

1192. Direct instructions supersede duties implied from nature of agency—Broker.]—Declaration stated that deft. had been retained by plffs. as their broker to sell & deliver certain goods, according to terms of contract, to such person as should become purchaser. It then alleged deft. sold goods to P., & P. purchased at certain times of delivery, amount to be paid on delivery:—Held: (1) the duty of deft. did not appear, from the declaration, to have arisen from his character as broker, but arose as an inference of law from the contract stated in the declaration; (2) this was an express contract by deft. with plffs. to deliver what he sold for ready money only; (3) an action against deft. for delivering without the price being paid might be brought in tort as well as in assumpsit.—*BOORMAN v. 1193. — Underwriter.]—In an action against an underwriter for not insuring, the declaration set out that the underwriter had undertaken to insure a certain ship, upon the usual terms of insurance of ships; & the breach was that, though a reasonable time had elapsed, etc., yet the underwriter had not caused the said ship to be insured, according to the usual terms of marine insurance, etc. Deft. contended he was bound only to use a proper degree of care & diligence to perform what he had undertaken:—Held: (1) the declaration had well alleged an absolute duty to do a specific thing; (2) the action was founded on an express contract which cast upon deft. the duty not only to use proper care & diligence in effecting the policy, but at all events to insure the ship mentioned.—*TURPIN v. 1195. No liability for obeying instructions ineffectually revoked.]—T., a married woman, being entitled for her separate use to dividends of certain Govt. stock standing in the name of plff. as her trustee, plff. gave to defts., a banking co., a power of attorney to receive the dividends & at the same time directed them to pay the dividends to T. T. directed defts. to pay the dividends to S. & B., bankers at Brussels, to whom she had pledged them for advances made by S. & B. to her husband. Defts. for some time paid the dividends to S. & B., but at length T. wrote to defts. as follows:—"I think it right to inform you that in consequence of the death of one of my trustees, as well as my having left Brussels, I have been obliged to have a new power of attorney made to receive my own dividends, & I shall not have occasion to trouble you to do so." No new power of attorney was made out, & defts. received the ensuing half-yearly dividend & transmitted it to S. & B. Where a co. is formed for the purchase of a business & the power to make the purchase is distinctly conferred upon the directors, they are not personally responsible for the consequences of making the purchase, although the business turns

B. Where agent cannot obey instructions.

1197. Agent must notify principal.]—In assumption for breach of an undertaking to effect an insurance according to special instructions, the declaration alleged the duty of defts. to be to effect the insurance according to instructions, or, in event of their inability to do so, to give pltf. notice of such inability:—Held: this was a duty necessarily implied from the nature of the employment.—*CALLENDER (CALLENDER, CALLENDAR) v. 1198. Agent must prove or plead impossibility at trial.]—An underwriter who seeks to excuse himself on the ground of impossibility of finding persons ready or willing to underwrite the particular risk, or on any other justifiable ground of excuse, must either show it in evidence at the trial as an answer to the breach so alleged or plead it by way of excuse as he should be advised (TINDAL, C.J.).—*TURPIN v. C. Where Instructions allow a Discretion.

1199. Agent not liable if he acts bonâ fide.]—Pltf. instructed deft., his agent, to insure a cargo, no directions how or with whom to insure being given. Dft. bonâ fide insured the cargo with an office whose practice it was to insert a particular exception. There was another office whose policies did not contain the exception, & with whom the insurance could have been effected at the same premium. The cargo was lost by a cause within the exception:—Held: deft. not liable.

d. Sale as instructed impossible.—Exchange effected.—Goods received lost by smuggling.]—Pltf.'s action was for the value of lumber shipped under an agreement that deft. should carry it & sell it, as agent for pltf., for cash or bills of exchange on France. Dft. could not sell wholly for cash & exchanged the lumber for tobacco, which, on its return, was smuggled into port & seized by the revenue officers:—Held: pltf. being wholly innocent of the fraud, was entitled to judgment.—*BRETHEN v. either to sell for him at T., or to send it to be sold at Q. or other places, as circumstances might require. He directed that the flour should be insured, & defts. effected an insurance. The flour was shipped to Q., but was lost owing to the negligence & want of skill of the captain. The policy contained an express stipulation that the co. would not be liable for any loss occasioned by the want of ordinary care or skill in the navigation of the vessel, & pltf. failed to recover on it; but it appeared that this was the ordinary form of policy, & that defts. could not have procured any other:—Held: pltf. could maintain no action against defts. for taking such form of policy. Semble: if an insurance might have been effected on more favourable terms, yet defts. would have been justified in insuring as they did, having received no special instructions, 1200. —.]—If a merchant orders an insurance broker to effect a policy of insurance for him on a cargo of corn, without giving any directions as to those with whom the policy is to be effected, & the insurance broker effects the policy with one of the chartered cos., by whose policies corn is warranted against partial losses, although the ship be stranded: upon a large partial loss happening upon this cargo after a stranding of the ship, the merchant cannot maintain an action against the insurance broker for not effecting the policy with private underwriters who, by the common form of a policy of insurance, would have been liable for this partial loss. Although an insurance broker is bound to obey the positive directions of the assured to abandon, yet if it is referred to his discretion whether to abandon or not, & he acts bonâ fide, he is not liable to an action for neglecting to abandon.—COMBER v. ANDERSON (1808), 1 Camp. 523.

1201. —.]—An agent is bound to act in the best manner he can for his principal, & in matters which are left to an agent's discretion, he can only act for the benefit of his principal.

A foreign merchant directed his correspondent in England to treat any consignment as his son's, who was in England & superintended the sales & purchases, & to acknowledge him owner of the money, so that he might dispose thereof as if it was his own money. By the direction of the son, moneys in the hands of correspondent, belonging to the father, were applied by him in paying a private debt of the son to the correspondent:—Held: the transaction was valid.—PARIENTE v. LUBBOCK, No. 1209, post.

D. Where Instructions ambiguous.

1202. Definite instructions not extended by subsequent ambiguous words.]—A mercantile house accepted a commission to sell & transfer stock "when the funds should be at 85 per cent., or above that price," & had not sold when the funds reached 85:—Held: (1) they were bound to sell when the funds reached 85, & had not a general authority to defer selling till the funds should reach a higher price than 85; (2) they must account to their employer for the price of the stock with interest; he, in return, accounting to them for the dividends he had subsequently received in ignorance of the fact of the funds having reached that price.—*BERTHAM, ARMSTRONG & Co. v. limits, you may invest one half of the whole proceeds in silk, at prices not exceeding, etc. If silk is obtainable much below these prices, you may substitute it in part for tea, even if the latter is to be had within our limits, at your discretion":—Held: on looking at the whole of the letter the words "you may invest" were to be construed as directory, & not as giving defts. a discretionary power.

The declaration stated that in consideration that pltf. at London would consign to defts. at China goods for sale & receipt of proceeds by defts. for pltf. for reward, defts. promised to invest & remit proceeds to pltf. within a reasonable time after receiving the "proceeds," by the purchase, to the amount of £500, of any other article than tea & silk, if defts. thought fit; that if within such reasonable time tea could not be bought by defts. & silk could, within certain prices agreed upon, & if defts. did not purchase any other article than tea & silk, then they would purchase silk to the extent of half the proceeds & consign it to pltf.; that defts. received the goods, sold them, & received the "proceeds" thereof; that while they held them for more than a reasonable time, they did not invest any part of them in any other article than tea or silk within the prices so agreed on for more than a reasonable time after they had received the "proceeds." Plea, that after defts. received the "proceeds" they could not have bought silk within the prices agreed upon:—Held: upon the true construction of the term "proceeds" the question raised was not whether defts. could have bought silk after they had received the whole proceeds, but whether they could have bought it after they had received a part or parts, for the remittance of which more than a reasonable time had elapsed, such time commencing as soon as a part considerable enough to be remitted was received.—*ENTWISTLE (ENTWISTLE) v. As the error arose from his own indistinctness of expression, he must bear the loss.

A. wrote to B. & Co., at Mauritius, desiring them to ship him 500 tons of sugar at 26s. 9d. to cover freight & insurance, adding "Fifty tons more or less of no moment, if it enables you to get a suitable vessel. I should prefer the option of sending vessel to London, Liverpool, or the Clyde; but if that is not compassable, you may ship to either Liverpool or London." B. & Co. could only procure, at the price mentioned, nearly 400 tons, which they purchased from several different persons, & shipped in one vessel to Liverpool. A. refused the cargo, & wrote to cancel the order so as to prevent any further shipment:—Held: in the circumstances, A. was bound to accept the cargo.—IRELAND v. LIVINGSTON (1872), L. R. 5 H. 1207. ———.]—If a principal gives an agent instructions so obscure as reasonably to admit of two constructions, he cannot complain if the agent honestly acts upon one construction which may be held to be incorrect.

A ship was chartered by a co. running a regular line to proceed from Calcutta to N.Y., & was in accordance with the charterparty consigned to agents nominated by the charterers. The ship was to discharge her cargo as fast as she could put out & according to the custom of the port. The bills of lading, which were in the American & Indian Line form, contained a clause: "Customs formalities & detentions at N.Y. to be at the risk & expense of consignee of goods." According to the law of the United States goods could not be removed from a ship until the Customs examination had taken place & duty paid, but if the ship belonged to a regular line the cargo might be unloaded on to a wharf, where Customs formalities must be complied with. On arrival of the ship at N.Y. she discharged on to a wharf & the cargo was tiered, expenses being thereby incurred for wharf hire, watching cargo, & breaking down cargo for Customs examination. Delivery of the cargo from the wharf was not completed until seven days after the ship had left the wharf. The ship was not discharged as fast as she could put out to the extent of five days, owing to compliance with Customs formalities. The agents took no steps to enforce against the consignees any claim for expenses, charges, demurrage, or detention

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.—D.

1204 i. Agent adopting reasonable construction—Agent not liable.]—If an agent disobey the instructions of his principal he is liable to pay any loss which in the ordinary course of things is the result of such disobedience, but where the instructions given by the principal are capable of two different meanings, & the agent adopting & acting upon one of them, the principal is held bound, the words used must be fairly & reasonably susceptible of either meaning, & the language used is not to be tortured to raise a doubt.—GLOBE & ROGERS FIRE INSURANCE CO. v. WETHERS & Co. (1915), 49 N. S. R. 55.—CAN caused by compliance with Customs formalities. The charterers assumed full responsibility for the acts of the agents:—Held: in absence of specific instruction to the agents to assert a lien there was no breach of duty on the part of the agents in abstaining from asserting a lien or from bringing a number of actions against the consignees.—CORBRIDGE S.S. CO., LTD. v. BUCKNALL STEAMSHIP LINES, LTD. (1910), 15 Com. Cas. 138, C. A.

1208. ———.]—If the instructions of a principal are given in such ambiguous terms as to be susceptible of different meanings, & the agent bonâ fide adopts one of them, not only is the agent protected by the transaction being upheld, but the principal is responsible to the other principal for the interpretation which the agent reasonably & bonâ fide put on those ambiguous instructions.

Defts., having received a telegram from A., a foreign shipowner, authorising them to "fix steamer, prompt loading 3,000 tons coal, Newport, Cagliari, Messina, or Palermo, twenty shillings. If cannot do better wire immediately," signed, as agents for A., a charterparty letting a ship to plffs. A. refused to let the ship on the ground that he had authorised defts. to hire, & not to let, a ship, & plffs. were obliged to hire another ship at greater expense. In an action for breach of warranty of authority:—Held: (1) the word "fix" meant "let"; (2) if the telegram was ambiguous defts. had acted bonâ fide & reasonably in the interpretation which they gave to it, & the shipowner would have been responsible to plffs. for such interpretation; (3) on the facts defts. having inserted in the charterparty terms which were outside the authority, in whatever way it might be read, were liable.—WEIGALL & CO. v. RUNCIMAN & CO. (1916), 85 L. J. K. B. 1187; 115 L. T. 61, C. A.

1209. Full authority not cut down by ambiguous expressions.—The ordinary import of language of a letter giving full authority to deal with the property of another ought not to be cut down or restricted by merely ambiguous or uncertain expressions in other parts of the document.

Where a foreign merchant wrote to his English correspondent directing the latter to consider any consignment from him as the property of his son, who was residing in England, so that the son might place & dispose of the father's money as if it were the son's own property, & stating that, as the son informed the father of everything, the consignor would not continue writing, but that whatever the son said for him was to be the same as if he had said it himself, & must guide the consignee:—Held: (1) the son was thus constituted not merely an agent with full powers to act for his father, but the consignee was justified in setting off, with the son's concurrence, a debt due to the father against one due from the son; (2) although on one or two occasions the consignee had required a written authority from the son before so acting, neither this circumstance nor the terms of the letters rendered any writing necessary, but a verbal direction or subsequent adoption by the son was sufficient; (3) the consignee's firm having been changed by the death of a member of it, subsequently to the date of the letters, made no difference in these respects, the letters having imposed a duty on the consignee's house, which continued as long as the relation between plff. & it, however it might be composed.—PARIENTE v. LUBBOCK (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 5; 44 E. R. 290.

jury—Less reasonable construction.—B. & Co., T.'s agents, acting upon ambiguous instructions from him, signed a charterparty with L. & Co. which T. repudiated. L. & Co. brought an action against B. & Co. for damages for breach of warranty of authority in them to enter into the charterparty. The jury found B. & Co. had put a construction on the instructions sent to them by T. which no reasonable man should have done:—Held: (1) the question of construction was one for the jury, as the instructions of defts. were contained in a commercial document; (2) as plffs. had only had to show that the construction of defts. was the less reasonable one, they were entitled to judgment in the action.—LINDSAY, GRACIE & CO. v. BARTER & CO. (1885), 2 T. L. R. 4, C. A.

1212. ——— Telegram to master of ship.—A joint telegram in ambiguous terms was sent by shipowners & charterers to the master of a chartered ship. The master bonâ fide interpreted the telegram in a sense not intended by the senders:—Held: senders bound by master's interpretation.—MILES v. HASLEHURST, No. 1213, post.

1213. ———.—The crew of a chartered ship at Hong Kong refused to proceed to Vladivostok unless paid a bonus. Plff., the charterer, agreed with defts., the shipowners, to pay the bonus, conditionally on the ship's arrival at Vladivostok or capture, & a joint telegram was sent to the master authorising him to pay the bonus on these terms. Owing to the ambiguous language of the telegram, the master signed notes making the bonus payable in any event, & these notes were duly paid by defts. Plff. thereupon paid the amount of the notes to defts. The ship did not arrive at Vladivostok, & was not captured, but was lost at sea. Plff. having brought an action to recover back the amount paid to defts.:—Held: plff. could not recover, as he was equally responsible with defts. for the ambiguity of the telegram.—MILES v. HASLEHURST & CO. (1906), 23 T. L. R. 142; 12 Com. Cas. 83.

zeal, & energy he is capable of, & any interests he may have himself he is bound to exercise to the fullest extent for the sole & exclusive benefit of the person for whom he is acting (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—PRICE v. METROPOLITAN HOUSE INVESTMENT AGENCY CO. No. 1848, post.

1215. — Question of fact.—Whether the agent has used due diligence or not is a question of fact for the jury, & if the agent went on the statement of others, that is no excuse, as it was his duty to ascertain how the fact was, or to report to his employers that he only went on the information of others & that the fact was uncertain.—MONEY-PENNY v. HARTLAND (1824), 1 C. & P. 352.

1217. — — — — —.—On the employment of any mercantile or commercial agent, it is for the jury, in absence of express evidence of the nature of his duties on such employment, to judge, from their own knowledge, what those duties are: & thus on the employment of an insurance agent to effect an insurance, or get it effected, it is for the jury, in absence of express evidence, to judge whether he was employed to get the insurance effected, or only to place the business in the hands of brokers to effect it, & whether he is responsible for their neglect or default, especially in not getting it effected with responsible insurers, & in not informing his employer, the insured, who they are, in order to enable him to sue them. It is matter of law that the agent is only bound to use due care & do what is usual, but it is matter for the jury what this duty involves, or whether there has been a breach of it.—MURRELL v. BULLARD (1863), 3 F. & F. 415.

1218. — — — — —.—Evidence of other agents admissible.]—Where the issue is whether the agent exercised a reasonable & proper care, skill & judgment, the fact that other persons exercising the same calling would, or would not, have acted in the same way, is material in determining it. If as many would have acted as the agent acted, & as many otherwise, he would be entitled to a verdict.—CHAPMAN v. WALTON (1833), 10 Bing. 57; 3 Moo. & S. 389; 2 L. J. C. P. 910; 131 E. R. 826.

The vessel was infected with dry rot, which could not have been detected by inspection:—Held: B. had fulfilled his duty to use ordinary diligence in the conduct of the transaction.—BLACKETT v. RORKE (1905), 37 N. S. R. 435.—CAN.

1214 III. — — — — —.—Deft., manager of a shop of pltf., acknowledged from time to time the value of goods received from pltf., but on a certain stock-taking a shortage of stock was shown, & though no fraud was shown, deft. was unable to account for the shortage:—Held: deft. was liable for the loss sustained, as it was part of his duty as manager to see the goods invoiced corresponded with the goods received, & he had failed in that duty.—TYLER v. LOGAN (1901), 7 F. (Ct. of Sess.) 123.—SCOT.

1222. — What is gross negligence.—In the case of an agent holding himself out for careful & skilful performance of a particular duty, gross negligence includes want of that reasonable care, skill, & expedition which may properly be expected from persons so holding themselves out & their servants.

For all practical purposes the rule may be stated to be, that the failure to exercise reasonable care, skill, & diligence is gross negligence (per Cur.).—BEAL v. SOUTH DEVON RY. CO. (1864), 3 H. & C. 337; 11 L. T. 184; 12 W. R. 1115; 159 E. R. 500, Ex. Ch.

Agent not liable if he does what is usual.—In an action of account for a watch & sword delivered to deft. ad mercandizandum, deft. pleaded that in order to keep them safe until he had an opportunity to sell them he put them into a warehouse which was broken into by enemies; that the watch was taken away & lost, & the sword was claimed by an Englishman, & deft. was forced to go away before he met with the Englishman to get it again:—Held: this was prima facie a good account, for the bailiff ad mercandizandum was not obliged to keep the goods always about him.—GOSWILL v. DUNKLEY (1726), 2 Stra. 680; 93 E. R. 779.

1230. Negligence of principal no defence.—[Deft., being employed by pltf. to sell furniture for ready money only, sold it, but took in payment a bill of exchange drawn by purchaser on a third person. Pltf. refused to take the bill & applied for the proceeds of sale, but his agent afterwards obtained the bill from deft. to get it discounted. It was never presented for payment; the drawer never had notice of its dishonour, & 10 days elapsed after it became due, before deft. had such notice. In an action brought against deft. for negligence in selling otherwise than for ready money:—Held: deft.

was liable notwithstanding pltf. had not presented the bill for payment &, by not giving notice of dishonour to the drawer, had discharged him from liability on the bill. Semble: deft. might sustain a cross-action against pltf. to recover any damage sustained by him, in consequence of such negligence preventing him from recovering on the bill.—*FERRERS (EARL) v. 1233. Duty limited to matters within scope of employment.—[Defts., merchants at L., who acted as brokers for pltf.s, merchants at L., wrote to pltf.s. proposing to them to purchase a quantity of scrap iron of a specified quality. Pltf.s. desired an offer of cost & freight to Rotterdam. Defts. stated the price, but were unable to make an offer as to freight, as they had then no ship available. Before pltf.s. had closed with the offer defts. proposed a ship for conveyance of the iron. Pltf.s. accepted the purchase, but objected to the ship as too small to take the whole cargo, desiring defts. to look out for another. Defts., as agents for both parties, entered into & accepted the contract of sale, & transmitted same to pltf.s. They engaged a vessel to convey the iron, received the same, & caused it to be shipped, assuring pltf.s. the cargo

e. Agent not liable where no negligence.—[Pltf.s. were carriers whose business it was to receive money from customers for transmission. Upon receipt of money from a customer a document was given to him, signed on behalf of pltf.s., & where the transaction took place at an agency, countersigned by an agent. Pltf.s. had appointed deft. an agent & supplied him with blank forms of these documents called "express money orders," signed on behalf of pltf.s. Under his contract with pltf.s. deft. accepted the responsibility of the due issue & sale of the money orders, agreed to account for each money order & its proceeds, to hold the proceeds in trust for pltf.s. & pay them to pltf.s. when required after making certain deductions, & not to deal with the money received for transmission in respect of them in any other manner. A clerk of deft. stole a number of forms, forged his name to the countersigning, & put them off. They were presented at another agency of pltf.s. & there paid. Pltf.s. sued to recover the money so paid:—Held: deft. was not authorised to issue the orders in question, they were issued in fraud of pltf.s., & deft. was not liable.—*DOMINION EXPRESS Co. v. without advising pltf.s. of shipment in time for them to insure:—Held: defts. not liable for damage caused by loss of the vessel on which the teas had been shipped.—MATLAND v. TYLER (1858), 7 C. P. 335.—CAN.

1233 ii. — Failure to complete blank in lien note.—[Deft., pltf.'s agent, sold R. a waggon, for the price of which R. gave a lien note, reserving to pltf. title & possession till payment. Deft. guaranteed R.'s note, but pltf. failed to register it, & it was sold in good faith to a purchaser, who thus acquired a title:—Held: (1) deft. was under no duty to fill up the blanks in the affidavit of bona fides, but only in the note itself, which he did; (2) even if such was his duty, his neglect in no way contributed to pltf.'s failure to register the note; & deft. was accordingly discharged from liability on his guarantee.—GRAY-CAMPBELL, LTD. v. REIMER (1917), 2 W. W. R. 991; 11 Alta. L. R. 437; 36 D. L. R. 181.—CAN.

Duty of agent receiving money subject to conditions.—[Where an agent, vested with limited authority, receives a payment which does not fulfil the conditions on which he is authorised to receive payments, he should place the money in medio until further instructed by his principal.—*MCPHERSON v. was considered a first-rate description of scrap iron. Defts.' profit was derived from commission from the seller & the shipowner. In an action against defts. for not using proper & reasonable care, skill & diligence in accepting & shipping the iron:—Held: the employment of defts. as brokers & shipping agents did not raise a duty to examine the iron for pltf's., there being no evidence of usage or contract that they should do so.

Defts. acted both as brokers & shipping agents. That which is not a duty in either capacity singly cannot become a duty by two capacities being combined, unless there is a usage that where there is such combination, such duty arises (POLLOCK, C.B.).—*ZWILCHENBART (ZUILCHENBART) v. 1234. Duty to use cable.]—An agent whose duty it is in the ordinary course of business to communicate information to his principal as to the state of a ship & cargo ought to do so by telegraph where that means of communication is in general use; & if the agent omits to discharge this duty, & the principal, being thus left in ignorance of a fact material to be communicated, effects an insurance, the insurance is void, on the ground of concealment or misrepresentation.

Pltf.'s agent at Smyrna, having shipped a cargo, sent the shipping documents on Jan. 19. The ship sailed on Jan. 23, but, stranded on the same day, & the cargo became a total loss. The agent was informed on Jan. 24, & wrote to pltf. on Jan. 26, the next post-day, informing him of the loss; he purposely abstained from telegraphing, in order that pltf. might not be prevented from insuring. After receiving the letter of Jan. 19, but before receiving the letter of Jan. 26, pltf., on Jan. 31, effected an insurance, being in ignorance of the loss:—Held: pltf. could not recover.—PROUDFOOT v. MONTEFIORE (1867), L. R. 2 Q. B. 511; 8 B. & S. 510; 36 L. J. Q. B. 225; 10 L. T. 585; 15 W. R. 920; 2 Mar. L. C. 512.

hands of clerks, to be used at their discretion; (3) to deposit the firm's cash to a large amount in certain banks without consent of all the partners; (4) to increase wages of the firm's servants or to make agreements for their employment for a term of years; (5) to substitute for the original more expensive machinery without the authority of all the partners.—BEVERIDGE v. BEVERIDGE (1872), L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. 183.

1236. Agent liable where he acts with blind confidence.]—On a motion by beneficiaries of a will to make resp., a trustee of the will & salaried manager of a colliery appointed by the ct. in an administration suit, liable for sums intrusted by him to a solr. for payment into ct., it appeared he had paid sums to the solr. knowing of his prior bkpy., & the solr. had embezzled those sums:—Held: (1) resp. was justified in employing a solr., & one who, though he had been a bkpt., was still on the rolls; (2) if resp., in his capacity as paid agent, had lost the money by failure of a bank into which he had paid it, he would not have been liable; (3) as he had made no inquiries as to what had become of the moneys after they had passed into his solr.'s hands, & asked for no vouchers of payment into ct., & had acted with blind confidence, & without the caution required of a paid agent or a bailee for reward, he was liable to refund the sums lost by the fraud of his solr. to the beneficiaries.—Re MITCHELL, MITCHELL v. MITCHELL (1884), 54 L. J. Ch. 342; 52 L. T. 178; 1 T. L. R. 153.

B. sold the cattle to C., who obtained delivery of them from A. in consequence of B.'s failure to notify him that C. had not paid for them:—Held: A. was entitled to recover from B. the amount due from C.—KIDD v. HORNE (1885), 2 T. L. R. 141.

1238. Duty limited to acts contemplated at time of employment.]—Pltf's. claimed damages from defts., who had contracted for certain fixed charges to lighter & load on ry. trucks pltf's. machinery, for not clearing the goods in less than 24 hours, whereby they became liable to a heavy customs duty, under an Ordinance not in force when the contract was made:—Held: there was no breach of the agent's duty to use reasonable care, the imposition of the duty not being in the contemplation of the parties when the contract was made, & the judge was right in not leaving the question to the jury & non-suiting pltf's.—COMMONWEALTH PORTLAND CEMENT Co., LTD. v. WEBER, LOHMANN & Co., LTD., [1905]

1235 i. Agent liable for exceeding his authority.] Defts., agents to sell pltf.'s sheep, after the latter had approved & signed the proposed contract between him & the purchaser, & acting outside their authority & not in the usual course of business, added a term of an onerous nature to the document, which was then signed by the purchaser. Defts. gave no notice of this term to pltf., & the purchaser repudiated the contract, as the conditions of the term had not been fulfilled:—Held: pltf. had a good cause of action against defts., the declaration alleging negligence in defts.—KENDALL v. DORREBRANDE (1891), 12 N. S. W. 51.—AUS.

b. Agent negligent but acting bona fide.]—A principal who had written urgent letters to his agent, & failed to obtain an answer, employed solrs. to see to his interests; but the agent, though repeatedly applied to by them, gave them no information, & the solrs. applied for an account & injunction:—Held: the agent because of his neglect must pay costs up to the hearing, even though his neglect did not proceed from motives of dishonesty or of concealment.—DOUGLASS v. WOODSIDE (1865), 11 Gr. 375.—CAN.

1237 iii. — Defect in vendor's title.]—An agent employed to buy a grocery, including the stock & goodwill, is liable in damages for the loss incurred by his principal through defects in the title of vendor of which he was aware at the time of the sale, as if he knew that the seller himself had acquired the property under the condition that default to pay the price would entitle the owner to take it back, or that part of the stock was held in like manner, & that the seller was in default.—*AUTHIER v. B. Professional Agents.

(a) In General.

1239. Standard of skill required.]—Public profession of an art is a representation & undertaking to all the world that the professor possesses requisite care & skill. Where a skilled labourer, artisan, or artist is employed, there is on his part an implied warranty that he is of skill reasonably competent to the task he undertakes.—HARMER v. CORNELIUS (1858), 5 C. B. N. S. 236; 28 L. J. C. P. 85; 32 L. T. O. S. 62; 22 J. P. 724; 4 Jur. N. S. 1110; 6 W. R. 749; 141 E. R. 94.

1240. — Ordinary skill only.]—Every person who enters into a learned profession undertakes to bring to the exercise of it a reasonable degree of care & skill. He does not undertake, if he is an attorney, that at all events the client shall gain his cause, nor does a surgeon undertake that he will perform a cure; nor does he undertake to use the highest possible degree of skill. There may be persons who have higher education & greater advantages than he has, but he undertakes to bring a fair, reasonable, & competent degree of skill (TINDAL, C.J.).—LANPHER v. PHIPOS (1838), 8 C. & P. 475.

1241. — Error of judgment not actionable.]—Professional men, possessed of a reasonable portion of information & skill, according to the duties they undertake to perform, & exercising what they so possess with reasonable care & diligence in the affairs of their employers, certainly ought not to be held liable for errors in judgment, whether in matters of law or discretion. Every case ought to depend upon its own peculiar circumstances, & when an injury has been sustained which could not have arisen except from the want of such reasonable skill & diligence or the absence of the employment of either on the part of the agent, the law holds him liable.—HART & HODGE v. FRAME, SON & CO. (1839), 6 Cl. & Fin. 193; Macl. & Rob. 595; 3 Jur. 547; 7 E. R. 670, H. L.

1242. Knowledge expected from paid professional agent.]—It is part of the duty of one who holds himself out as skilled in a branch of professional knowledge to become acquainted with decisions which have an important bearing upon the practice relating to that branch, & ignorance of such an important change in the practice is some evidence of negligence.—LEE v. WALKER (1872), L. R. 7 C. P. 121; 41 L. J. C. P. 91; 26 L. T. 70.

o. Agent to collect rent.—Failure to act.]—A power of attorney was prepared & executed by two of four tenants in common, appointing an agent to receive the rents & profits of the estate, & was transmitted to the agent, who had undertaken to procure its execution by the other owners. The power never was executed by them, & the agent more than a year afterwards declined to act in the matter, alleging that such execution was necessary to enable him to receive the rents.—Held: the agent was liable for rents & profits received, or which but for his wilful default might have been received by him, from time of the power being sent to him until his repudiation.—

1245 i. Agent to invest money.—Investment on bad security.]—Agents, who procure their principal to advance money upon representations made by them, which representations, besides being untrue are made without due skill & diligence & negligently, are liable to their principal, & the burden to reinstate the principal in the position in which but for their wrong he would be lies upon them. The agents' liability is to the extent of the overvaluation of the property mtged., & not the full amount of the loan with interest with an assignment over of the mtge. to the agents for their indemnity.—LOWENBURG, HARRIS & CO. v. WOLLEY (1895), 25 S. C. R. 51.—CAN.

1243. Accountant.—Extent of duties.]—In an action to recover damages against debts, in respect of their alleged negligence in performance of duties as accountants in examination of accounts of a business in which pltf. was then proposing to invest money, & in which he did so invest:—Held: pltf. had failed to show that the alleged negligence of debts, had induced him to invest money in the business, & caused the loss he had sustained.

Although it is not the duty of accountants to take stock in auditing accounts of a business, they may well call for explanations of particular items in stock sheets (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—*SQUIRE, CASH CHEMIST, LTD. v. 1245 iii. —.]—Agents on commission to invest money by way of loan on real securities are not liable for breach of trust unless fraud is shown for lending to themselves, & the failure of securities from such debtors raises no presumption of fraudulent design; nor on the ground of negligence only can they be made liable, although trustees where confidence & not obligation is the ground of duty would be liable.—GRAHAM v. BARKER (1845), Red. & Eq. Judg. (Eq.) 1.—AUS.

Sec. 2.—Principal's rights against agent: Sub-sect. 2, i.e., he must not certify what he does not believe to be true, & he must take reasonable care & skill before he believes that what he certifies is true. Where suspicion is aroused more care is obviously necessary; but an auditor is not bound to exercise more than reasonable care & skill, even in a case of suspicion, & he is perfectly justified in acting on the opinion of an expert where special knowledge is required (LINDLEY, L.J.).—Re LONDON & GENERAL BANK, [1895] 2 Ch. 673; 64 L. 1251. —.—[An auditor is not bound to be suspicious where there are no circumstances to arouse suspicion; he is only bound to exercise a reasonable amount of care & skill.

For some years before a co. was wound up, balance-sheets, signed by the auditors, were published by the directors to the shareholders, in which the value of the co.'s stock-in-trade at the end of each year was grossly overstated. The auditors relied on certificates wilfully false, given by J., one of the directors, who was manager, as to the value of the stock-in-trade. Dividends were paid for some years on the footing that the balance-sheets were correct; but if the stock-in-trade had been stated at its true value it would have appeared that there were no profits out of which a dividend could be declared. If the auditors had compared the different books & added to the stock-in-trade at the beginning of the year the amounts purchased during the year, & deducted the amounts sold, they would have seen that the statement of the stock-in-trade at the end of the year was so large as to call for explanation; but they did not do so.—Held: it being no part of the duty of the auditors to take stock, they were justified in relying on the certificates of J., a person of acknowledged competence & high reputation, & were not bound to check his certificates in the absence of anything to raise suspicion, & they were not liable for the dividends wrongfully paid.—Re KINGSTON COTTON MILL CO., [1896] 2 Ch. 279; 65 L. 1252. Broker.—[Where a broker acts both as broker & principal in the same transaction, any contract arising out of such conduct is, upon the principles of common law, good for nothing, & no action can be maintained upon so fraudulent a transaction. A broker is to be considered as an agent of the seller or the buyer, or of both, bound honestly to exercise his skill & fairly to communicate his opinion on the subject of the purchase to those who, for that purpose, have confidently employed him. It requires little observation to show how disqualifying a circumstance to the fair discharge of that duty will arise from the interference of his own interest (LORD ELDON, C.).—Re MOLINE, Ex p. DYSTER, No. 1839, post.

1254. —.—[A broker of London who negotiates a contract between buyer & seller of merchandise is bound either to enter the contract correctly in his book forthwith, or deliver a correct note of contract to both buyer & seller, & is liable to his principal for any damage the latter may sustain by his negligence in this respect.—SIVEWRIGHT v. RICHARDSON (1852), 19 L. T. O. S. 10.

The quality of the cotton on its arrival being disputed, pltf. declined to accept his share of the 300 bales. In an action to recover his £800 from defts. as money had & received:—Held: (1) pltf. entitled so to recover it back, as defts. had not made such a contract on his behalf as would entitle him to sue upon it in his own name; (2) there was an entire failure of consideration.—BOSTOCK v. JARDINE (1865), 3 H. & C. 700; 6 New Rep. 164; 34 L. J. Ex. 142; 12 L. T. 577; 11 Jur. N. S. 586; 13 W. R. 970; 159 E. R. 707.

1257. — Duty to get best price possible.]—

Brokers employed to sell goods are bound to do so in the usual way, & if it is usual to send the seller an estimate of value, in order that he may be enabled to fix a reserved price, they ought to do so, & whether it is so or not, they are bound, for their own guidance, to make a careful estimate of the value, & if they sell, even by public auction, at a price much below the fair value, their not having made such an estimate will be evidence of negligence & of a loss caused thereby, for which they will be liable. Brokers employed to sell upon the ordinary terms are bound to employ due care & diligence, but will not be liable for mere mistake without negligence. It is not a question merely of price or value, but whether they were guilty of negligence in not getting a better price, & in not using ordinary care to 1259. — Confined to facts reasonably material.—Brokers acting for owners, shippers of cocoa lying in warehouse at Liverpool, acted also as brokers to the purchaser of a number of bags of this cocoa. The brokers had been informed by the shippers that there was a note on the bill of lading: "Bags in bad condition, stained & damp, cocoa mouldy." The brokers employed a firm of experts to examine the cocoa, & they reported that some of the mouldy cocoa being removed, the rest would be a merchantable article. Upon this the brokers sent a sample of the cocoa to the purchasers, & the contract was concluded:—Held: the sale was one by sample, & the brokers acting honestly were only under a duty of communicating such facts as reasonable men would think material in the ordinary course of business, & in the circumstances, were not under an obligation to inform the purchasers of the note on the bill of lading.—*PAYNE v. 1262. House & estate agent.—Pltf. had employed deft. as house agent to let or procure a tenant for her house. Deft. introduced as tenant an insolvent person, being aware of his condition:—Held: (1) deft. liable to indemnify pltf. the loss she had suffered through incompetency of the tenant to pay rent, & other expenses; (2) the judge was right in directing the jury to use their knowledge of business in deciding deft.'s duty as house agent.—*HEYS (HAYES) v. 1265. Mercantile agent.—A person acting as agent for another is bound to use all ordinary prudence that can be properly & legitimately expected from any person conducting affairs of the world, namely, the same amount of prudence he would exercise on his own behalf, & which depends upon circumstances; it would be extremely wrong to import into consideration of the case of a person acting as mercantile agent in the purchase of a business concern those principles of extreme caution which might dictate the course of one who is not at all inclined to invest his property in ventures of such a hazardous character (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—*OVEREND, GURNEY & CO. v. Pltf.'s ship being delayed on a previous voyage, defts. interposed two ships, the second of which was loading when pltf.'s ship arrived. In consequence, pltf.'s ship was delayed till Jan. 28:—Held: (1) defts. had not committed a breach of contract to use their best endeavours to load the ship in rotation on or about a specified day, the ship not having arrived at the port of loading until too late to load on or about that date; (2) defts. not liable to the ship-owners for delay.—*NITRATE PRODUCERS' S.S. C. Gratuitous Agents.

1267. Difference in degree of care required from gratuitous & paid agents.—Where money has been paid for the performance of certain acts, the person receiving it is, by law, answerable for any neglect on his part, the payment of money being a sort of insurance for the due performing of what he has undertaken; & this rule has few exceptions. But where the undertaking is gratuitous, & the party has acted bona fide, it is not consistent either with the spirit or policy of the law to make him liable to an action.

A., a general merchant, undertook voluntarily to enter a parcel of goods of B. together with a parcel of his own at the Custom House for exportation, but made the entry under a wrong denomination, whereby both parcels were seized:—Held: A. having taken the same care of the goods of B. as of his own, not having received any reward, & not being of a profession or employment which necessarily implied skill in what he had undertaken, was 1264 I. Land agent—Particular instances of neglect—Right of inquiry on general allegation.—General allegations of wilful neglect, though supported by specific evidence of neglect in particular cases, are not, in a petition against a land agent, sufficient to entitle the petitioner to an inquiry touching wilful neglect.—*BOND v. P. Parliamentary agent—Failure to insert clause in bill.—A., a parliamentary agent, sued B. for work & services in obtaining the passing of a private Act of Parliament. B. pleaded that it was part of A.'s employment to prepare & submit to Parliament a clause in the bill for providing for the payment of the costs of passing the bill out of moneys to be raised in pursuance of same; & that by reason of the carelessness, negligence, unskillfulness, & default of A., the clause was so incorrectly framed that after the passing of the Act containing such clause it became impossible to enforce the payment of the costs in the manner thereby contemplated:—Held: the omission of pltf. to prepare an efficient clause for the above purpose materially affected the quality of the entire work, & the defence was a good bar to the entire action, & did not merely go in reduction of damages.—BAKER v. MILWARD (1856), 8 I. C. L. R. 514, C. P.—IR.

1268. —[.]—What is reasonable varies in the case of a gratuitous bailee & that of a bailee for hire. From the former is reasonably expected such care & diligence as persons ordinarily use in their own affairs, & such skill as he has. From the latter is reasonably expected care & diligence, such as are exercised in the ordinary & proper course of similar business, & such skill as he ought to have, namely, the skill usual & requisite in the business for which he receives payment.—BEAL v. 1269. Liable for negligence.]—Where A. gratuitously undertook to move goods & they were damaged by his negligence in moving them, an action lay; but no action would have lain for the nonfeasance.

Deft. neglected to give the notices & on a loss occurring these cos. disputed liability on the ground of lack of notice, but compromised, paying plifs. $6,000 in lieu of the full $7,000.—Held: deft. liable to plifs. for the $1,000 difference. COGGS v. 1269 iv. —Gross negligence.]—A gratuitous agent if grossly negligent is liable for any loss sustained by his principal. Gross negligence is a question on the facts of each particular case.—AGNEW v. INDIAN CARRYING CO. (1865), 2 Mad. 449.—IND.

1269 v. —[.]—A store being broken open by thieves, deft. bona fide on behalf of the owner took possession to protect the goods, thereby becoming negotiorum gestor, & only liable for gross negligence:—Held: deft. not liable to the true owner for the value of the goods.—AMOD SALIE v. RAGOON (1903), T. S. 100.—S. AF.

1269 vi. —Investment otherwise than as agreed.]—Pltf. entrusted $500 to deft., which was to be lent to H., "being secured on H.'s storehouses, bearing interest at 9 per cent., for two years deft. not to be responsible for the money. Deft., who acted gratuitously, took a second mtge. upon the property, extending the time of payment for three years:—Held: (1) this was clearly such breach of his agreement, & such dealing with pltf.'s money, as to make him liable; (2) pltf. should recover interest at 9 per cent. for two years only, & at 6 per cent. thereafter.—HOLLIES v. THOMPSON (1876), 38 U. C. R. 292.—CAN.

HOWARD & GIBBS* (1825), 4 B. & C. 345; 6 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 438; 3 L. J. O. S. K. B. 246; 107 E. R. 1088.

1274. — —.]—A., leaving his house for a considerable time, requested B., the landlord, to let it, saying the key was in the custody of C. A person wished to look at the house, but, C. having absconded, the key could not be obtained. B. entered by raising the sash of the first floor window, & after showing the house to several persons, left it in the same state as before. On A.'s return it was discovered the house had been robbed. In an action brought by A. to recover the value of the goods from B.:—Held: B. was not justified in opening the window, & in that way going into the house.—*ANCASTER v. SUB-SECT. 3.—PRINCIPAL'S RIGHTS IN REGARD TO ACCOUNTS.

A. The Right to an Account.

(a) Agent's Duty to keep and produce Accounts.

1275. In general.]—It is one of the first duties of an agent to keep a clear account, & to communicate the contents of it (LORD ELDON, C.).—CHEDWORTH v. EDWARDS, No. 1364, post.

Annotations:—Consd. Harington v. Hoggart (1830), 1 B. & Ad. 517; Re Hallett's Estate, Knatchbull v. Hallett (1880), 13 Ch. D. 696, C. A. Reid. Lupton v. White (1808), 15 Ves. 432.

For full anns. see S. C. No. 1364, post.

1276. Failure to keep accounts.—Loss of costs.]—A confidential agent, in that character bound to keep regular accounts, having neglected to do so, & to preserve vouchers against himself, though he had preserved those in his own favour, was on the ground of gross neglect of duty not allowed a charge in respect of bills of costs for business done as a solr.—WHITE v. LINCOLN (LADY), NEWCASTLE (DUKE) v. KINDERLEY (1803), 8 Ves. 363; 32 E. R. 395.

1277. — No loss of costs.]—L. acted assolr. for N. in various matters, & particularly in raising money for him on mortgages & bills of exchange. He also acted as receiver of N.'s rents. The course as to the transactions for raising money appeared to have been that on each occasion L. received the money, retained out of it a sum agreed upon for his costs of that transaction, & handed over the balance. The rents which he received were all duly accounted for, & accounts settled, not including any items for costs. After the death of the solr. a large bill of costs was sent in, which was referred for taxation. The taxing master required a cash account, but no sufficient materials existed for making it out, & the taxing master certified that nothing was due to the solr., as he had received large sums of money, of his disposal of which no account was furnished:—Held: the bill of costs as taxed must be paid, for that the principle of White v. Lincoln (Lady), supra, did not apply where the solr. was not the general agent of the client, so as to be able to receive the client's moneys at all times, without his knowledge, but only received money for him in respect of separate transactions of which the client was aware at the time & knew what was to be received.

The case of a general agent in regard to the keeping of accounts is to be distinguished from that of a solr., as the principal of a general agent has no means of knowing, except through the agent's accounts, what the agent has received on his behalf, & if such agent omits to keep proper accounts, the ct. will charge him with all moneys he might in the discharge of his duty have received for his principal.—Re LEE, Ex p. NEVILLE (1868), 4 Ch. App. 43; 19 L. T. 435; 17 W. R. 108, C. A.

1275 i. In general.]—An assignment of property having been made to deft. as agent for pltf., for which he refused to account, pltf. filed a bill for an account. THOMAS* (1853), 4 Gr. 473.—CAN.

g. Duty to explain accounts.]—Though there be no written contract to that effect an agent must render proper accounts & attend to explain them, producing vouchers. To do this he must have reasonable access to papers in the principal's possession.—ANNODA PERRAD ROY v. DWARKANATH GANGOPADHYA (1881), 1 L. R. 6 Calc. 754; 8 C. L. R. 321.—IND.

r. —.]—The obligation of an agent towards his principal does not terminate merely by submission of account papers. He is bound to explain those papers, & if on accounts taken it is found that he has in his hands money which belongs to his principal he is bound to pay that sum.—MADHUSIDDAN SEN v. RAKHAL CHANDRA DAS BASAK (1915), 19 C. W. N. 1070.—IND.

s. Persons bound to account.]—Assignee of "agents on commission."]—L. & S. were "agents on commission" of fifteen cents a barrel of flour on consignment, & were to render monthly statements giving particulars of sales to pltf., who were then to draw on them at fifteen days for the flour sold at current prices, less commission:—Held: the relation of L. & S. to pltf. was that of agent & principal, & deft. as assignee of L. & S. was under a duty to account.—WESTERN CANADA FLOUR MILLS v. MIDDLEBORO (1911), 19 O. W. R. 722; 2 O. W. N. 1379.—CAN.

t. — Corporation acting as agent.]—A corp., acting within its corporate powers, which accepts from a bank money orders to be put in circulation, by sale or otherwise, is bound to account for the proceeds & is liable for any balance remaining after deduction of charges. This liability arises from the bare fact of the acceptance of, & the dealing with, the money orders, & is not affected by any irregularity in, or invalidity of, the contract or agreement under which they took place.—CAMBRIDGE CORPN. v. SOVEREIGN BANK (1909), Q. R. 18 K. B. 423.—CAN.

u. No duty to produce accounts to bankrupt principal.—Account rendered to Official Assignee.]—On the principal's bkpy. agents who had managed her property accounted to the Official Assignee:—Held: principal not entitled to an account from the agents.—*BRIGGS v. 1278. Delay in production of accounts—Loss of costs.]—Where a solr., who received rents of certain property on behalf of the client, was called upon for a general account, the fact that he had not kept the accounts in such a state that they could be readily produced & the delay had been the immediate cause of bringing an action for an account, although the sum justly due was less than that claimed, & the decision of the ct. was in favour of the solr.:—Held: sufficient reason for depriving the agent of the costs of the action.—MACDOWAL v. BUCHAN (1817), 5 Dow, 127; 3 E. R. 1275.

1279. Offer to pay gross sum no excuse for non-production of accounts.]—If an agent does not render accounts within reasonable time, he must bear the costs of a suit instituted to have the accounts taken; it will not be any excuse for him that he offered to pay on account a gross sum, which would have covered all that was due from him.—COLLYER v. DUDLEY (1823), Turn. & R. 421; 2 L. J. O. S. Ch. 15; 37 E. R. 1163.

For full anns. see PRACTICE & PROCEDURE.

1280. Settlement does not discharge duty to account.]—A. had long employed B. as his steward, professional adviser, & general confidential agent. Disputes having arisen between them, an agreement was entered into between B. & a clergyman acting on behalf of A., by which a gross sum was to be paid to B. in lieu of all his claims, but no accounts or vouchers were rendered or produced by B., nor was any bill of costs delivered:—Held: the agreement did not protect B. from rendering an account to his principal.—JENKINS v. GOULD (1827), 3 Russ. 385; 38 E. R. 620.

1281. Reasonable account insufficient.]—In an action of account, it is not sufficient for deft. to plead that he rendered to pltf. a reasonable account; that which amounts to a plea of plene computavit must be rendering an account to pltf.'s satisfaction or an account which shows an agreed balance between pltf. & deft. Where deft. rendered an account in which he charged himself as factor for the whole, & pltf. required him to furnish an account in which he should charge himself as factor for one moiety only, & as owner of the other, & thus make himself liable to a moiety of the losses arising from sale of the whole:—Held: (1) the pleading of such account did not amount to a plea of plene computavit; (2) pltf. was entitled to his judgment quod computet.—BAXTER v. HOZIER (1839), 5 Bing. N. C. 288; 7 Scott, 233; 8 L. J. C. P. 169; 132 E. R. 1115.

1282. Factor.]—Amongst the most important duties of a factor are those which require him to give to his principal free & unbiassed use of his own discretion & judgment, to keep & render just & true accounts, & to keep the property of his principal unmixed with his own or the property of any other.—CLARKE v. TIFFING, No. 1370, post.

1283. Mutuality—Absence of—No duty to account.]—On a bill for an account it did not appear that the account between pltf. & deft. was mutual, as consisting of receipts & payments by each party on account of the other, & that the payments forming one side of the account were other than matters of set-off as against the receipts on the other side:—Held: notwithstanding a statement in the bill that deft. had, in a particular sale or transaction, acted as pltf.'s agent in receiving moneys on his account, a demurrer to the act must be allowed.—PHILLIPS

Wherever an agency partakes of a fiduciary character this ct. has jurisdiction & will direct an account, although the receipts & payments are all on one side & there are no mutual payments between the parties; that rule has not been shaken by the decision in Phillips v. Phillips, though there are passages in the judgment in that case which may seem at first to be inconsistent with the principle to which I have adverted (STUART, V.-C.); Edwards-Wood v. Baldwin (1863), 4 Giff. 613; Makepeace v. Rogers (1865), 4 De G. J. & Sm. 649. Phillips v. Phillips went upon the footing of the account there in question being a current account between the parties, & the bill made no case of general agency, alleging only an isolated agency transaction (TURNER, L.J.). Reid, Scott v. Liverpool Corp'n. (1858), 3 De G. & J. 334; Smith v. Leylaux (1863), 1 Hem. & M. 123; Dabbs v. Nugent (1865), 14 W. R. 94; St. Aubyns v. Smart (1867), L. R. 5 Eq. 183.

1285. Agent also acting as solicitor must account.]—It is no objection to a claim or bill filed for an account against a confidential agent that he has been also employed as solr. in respect of the same matter.—ODDY v. SECKER (1854), 2 Sm. & G. 193; 65 E. R. 361.

1286. Accounts destroyed by agent.]—When an accounting party destroys accounts before matters have been finally adjusted, & still more pending litigation, the ct. will presume everything most unfavourable to him, consistent with the established facts. The ct. deals severely with any irregularities on the part of an agent, & requires him to act strictly, in all matters relating to such agency for the benefit of his principal. It is imperative upon an agent to preserve correct accounts of all his dealings & transactions; & loss, & still more, destruction, of such evidence by the agent falls most heavily upon himself.—GRAY v. HAIG, HAIG v. GRAY, No. 1371, post.

1287. Agent liable to penalties for acting without licence—Duty to account not excused.]—A person who holds himself out as a broker of the city of London, & is employed by a person who believes him to be such, cannot, when sued by his principal for an account of his transactions as such broker on the principal's behalf, protect himself from discovery on the ground that it may render him liable to penalties for having acted as a broker without having been admitted as such. Qu.: whether it would make any difference that the principal at the time of employing the broker knew he was not duly admitted.—ROBINSON v. KITCHEN (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 88; 25 L. J. Ch. 441; 26 L. T. O. S. 304; 2 Jur. N. S. 294; 4 W. R. 344; 44 E. R. 322, C. A.

1288. Course of dealing inconsistent with keeping accounts—No duty to account.]—It is the ordinary duty of a confidential steward or agent, from the nature of his employment, when he has the capacity for so doing, to preserve & render an account of his dealings & transactions on behalf of his principal. In a case where no duty to keep accounts was undertaken, & the education & capacity of deft., as well as the course of dealing between him & his employer, were inconsistent with his keeping regular accounts, a bill by the personal representative of the employer for an account was dismissed with costs.—TINDALL v. POWELL (1858), 32 L. T. O. S. 8; 4 Jur. N. S. 944; 6 W. R. 850.

For full anns., see EQUITY.

1289. Agent cannot take advantage of his omission to keep accounts.—Stat. Limitations does not apply to prevent a party at any time calling upon his agent to account for moneys belonging to his principal placed in his hands.

Where there was a continuous account between B. & bkpt., unbalanced from 1827 down to 1839, the bkpcy. occurring in 1840, but there appeared in bkpt.'s books within 6 years of the bkpcy. entries of a payment made, & a sum of money received to & on account of B.:—Held: (1) sufficient to take the case out of Stat. Limitations; (2) bkpt. could not take advantage of his own omission in neglecting to keep proper accounts between himself & B.—Re WHITEHEAD, Ex p. BURNAND (1860), 2 L. T. 770.

1290. Agent bound to account to successors in office of principal.—Overseers & churchwardens of a parish filed a bill against deft., who had been appointed collector of rates by pltf.'s predecessors in office but who had ceased to be such collector prior to the succession to office of pltf's., praying an account of the rates collected by deft. & the delivery up of certain rate-books in his possession. Def't.'s defence to the suit was (1) he had never been employed as agent of pltf's. & was not liable to account to them; & (2) he had already accounted to his employers, pltf's. predecessors in office:—Held: (1) def't. was liable to account to pltf's. for rates received by him; (2) although pltf's. could not open any account settled between def't. & their predecessors in office, they were at liberty to surcharge & falsify same; (3) in taking the accounts def't. was to have all just allowances; (4) he must pay costs of the suit up to & including the hearing.—SELLAR v. GRIFFIN (1863), 32 Beav. 542; 33 L. J. Ch. 6; 8 L. T. 230; 27 J. P. 340; 9 Jur. N. S. 612; 11 W. R. 583; 55 E. R. 213.

1291. Duty of public officer to account.—Previously to 1833, the clerk of patents received fees paid by patentees for his own use, but by an Act passed in that year he received a fixed salary, & was required to hand over all fees to the Exchequer:—Held: (1) liable to account to the Crown in equity in respect of such fees, & in respect of all interest & profits made by use of them; (2) an information for this purpose was properly filed in the Ct. of Ch.—A.-G. v. EDMUNDS (1868), L. R. 6 Eq. 381; 37 L. J. Ch. 706; 18 L. T. 505.

1292. No duty to produce accounts to improper person nominated by principal.—A firm of merchants residing abroad brought an action against their agent in this country, claiming production of documents relating to their business to a person appointed by them for that purpose. The agent put in a defence stating that the person appointed by pltf's. was a clerk in a rival & unfriendly house of business, for which reason he objected to produce the documents to him, but he was willing to produce them to any proper person. Pltf's. moved, under R. S. C., O. 25, r. 4, to strike out the defence:—Held: (1) although a principal had a general right to the production of documents in the hands of his agent to any person appointed by him, he could not insist on their being produced to an improper person; (2) the defence disclosed a reasonable answer to the claim.—DADSWELL v. JACOBS (1887),

(b) Sufficiency of Agent's Accounts.

1294. Where agent has acted dishonestly.—Pltf. was appointed agent-general of debts. at C. in Africa: out-factories were to send their accounts to debts., & pltf. was also to take the accounts of the out-factories & enter them in books kept for debts. at C. E. was gold-taker & warehousekeeper. At expiration of his service pltf. came home, having handed over the books & accounts to his successor. In taking an account between pltf's. & debts.:—Held: (1) pltf. to be discharged of all goods delivered into the warehouse at C. that went to the out-factories & were delivered there, or were not delivered through default of the master of the ship, or any other accident; (2) pltf. should be charged with all goods belonging to the co. which he, or any by his order, took out of the warehouse & disposed of; & with all goods that went to other factories, which were afterwards embezzled by him or his order, or for his use; (3) pltf. should be charged with such of the co.'s goods as came to C. & were not delivered into the warehouse, or consigned to any other factory, but came to pltf.'s hands or use; (4) if any goods came to any out-factories, & product had been answered to pltf., & he had not answered it to the co., pltf. was to be charged therewith; (5) in this & all other matters of the account wherein pltf. was charged, he should not be allowed anything in discharge but what he proved; (6) in all cases not before directed where E. might be charged, pltf. to be discharged; (7) as to the accounts which pltf. had delivered to his successor, pltf.'s affidavit that he had so delivered should be sufficient.—MELLISH v. ROYAL AFRICAN CO. (1879), 2 Cas. in Ch. 11; 22 E. R. 822.

1295. Separate accounts for various transactions.

—An attorney procured money on mtge. for his client from other clients, & gave up to the client-mtgor. a bond, obtained from that client in respect of separate transactions between themselves, as part consideration of the mtge.:—Held: (1) there must be a separate account as to the mtge. transaction in order to clear the estates, the attorney being in possession as agent for the mtgees.; (2) the account must be confined to money actually advanced by the clients, the mtgees.; (3) the mtge. security must be cut down, as to the other alleged part of the consideration, which was referred to a general account between the attorney & the client-mtgor.—*MORGAN v. Only transactions concerning principal to be shown.—In a suit by a principal against his agent, the latter was ordered on motion to produce books of account in his possession, relating to pltf.'s affairs, sealing up such parts as did not concern pltf., & pledging himself by affidavit to seal up

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 3.— A. (b).

1296 i. Only transactions concerning principal to be shown.—An agent for sale of a patent article who is entitled to use it in his own trade is not bound to account for the net profits of each job in which he so uses it, but only for the market value of the article itself as fixed by the patentee.—GILKISON v. RAMAGE & SON (1851), 1 Stuart, 88.—SCOT.

W. Vouchers for payments necessary.—When an agent's account is 1297. —[Deft. was agent to pltf's. for sale of patent ruffles according to the terms of agreement. Pltf's., believing deft. had violated these terms, filed a bill against him for an account, & took out a summons for the production of documents. Deft., by his affidavit, admitted possession & relevancy of the documents, & agreed to produce certain documents relating exclusively to transactions with pltf's., but declined to produce certain other documents on the ground that they contained the whole of his business transactions, except those contained in the documents he had agreed to produce. Pltf's. took out a further summons to produce the other documents:—Held: (1) deft. must be allowed to seal up names & addresses of his customers; (2) he was only bound to produce entries showing quantities & prices of goods sold.—HEUGH v. GARRETT (1875), 44 L. J. Ch. 305; 32 L. T. 45, C. A.

1299. Details which rent collector must give—All necessary details must be given.]—An agent employed by a testator to collect rents, & continued in that employment by his trustees after his death, furnished accounts showing only sums received & names of the tenants who paid them:—Held: the trustees entitled to require such an account, as would identify the particular properties from which rents arose.—FINCH v. BURDEN (1865), 12 L. T. 302.

(c) Admissibility of Charge and Credit Items in Accounts.

1300. Gratuities.]—Qu.: whether on taking accounts against a steward he will be allowed credit for gratuities on his statement in examination, without proof of payment, or giving particulars.

The order as signed & inrolled directed allowing of credit to deft. for gratuities, but this was omitted in the entering book in the registrar's office; hence the master made no allowance, but on exceptions to his report the allowance was made.—TREDGROFT v. WHITE (1871), 3 Rep. Ch. 72; 21 E. R. 732.

1301. Entertainment expenses.]—On an account being taken between pltf's. & one of their factors, general expenses incurred by the factor in entertainments were improperly included in the price of the goods, but were ordered to be allowed in the factor's accounts if bona fide expended & necessary for the affairs of pltf's., sums under £40 to be allowed on proof of payment by the factor's own oath.—EAST INDIA CO. v. BLAKE, No. 1663, post.

1302. Factor—Sales on credit.]—In an action of account against a factor, he shall not be allowed a sale upon credit, although the goods were bona peritura; for, without a special commission, a factor cannot sell goods of his principal, except for ready money.—ANON. (1876), 2 Mod. Rep. 100 86 E. R. 964.

1303. Reasonable charges.]—Deft., a shipbroker, was pltf.'s agent in suing for & recovering a sum of money for damages done to pltf.'s ship, & recovered & received £2,000 for pltf.'s use, & paid him all but £40, which he retained for his labour & services, & which was found by the jury to be a reasonable allowance which he ought to retain:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover the £40.

This is an action for money had & received to pltf.'s use. Pltf. can recover no more than he is in conscience & equity entitled to, which can be no more than what remains after deducting all just allowances which deft. has a right to retain out of the sum demanded. This is not in the nature of a cross-demand or mutual debt; it is a charge, which makes the sum of money received for pltf.'s use so much less (LORD MANSFIELD).—DALE v. SOLLET (1767), 4 Burr. 2133; 98 E. R. 112.

1304. Commission to sub-agent.]—Where a person employed to make purchases abroad on behalf of the Govt., for which he was to be paid bona fide commission by way of percentage on the amount, engaged mercantile men resident abroad to the advantage of the service, for which he allowed them to charge a percentage according to the usage of trade, which he treated as part of the prime cost in charging his own commission on his accounts:—Held: such percentage was not improperly charged to the Govt. or payable by him out of his own commission.—A.-G. v. LINDEGREN (1819), 6 Price, 287; 146 E. R. 811.

1305. Charges which will not be allowed.]—M., a partner with D. & B., acted as agent for P. & Co. till 1809; at which time a balance was due to M., & bills accepted by him were outstanding, & afterwards paid by the firm in which he was a partner. D., B., & M. were appointed under special contract, & acted as agents for P. & Co., from the time when M. ceased to be their agent, in 1809, until 1814. In taking the account between P. & Co. & D., B., & M.:—Held: (1) the accounts between P. & Co. & M. were properly excluded; (2) as these accounts were not liquidated nor capable of immediate liquidation, a debt from P. & Co. to M. could not be allowed in compensation (set-off) against a debt or balance owing from D. B. & Co. to M., if such debts could at all, by the law of Scotland, be set off against each other; (3) charges by an agent for printing documents, the effect of which is to save his personal labour in writing, ought not to be allowed in account with his principal; (4) a judgment ought not to be varied, nor a cause remitted, on account of improper charge of interest upon a balance, if of trifling amount, especially if there be omission to charge interest upon balances on the other side of the account.—DOWNIE v. PITCAIRN (1829), 4 Bli. N. S. 550; 5 E. R. 196.

1306. Bill of costs.]—In a suit by a principal against his steward & agent, the decree, in conformity to the prayer of the bill, directed an account to be taken of rents, profits & timber-money received by deft. on pltf.'s account;

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 3.—A. (a).

1303 I. Reasonable charges.]—In a count & reckoning between a trust & its factor, after twenty years of litigation, the factor was found indebted to the trust:—Held: the factor was entitled, as at the commencement of that period, to place to his credit the sum of £255 for personal trouble & remuneration, so as to stop the running of interest on the sums he was due to the trust.

Where great expense had been incurred in obtaining an accountant's report on a certain branch of the accounts, on which the factor was found wrong, although half the expense was thrown on the factor, as occasioned by the confused manner in which the accounts had been kept:—Held: the manager was entitled to professional assistance in making up his accounts, & the other half formed a proper charge against the trust.—FEDDIE v. BEVERIDGE (1860), 22 D. 707.—SCOT.

x. Items admissible on credit side of account sales.]—MAYEN v. ALSTON (1892), 1 L. R. 16 Mad. 238.—END.

& also directed the master, in taking accounts, to make all just allowances. Deft., a solr., had acted as such for pltf. during his stewardship; & bills of costs were due to him from pltf. 1309. Company acting as agents—Charges for directors' services.—A co. agreed with pltf. to manage, develop, & realise pltf.'s property, on terms under which the co. was to become entitled to one-third of the ultimate profit. In course of such management the co. paid a special salary to its (1) secretary for keeping books of account of the property. The co. also (as the articles of assocn.

allowed) (1) employed a firm of solrs., of which one of the directors was a member, to act professionally in connection with the property, & paid their bills of costs, including profit items; (2) employed another director, who was an estate agent, to manage at a salary the working of some sand & gravel pits; (3) employed another director, who was an auctioneer, to conduct the sales of the property at the usual commission. In an action for account brought by pltf. impeaching these disbursements:—Held: (1) on the true construction of the agreement the co. was bound to keep accounts at its own expense as part of the consideration moving from the co.; (2) the secretary's salary must be disallowed; (3) if the employment & remuneration were in other respects proper, payments made by the co. to the three directors ought not to be disallowed on the mere ground that the co. employed its own directors, who stood in no fiduciary relation to pltf. & were entitled to be paid remuneration for these services as between themselves & the co.—*BATH v. Agent bound by his own accounts.—A., being agent for the grantor & grantee of an annuity, delivered an account to the grantee, by which it appeared that he, the agent, had received certain payments on account of the annuity; these payments, in fact, had not been received:—Held: the agent was bound by the account he had delivered, unless he could show he had given credit for those payments by mistake.—*SHAW v. 1310 I. Agent bound by his own accounts — Representatives & sureties of deceased agent not bound.—Pltf., sued for the recovery of money due on a promissory note executed by their deceased agent S. in their favour after settlement of accounts for the sum due to them. Defts., brothers of S., were sued both in their character as representatives in interests of S. & as sureties for him under a surety bond executed by them in favour of pltf. Defts. disputed the amount due & claimed as set-off the amount payable by pltf. to their brother on account of salary:—

1311. —.]—The paymasters of a military corps had given credit in account to an officer in that corps from Jan. 1, 1817, to Nov. 5, 1820, for increased pay, erroneously supposed to be granted by a general order of Aug. 27, 1806, to an officer of his situation, & a statement of that account was delivered to the officer in 1821. In Dec., 1816, the paymasters were informed by the Board of Ordnance that the increased pay granted by the order of 1806 would not be allowed to persons in the situation of the officer in question. The paymasters did not communicate this information to the officer until 1821, & subsequently to that time they continued to receive his pay. In an action brought by his personal representative to recover such pay:—Held: it was not competent to the paymasters to retain any of such sums of money on account of the sums which they had credited him for by way of increased pay, & which they had allowed him to consider his own for so long a period.—*SKYRING v. He charged commission on all instalments, & paid the balance of the accounts as if they had been received, & in the later accounts never brought forward those sums, nor intimated that he expected them to be repaid. Afterwards deft. sold the same shares for pltf. & sent him an account crediting him with a sum made up of both principals, & debited or credited them at the prices charged as above to himself on the purchase & sale by deft.:—Held: deft. was not precluded from charging pltf. with the deposit on the first transaction, but, upon pltf. bringing assumpsit for a balance, might set off such deposit.

Deft. bought also for pltf. shares in the T. & D. Ry. which then were only unissued scrip, so that no deposit was payable. By the custom of the market (Liverpool), the price did or did not include the deposit according as the scrip had issued or not; & the published share lists showed how that was. Deft., before the scrip issued, sent pltf. bought & sold notes, stating the price without the deposit; but he daily sent pltf. the share lists. 1317. —.]—An agent, who managed the money matters & investments of his principal, rendered accounts charging interest on mtges. as received, & representing there were no arrears. He also paid over balances appearing due on such accounts:—Held: (1) the agent could not, on the death of the principal, charge his estate with interest, on the plea that it had not been actually received from the mtgors., but had been advanced by the agent to the principal for his accommodation; (2) he was allowed to use the name of the representatives of the principal to recover what might be due from mtgors. on giving an indemnity.—OWENS v. KIRBY (1861), 30 Beav. 31; 54 E. R. 799.

1318. —.]—Pltf., a surveyor of turnpike road^d rendered annual accounts to the trustees of money received, & also of moneys expended by him in repairs of roads for 1856, 1857, & 1858, each of which accounts, after giving credit for his yearly salary, showed a balance due to himself. These accounts were received, passed & settled by the trustees in the belief that they were correct, but in point of fact pltf. had expended more money in such repairs in each year than he had charged in such accounts. On rendering his account for 1859 & being challenged by the trustees as to its correctness, he acknowledged it was incorrect, & that he had laid out more money than he had charged therein, & he thereupon claimed payment from the trustees of the sums omitted in such last-mentioned account, as well as of those omitted in the accounts for the previous years, but the trustees refused to pay him either, & did not pass the account for 1859. There was no actual fraud in fact contemplated by pltf., who knowingly omitted the items, partly through negligence, partly to avoid complaints from the trustees & in the expectation of their being in better funds in future years. On an action by pltf. against the trustees, through their clerk, to recover the omitted items:—Held: (1) pltf. was not entitled to recover in respect of sums kept out of the accounts before 1859, on the broad principle that a man shall not be allowed to "blow hot & cold," to affirm at one time & deny at another, making a claim on those whom he has deluded to their disadvantage, & founding that claim on the very matters of delusion; (2) that principle did not apply to the account for 1859; (3) pltf. ought to recover for the sums really & properly expended by him in that year.—CAVE v. MILLS (1862), 7 H. & N. 913; 31 L. J. Ex. 265; 6 L. T. 650; 8 Jur. N. S. 363; 10 W. R. 471.

on the agent resigning an account was rendered, which the principal disputed, alleging disbursements included in it had been incurred in periods of former accounts:—Held: the action was relevant as it was not excluded by the doctrine of filed accounts, though a heavy onus was on pursuer of showing disbursements were not covered by previous accounts.—STRUTHERS v.

1319. Affidavits not generally admitted to discharge agent.]—Affidavits of an accounting party are not receivable to discharge him as to items of account above the sum of 40s., according to the ordinary rule in ordinary circumstances, but they may in special circumstances. These ought to be stated by the master, as a ground for reception of affidavits. The same rule applies in case of books of account. They will not be received to discharge a party who kept them, though they will for the purpose of charging him, even though they were open to inspection of parties to whom the account is to be rendered, & have been all along in their keeping. In special circumstances they may be received to discharge the accounting party, but the master must state what the special circumstances are.—GAS LIGHT & COKE CO. v. SYMONDS (1848), 12 L. T. O. C. pleaded that the accounts were settled, & asked for specific statements of falsification. The ct., having held the accounts were settled & C. was entitled to costs of hearing, gave leave to M. to amend his pleadings within 14 days by stating specific items which were false:—Held: C. had no right to surcharge or falsify & could not be allowed to insert any items in the accounts in his own favour which were not included in them.—*MOZELEY (MOZLEY) v. 1338. Common law jurisdiction—Present practice.]—An order that an account be taken may be made, & the account taken, in Q. B. Div.—YORK v. STOWERS (1883), Bitt. Rep. in Ch. 2.

1339. Parties—Who should be joined as.]—A. shipped goods from Cadiz for B., in Flanders, & received payment from B.; Flanders being occupied by the French, the ship entered an English port, & C., being agent for the shipowners, & acting & holding himself out also as agent for persons interested in the cargo, possessed himself of the cargo, sold it, & retained proceeds. Upon a bill filed by the representatives of B. against C. for an account:—Held: (1) A. ought not to be made a party to such a bill; (2) as C. was agent of the shipowners, it was not necessary to make them, or the captain, parties to such bill, in respect of freight due on B.'s share of the cargo.—MOONS v. DE BERNALES (1822), 1 L. J. O. S. Ch. 53.

1340. —.—.— All necessary parties to be joined.]—On a bill filed by the assignee of R. & Co. against D. & Co. for an account of moneys received by D. & Co. on account of R. & Co. as their correspondents & agents:—Held: (1) it was not enough to state that persons, who in respect of interest were necessary parties, were out of jurisdiction; (2) the bill must go on to pray process against them, for one reason, that they might have an opportunity of appearing to the suit & taking, as parties, what course in it they deemed most for their advantage.—MUNOZ v. DE TASTET (1826), 1 Beav. 112; 4 L. J. Ch. 97; 48 E. R. 881.

1341. Costs.]—In a suit praying accounts against an agent the ct. will not at the hearing, except in an extreme case, direct payment of costs up to the hearing, but will reserve the question of costs till further directions.—JELICOE v. PRICE (1841), 1 Y. & C. Ch. Cas. 74; 62 R. R. 796.

1341 i. Costs.]—A principal filed a bill for an account against his agent, who alleged by his answer that the principal was indebted to him. A balance being found against the agent of $282, the ct. ordered him to pay the costs of the suit.—SMITH v. HENDERSON (1870), 17 Gr. 6.—CAN.

1341 ii. —.—.— Requests for account disregarded.]—Where an agent had disregarded requests for an account & had filed an improper account in a suit against him for an account:—Held: he must pay the costs of the suit.—SMITH v. COOPER (1906), 3 N. B. Eq. 329; E. L. R. 544.—CAN.

1341 iii. —.—.— Accounts kept in confused manner.]—Where an agent has kept his accounts in a confused manner, his exor. must pay the costs of the suit.—NORRBY v. CALBECK (1818), 2 Moll. 461.—IR.

b. Decree.]—The decree in a suit against a land agent will not direct an account of what he might, without wilful default, have received, unless a special case be made by the petition & proved.—BROOKE v. ELLIOTT (1837),

c. —.—.— No power to set aside agreement.]—In a suit between principal & agent, upon an agreement by which the agent was to receive a commission of 20 per cent. on all sales of real estate, the decree directed the master to take certain accounts, & ordered the agent to pay into ct. any balance found due by him, "less deft.'s commission of 20 per cent."—Held: the master had no jurisdiction to set aside the agreement.—VIVIAN v. SCOBLE (1883), 1 M. R. 125.—CAN.

d. Pleading.]—Bill against agent & receiver of pltf., praying account of sums received in each of several years, & of the names of the payers:—Held: an answer setting forth in the schedule the names, sums, & denominations of land, & repaying them for each year, was prolix & impertinent.—USHER v. MOORE (1833), 1 L. R. N. S. 219.—IR.

e. —.—.— Allegation of wilful default.]—To justify the ct. in decreeing an account for wilful default against a land agent, some instance of wilful default must be specified in the petition, & proved at the hearing. That rule is not satisfied by a reference in the petition to accounts furnished by the agent, which show remission of rents by him, though there is evidence establishing that the remission was wrongful.—PENNEFATHER v. BOLTON (1863), 14 I. C. R. 335; 8 Ir. Jur. 221, C. A.—IR.

f. —.—.—]—In an action by a principal against an agent, claiming an account of all moneys received by deft. on account of pltf., or which might have been received by deft. but for his wilful default, the question of wilful default ought not in general to be reserved, but should be disposed of at the hearing; & if no wilful default is then proved the ct. will dismiss the action, so far as it is an action for wilful default, & grant the usual account between principal & agent.—BOYLAN v. CUSACK (1890), 25 L. R. Ir. 269.—IR.

g. —.—.— Sum admitted to be due.]—In a suit by a principal against his agent for an account, a sum admitted by answer to be due will be ordered to be paid into ct.—BLAKE v. COMINS (1849), 1 I. R. Jur. 330.—IR.

1342. Interlocutory order.—When made.]—Pltfs., trustees of a will, filed a bill against their agent for the purpose of carrying out the trusts of the will, praying for an account of trust moneys received by him, & for delivery up to them of securities, etc., belonging to the trust property. An order for an account, & for delivery to pltfs. of securities, etc., was made before hearing on motion of pltfs., they appearing to be entitled to such account & delivery of securities upon admissions of fact in the answer.—RUMSEY v. READE (1876), 1 Ch. D. 643; 45 L. J. Ch. 489; 33 L. T. 803; 24 W. R. 245; 3 Char. Pr. Cas. 351.

B. Principal's Right to have settled Accounts opened.

(a) When Accounts are deemed to be settled.

1343. Accounts must be approved by principal himself.]—Deft. was factor of pltfs. at J. in India. His accounts were examined & allowed by the factory at J., & again by the chief factory at B., but on being sent to pltfs. were excepted to in writing by pltfs., & sent back to the chief factory at B. to be re-examined. The chief factory at B., having again considered them, rejected the exceptions & allowed the accounts. To a claim for an account deft. objected to answer on the ground that the accounts had been settled:—Held: (1) nothing could discharge deft. but a release or discharge from pltfs., since otherwise their agents by mutual connivance might ruin them; (2) deft. must answer.—EAST INDIA CO. v. MAINSTON (1676), 2 Cas. in Ch. 218; 22 E. R. 918.

1345. —.]—Insurance brokers holding a policy for the purpose of adjusting a loss, suffered an underwriter's name to be struck out upon his signing the adjustment: he gave them credit in his books for the loss, & became bkpt., but they never took credit for the amount in their books. On the contrary, they gave the assured notice of bkpcy., & there was afterwards a settlement of accounts between the brokers & the assured comprehending the policy in question, in which no demand was made upon them in respect of bkpt.'s subscription:—Held: they were not liable to the assured for the sum due from bkpt. on the policy.—OVINGTON v. BELL (1812), 3 Camp. 237.

The mere passing of the accounts of a public officer by auditors of the department under which he has been employed does not preclude the ct. (in a proper case) from decreeing an account in respect of allowances contrary to reason & equity & not brought to the notice of the Board when his accounts were passed. Where the public functionary had received gratuities & presents from foreign agents on the amount of their commission equal to 1 per cent. he was ordered to refund the whole, notwithstanding that practice was also proved to be usage of the trade; the custom being contrary to reason & equity, & subservient to fraud, & the fact not having been brought before the Board when the accounts were passed.—A.-G. v. LINDEGREN, No. 1304, ante.

1347. —.]—MOZELEY v. COWIE, No. 1320, ante.

1348. —.]—Although accounts rendered & not objected to are not of necessity to be considered as settled, yet they will be so treated where they have been entered in the books of persons to whom they were rendered, & balances shown upon them have been paid.—HUNTER v. BELCHER (1864), 2 De G. J. & Sm. 194; 10 L. T. 548; 10 Jur. N. S. 663; 12 W. R. 782; 46 E. R. 349, C. A.

1349. —.]—Pltf. was the commercial agent of the East India Co. at Amboyna. It was his duty to send his account to J., the co.'s agent at Banda, to examine & transmit to the Governor of Madras. On pltf.'s accounts there appeared a balance of 1,325 dollars against him, but on reference to accounts kept by J. of the same transactions, instead of a deficiency, 4,771 dollars appeared due to pltf. The co. then allowed the 1,325 dollars only:—Held: this was not a sufficient admission & recognition of the correctness of J.'s accounts, so as to entitle pltf. without further evidence to the 4,771 dollars.—FARQUHAR v. EAST INDIA CO. (1845), 8 Beav. 260; 50 E. R. 102.

1350. Accounts deemed settled though item reserved.]—A Calcutta firm & its English agent agreed to strike a balance in respect of disputed accounts, reserving one considerable item for future investigation:—Held: the transaction amounted to an adjustment & the accounts could not be reopened in the absence of fraud.—McKELLAR v. WALLACE (1853), 8 Moo. P. C. C. 378; 5 Moo. Ind. App. 372; 1 Eq. Rep. 309; (1854), 22 L. T. O. S. 309; 14 E. R. 144, P. C.

Annotation:—Distd. Perry v. Atwood (1856), 6 E. & B. 691.

(b) Opening of settled Accounts.

1351. Circumstances in which accounts opened—Gift accepted by agent from principal.]—Securities taken by an attorney from his client during the time of their connection as such for a present, the balances of accounts settled for money lent & laid out, costs, & business done, & the price of a horse sold, void as to the present; & pltf. submitting to pay what should be actually due, the accounts were opened as to the whole; the horse being sold soon after he was purchased from the attorney for a price much less than was then stipulated, an inquiry into his value was directed.—NEWMAN v. PAYNE (1793), 2 Ves. 199; 4 Bro. C. C. 350; 30 E. R. 593.

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 3.—B. (a).

1344 i. What amounts to approval of accounts.]—Accounts were delivered in 1862 & 1865 by an agent to his principal, & the confidential relationship existed for two years after the latter account had been rendered:—Held: these accounts were not stated accounts.—SMITH v. REDFORD (1872), 19 Gr. 274.—CAN.

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 3.—B. (b).

1352 i. Circumstances in which account opened—Errors & overcharges.]—Legal proceedings between an agent & client were terminated by an agreement that a certain balance was due to the agent. In an action of count & reckoning against the agent:—Held: accounts could not be re-opened so as to diminish that balance except so far as errors of calculation or clerical blunders could be shown, although the accounts were alleged to contain overcharges & mistakes.—COLVIL v. JAMISON (1839), 1 D. 526.—SCOT a great number of years, & closed for a long period, (1) where errors are shown in them to a considerable extent, both in amount & number of items; (2) where, assuming fiduciary relations to exist between parties, errors to a less considerable extent are shown; (3) where fiduciary relations existing, one or more fraudulent insertions or omissions in the account are shown. A fraudulent overcharge is an overcharge deliberately made, which the man making it must know to be an overcharge. Semble: in an action between principals & agents impeaching the agents' accounts, actual knowledge of antecedent fraud in the agents by one who subsequently became a member of the firm of the principals would not, if proved, be a bar to their claim.—WILLIAMSON v. BARBOUR (1877), 9 Ch. D. 529; 50 L. J. Ch. 147; 37 L. T. 698; 27 W. R. 284, n.

1353. — Undue influence.—An action which had been settled between a client & her solr., including arranged bills of costs, was ordered to be opened, & the bills of costs taxed, after the lapse of nearly two years, without actual proof of error or overcharge, on the ground that the client had acted under undue influence & without sufficient information, & that much of the business charged for was unnecessary & improper.—WATSON v. RODWELL (1878-9), 11 Ch. D. 150; 48 L. J. Ch. 209; 39 L. T. 614; 43 J. P. 542; 27 W. R. 265, C. A.

1354. — Pecuniary pressure & no independent advice.—Accounts between a mtgee. solr. & his client, the mtgor., stated & signed more than 30 years ago, were opened on the grounds (1) the client had no independent advice, & signed without examination or explanation, (2) the accounts contained improper items, & (3) a third person was put forward as mtgee. Agreements giving the solr., the mtgee. of a colliery, commission on sales of coke & coal were set aside, & agreements giving him lump sums as commission in the purchase of additions to the colliery were directed to stand for what it should be found on inquiry ought to be allowed, on the ground that such agreements were obtained from the client under pecuniary pressure & without independent advice.—WARD v. SHARP (1884), 53 L. J. Ch. 313; 50 L. T. 557; 32 W. R. 584.

1355. — Pressure — Independent advice — Lapse of time.—When it was alleged that the agent of the former owner of estates devised to pltf. had, within a few days after the decease, obtained a conveyance of part of the property, in discharge of a settled balance alleged to be due to him, & had obtained it by asserting that he had a secret whereby pltf.'s title might be impeached, but pltf. had under legal advice acquiesced & confirmed the transaction, & after the lapse of more than fifteen years sought to open the accounts on the ground of fraud.—Held: the bill should be dismissed.—DE MONTMORENCY v. DEVEREUX (1840), 7 Cl. & Fin. 188; West, 64; 1 Dr. & Wal. 119; 2 Dr. & Wal. 410; 4 Jur. 403; 7 E. R. 1039, H. L.

office of the exors. at a day named, the exors. would give them any explanations they might require, & would hand them over cheques for their shares of the residue. The account was not a complicated one, & among the items was, "Paid Messrs. S. & Co. costs relating to exorship. & counsel's fees & payments made by them, £116 17s. 2d." The ultimate balance shown was £331 3s. 4d., the bulk of the testator's property having been disposed of by specific bequests. The residuary legatees attended, signed at the foot of the account a memorandum, "We have examined & approved of the foregoing account," received cheques for their shares, & executed a release to the trustees & exors. The trustees & exors. never informed the residuary legatees that they were entitled to have a bill of costs delivered, & to have it taxed if they thought fit. Nine years afterwards three of the residuary legatees brought an action to have it declared that the release was not binding on them, & to have a bill of costs delivered & taxed. On production of documents there were found in the costs ledger of the solrs. items which came to more than the amount charged for costs in their account; there was no evidence of excessive charge beyond a deposition by an experienced solr.'s clerk that in his opinion at least one-sixth would be taxed off the amount of costs appearing in the ledger, & there was no proof of error in the rest of the account. ROMER, J., dismissed the action. On appeal:—Held: (1) although it was the duty of the solr. trustees to have informed the residuary legatees that they were entitled to have a bill of costs, & if they thought fit to have it taxed or moderated, the omission to do so was not by itself a sufficient ground for opening a settled account; (2) in order to do so it was necessary to show that injustice would be done by allowing the settled account to stand; (3) if excessive charges had been shown the account must have been opened; (4) as no error had been shown, the action had been rightly dismissed.—Re WEBB, LAMBERT v. STILL, [1894] 1 Ch. 73; 63 L. J. Ch. 145; 70 L. T. 318, C. A.

1357. — No independent advice.—K. was a builder, & from 1883 to 1904 employed C. as his solr., who financed him in numerous transactions. No bills of costs were delivered, but from time to time accounts were stated between them, & the amount due for loans, interest & costs was agreed, & C. took mtges. for the agreed amounts. By 1904 all the mtges., except two, had been paid off, either by sales or by K. paying off & taking reconveyances of the mtges., & on each occasion the amount due was agreed. In 1905 C. died, & in 1906 his exors. brought an action against K. to enforce the two subsisting mtges. K. counterclaimed for an account of all the transactions & dealings between himself & C. from 1883, alleging (as the fact was) that he had had no independent advice, & in some of the settled accounts he proved errors in respect of interest, & that he had been charged profit costs prior to Mtgees. Legal Costs Act, 1895 (c. 25):—Held: K. was entitled to open all the accounts & to tax, surcharge, & falsify, & his right was not barred by Stat. Limitations, although all the settled accounts but one had been agreed more than 6 years before the date of his counterclaim.—CHEESE v. KEEN, [1908] 1 Ch. 245; 77 L. J. Ch. 163; 98 L. T. 316; 24 T. L. R. 138.

1358. Evidence—Allegations necessary when principal has previously admitted account correct.—A party who has once admitted an account delivered to be correct cannot afterwards file a bill to have the account taken in equity upon the mere allegation he had no means of ascertaining the account so delivered was correct, without charging specific acts of fraud against deft.; & it is not necessarily an allegation of fraud to say that the accounting party agreed to deliver up certain chattels demanded by the other upon condition of having his alleged balance admitted & paid.—DARTHEZ v. LEE & LAMA, No. 1322, ante.

1359. — Securities not admissible—Oath of agent, when admissible.]—An attorney & agent advanced money to his client & principal in various sums & at different periods, from 1773 to 1778, taking securities & getting accounts settled. The transactions being impeached in 1783:—Held: (1) the settled accounts should be opened & the whole transactions sifted; (2) securities should not be admitted as evidence of demands; (3) the attorney should only be allowed in account the money actually advanced & proved to be so by other evidence than securities & settlement of accounts. But as, in the case of accounts in some sense settled, & a considerable period having elapsed before they were impeached, vouchers might have been delivered up or lost, the oath of the party was admitted as evidence as to the existence & import of such vouchers.—MORGAN v. LEWES (1816), 4 Dow, 29; 3 E. R. 1079.

1360. — Absence of vouchers.]—A largeshareholder was the manager of a co. He rendered accounts regularly from 1826 to his death in 1851. These accounts were not challenged in his life, but after his death items exceeding £2,000 a year were questioned by the co., for which no vouchers could be produced, & no satisfactory explanation given. The account was opened for the whole period of 25 years, & it was directed to be taken with special direction. Special decree for taking a general account, with a direction to treat the books as conclusive, except as to items challenged within 6 weeks, with liberty to surcharge & falsify.—STANTON v. CARRON CO. (1857), 24 Beav. 346; 27 L. J. Ch. 89; 30 L. T. O. S. 299; 3 Jur. N. S. 1235; 53 E. R. 391.

C. Principal's Right to surcharge and falsify settled Accounts.

1363. —.]—Where an account is impeached, if a single important error is established the ct. will not, except in the case of fraud, order the whole account to be opened, but will make a decree that pltf. may be at liberty to surcharge & falsify.

In a partnership action, where one error of £950 was established in an account long settled:—Held: (1) in taking the accounts pltf. was at liberty to surcharge & falsify; (2) such liability should not be limited to errors appearing from the books.—GETHING v. KEIGHLEY (1878), 9 Ch. D. 547; 48 L. J. Ch. 45; 27 W. R. 283.

1364. Injunction granted.]—Where deft. was placed in the situation of steward & universal agent over certain property & for many years received the rents, etc., without any account, mixing the proceeds with his own funds:—Held: although this showed astonishing improvidence in pltf., yet an injunction was ordered against a transfer of stock standing in deft.'s name until information as to what part of the property was the principal's.—*CHEDWORTH (LORD) v. 1365. Agent liable for whole amount.]—An agent, or bailiff, confounding his principal's property with his own is chargeable with the whole, except what he can prove to be his own. The ct. refused in such a case a prospective direction to admit books, not legal evidence, though such a direction is usual in a fair case, as where from want of notice of an adverse claim a strict account cannot be given, & merely gave liberty to apply upon any question of evidence.—*LUPTON v. 1367. Agent liable for failure of bank.]—A person gratuitously acting in the collection of debts, etc., under a trust deed, mixed the money he received with his own money, by placing it in his banker's hands in his own name & upon his own general account. The bankers were in the habit of paying him interest at 3 per cent. upon money in their hands. He informed the trustees that the money was in a bank, but did not state with whom; nor that it was mixed with his own moneys; nor that interest was to be paid upon it. The bankers having failed:—Held: he was answerable for loss upon the trust money.—MASSEY v. BANNER (1820), 1 Jac. & W. 241; 37 E. R. 367.

There are three modes which a person may adopt when the money of others is placed in his hands. The first is for him to keep it in his own house . . . another is for the party to pay it into his banker's on his general account; but the third & correct mode is for the party to open a new account in his own name for this particular purpose, . . . & so to earmark the money as belonging to that estate. . . . But if the person having the money mixes it with his own he thereby makes himself personally debtor to the estate (ABBOTT, C.J.).—ROBINSON v. WARD (1825), 2 C. & P. 59; Ry. & M. 274.

1369. —Jointly with trustee.]—Preparatory to the final winding up of a trust, the agent & solr. of the trustees paid the trust money to his bankers, to the credit of his general account with them, & informed the cestui que trust that the money was lying idle at his bankers'. The cestui que trust took no notice of the information, & more than a month afterwards the bankers failed:—Held: as the agent did not inform the cestui que trust that the money had been paid to the credit of his general account, & as payment to the bankers was not necessary to winding up the trust, the agent & the trustees were jointly liable for the money.—MACDONNELL v. HARDING (1834), 7 Sim. 178; 4 L. J. Ch. 10; 58 E. R. 805.

1370. Accounts opened.]—Where a factor violated all his duties:—Held: (1) no credit was due to his accounts; (2) the principal was not bound by them; (3) the accounts were opened from the beginning on the ground that the relief ought not, in such circumstances, to be limited to a right to surcharge & falsify.—CLARKE v. TIPPING (1846), 9 Beav. 284; 50 E. R. 352.

1371. Commission disallowed.]—If an agent by his own conduct makes it impossible to ascertain the amount of profit realised, he will be disallowed the commission which otherwise according to the contract he would be allowed to claim.

A. appointed B. his agent for the sale of spirits on commission. B. had made profits by the sale of A.'s goods, for which he had not given credit; he had also made profits by selling his own spirits mixed with those of A., & had destroyed books of account pending the litigation. The ct. in taking the accounts disallowed him £7,000, the amount of commission to which by the contract he would have been entitled if his conduct had been proper.—GRAY v. HAIG, HAIG v. 1372 I. When action will lie.]—A person who authorises another to do a specific act, e.g., to withdraw from the bank a sum of money belonging to the principal, may sue the agent for an amount alleged to have been retained by him without bringing an action to account.—O'BRIEN v. BREDEUR (1896), Q. R. 10 S. C. 155.—CAN.

1372 II. —.]—Assumpsit on account stated lies against a collector of taxes for a balance admitted due to his principal, though the former has given a bond to the principal to account for moneys collected.—ST. JOHN CORPN. v. BALDWIN (1847), 3 Kerr, 477.—CAN.

1372 III. —.]—An agent, holding a power of attorney, had collected & not paid over a dividend awarded pltf. by a ct. of bkpy.:—Held: pltf.'s recourse was not confined to an action to account, but he could sue for the specific sum awarded by the ct.—PHILLIPS v. JOSEPH (1875), 15 L. C. J. 335, S. C.; 19 L. C. J. 162, Q. B.—CAN.

h. Money received on sale of land above authorised price.]—Deft., a real estate broker, was authorised by pltf. to sell land at $15 an acre plus commission of 50 cents an acre. Deft. subsequently agreed, through B., to whom he paid $2 an acre, with H. for its sale to H. at $17 an acre & a cash payment of $1,920. Deft. represented to pltf. that he had sold the land to P. at $15 an acre & that P. had resold it to H.:—Held: deft. was only entitled to 50 cents an acre commission, & he was liable to pltf. for cash payment received & could not deduct the $2 per acre paid to B.—GRAM v. 1372. When action will lie.]—To an action of assumpsit deft. pleaded in abatement that he was bailiff, & that pltf. ought to bring account:—Held: where there is an express promise, assumpsit lies as well as account.—WILKIN v. WILKIN (1691), 1 Salk. 9; 91 E. R. 8.

1373. —.]—An action lies to recover money received in account to another's use.—ANON., No. 1246, ante.

1374. Principal's money paid by agent to agent's creditor.]—A. orders B. to receive money from C. for him. B. orders C. to pay it to D., to whom B. owes money. C. pays it. A. can maintain an action against B. as for so much money received to his use. So if in such case B. has drawn a bill upon C. for the money, or generally for so much money, if C. has no effects of B. in his hands, his answering such bill is a payment of A.'s debts to B. for which A. can maintain action against him.—ANON. (No. 3) (1701), 12 Mod. Rep. 565; 88 E. R. 1524.

1375. Unpaid bills in hands of agent.]—Bills remitted to a factor or banker, while unpaid, are in the nature of goods unsold, & if the factor becomes bkpt. must be returned to the principal, subject to such lien as the factor may have thereon.—ZINCK v. WALKER (1777), 2 Wm. Bl. 1154; 96 E. R. 681.

1377. Money collected under bogus scheme.]—Deft. had been employed as pltf.'s agent in raising a loan for establishing a colony on the coast of Honduras, & as such had received deposits from subscribers, & had given scrip certificates, on which it was stated the loan was for the use of the Poyais State. In an action for the money raised by deft.:—Held: it was incumbent on pltf. to prove the existence of such a State, on the ground that the parties to a mere bubble to deceive the public could not maintain an action against each other.—M'GREGOR v. LOWE (1824), 1 C. & P. 200; Ry. & M. 57.

1378. Goods wrongfully pledged.]—Where a factor has raised money by a wrongful pledge of goods of his principal, it is competent to the latter, in taking goods having been shipped & destroyed by fire:—Held: defts. were agents to import the goods & were bound to pay over to pltf. all excess recovered under insurance policies over the costs & charges of the goods destroyed.—HODGSON & CO. v. PORTER & CO. (1877), Buch. 100.—S. AF.

1. Money embezzled by co-agent procured to conviction.]—In an action by a principal against his agent for a sum of money representing the sale of money orders, wherein the declaration alleged a contract of agency, & also that deft. had received for sale a certain number of money orders belonging to pltf. upon terms requiring deft. to account for them:—Held: the fact that the principal had another person arrested & convicted for theft as agent of money orders did not relieve deft. of his civil responsibility to account for the sale of same money orders.—DOMINION EXPRESS CO. v. 1379. Deposit on purchase paid to agent as distinguished from auctioneer.]—Pltf. was employed as solr. for the vendor of real estate. By conditions of sale the deposit was to be paid into his hands "as agent for the vendor," & he signed the contract of sale & receipt for the deposit as such "agent":—Held: (1) he was not, like an auctioneer, a stakeholder; (2) he was liable to pay over the deposit to the vendor on demand, & in default to pay interest from the time of such demand.—EDGEELL v. DAY (1865), L. R. 1 C. P. 80; 35 L. J. C. P. 7; 13 L. T. 328; 12 Jur. N. S. 27; 14 W. R. 87.

PHILIPS* (1849), 2 Car. & Kir. 722.

Sums deposited with stakeholder.]—See GAMING & WAGERING.

1381. Money collected by stranger.]—The assignee of a bkpt. becoming insane, A., his brother, managed bkpt.'s affairs, & new assignees were afterwards appointed:—Held: (1) A. was a mere stranger, as he could not be agent of an insane person; (2) the money received by A., whilst he so acted for his brother in the management of bkpt.'s affairs, was money had & received to the use of the newly-appointed assignees.—STEAD v. CATTLE (1833), 1 Mood. & R. 265.

For full anns., see ELECTIONS.

1383. Money paid to agents on account of purchase made by them on principal's instructions.]—Pltf. instructed defts., share brokers at Liverpool, to buy for him "20 or 30 shares in the L. Ry., for the next account." Defts. bought the shares of other brokers, without disclosing their principal. They informed pltf. by letter of that purchase; & before the account day, which was the last day of the month, received from him £148, price of shares. Before the time when the shares were to be delivered, the co. made a call of £5 per share. Pltf. was made aware of the fact that this call had been made; but he refused to pay it, & subsequently repudiated the contract. Pltf. brought an action to recover back the £148 he had paid to defts., & the jury found a verdict for pltf. A rule nisi was granted on the ground that an action for money had & received was not maintainable as defts. were not principals, but pltf.'s agents for the purpose of buying the shares, & they had discharged their duty as agents.—McEWEN v. WOODS (1847), 11 Q. B. 13; 5 Ry. & Can. Cas. 335; 17 L. J. Q. B. 206; 12 Jur. 329; 116 E. R. 379.

If before the contract was rescinded by the purchaser the agent had paid the price over to the principal, he might have recovered it back on the purchaser's rescinding the contract (PARKE, B.).—MURRAY v. MANN (1848), 2 Exch. 538; 17 L. J. Ex. 256; 12 Jur. 634.

1385. —.—Pltf. instructed deft. to sell a horse for him, representing to deft. that it was a useful horse, etc., but that he was not to warrant it. Dft. sold the horse & represented it as a useful horse; the purchaser afterwards rescinded the contract on the ground of fraud, & gave deft. notice not to pay over the purchase-money to pltf. In an action by pltf. for the purchase-money:—Held: these facts afforded deft. a good defence.—STEVENS v. LEGH (LEF) (1853), 2 C. L. R. 251 22 L. T. O. S. 84; 2 W. R. 16.

(b) Money paid to Agent for particular Purpose.

1386. Money to be carried from one place to another.]—A sum of money was delivered by pltf. to deft. to carry to a particular place, & there to pay to a certain person for pltf. Dft. took the money, but in answer to pltf.'s inquiries said he had lost it:—Held: assumpsit for money had & received was maintainable on proof of these facts merely, though it was objected that the proper form of action was a special action for deft.'s negligence.—BARRY v. ROBERTS (1835), 1 Har. & W. 242.

1387. Money to provide for particular bills.]—A. agreed to consign goods to B. & C. abroad, to be there sold on commission, on his account, on which deft. guaranteed B. & C. should sell them to the best advantage, & render a just account of sales. Before any consignments were made, C. had ceased to be a partner with B., & deft. became one in his stead under the firm of B. & Co. A. afterwards consigned goods to B. & Co., who remitted the proceeds thereof to deft. for the purpose of being handed over to A., who in consequence drew bills on deft., which he by letter agreed to accept, de-

m. Money to buy land.]—Pltf. intrusted deft., an agent, with money to be invested in the purchase of lands. Dft. invested it in two lots which were subject to a mtge., & on deft.'s representation that the lots were of a certain frontage pltf. was willing to accept them though incumbered. Before the conveyance was tendered, pltf. discovered that one of the lots instead of being thirty-three feet in front was only seventeen feet, & he declined to carry out the proposal & brought an action to recover the money intrusted to deft.:—Held: any ratification by pltf. was based upon deft.'s representation that the lots were of a certain frontage, & the representation being untrue, the ratification failed & pltf. was entitled to recover back his money.—BUTTERWORTH v. SHANNON (1885), 11 A. R. 86.—CAN.

n. Money to be paid wife on getting divorce.]—Where money was paid by a husband to a third person to be paid to his wife on her obtaining a divorce:

Held: (1) the payee was not a mere stakeholder, holding as the agent of the husband; (2) his position was more analogous to that of a trustee for the wife & children, coupled with a trust for the husband if the arrangement was not carried out; (3) viewing the husband's position in the most favourable light, it was not stronger than that of a purchaser who had, under the terms of a contract, paid an auctioneer a deposit; (4) in the circumstances, he had not established any right to recover back the sum deposited.—*LIVINGSTONE v. pending on A.'s promise to provide for them, if remittances should not arrive from B. & Co. to meet them. A. became bkpt.; previous to this B. & Co. had remitted to deft., directing him to pay A. on account of goods consigned by him, which were not received by deft. till after the bkpcy. B. & Co. sent other remittances with similar directions, with which deft. credited bkpt. in his account, & debited him for acceptances given by him before bkpcy., but which were paid afterwards. In an action by the assignee to recover those subsequent payments:—Held: he was not entitled to recover, as there was a specific appropriation of the proceeds to provide for deft.'s acceptances before bkpcy.—THOMAS v. DA COSTA (1818), 8 Taunt. 345; 2 Moore, C. P. 386; 129 E. R. 416.

1388. —[A. paid to a banking co. a sum of money, for the specific purpose of providing for a bill of exchange, for that amount, drawn by A. upon the co.'s London bankers. A. was at that time indebted in a larger amount to the co., who, instead of applying the money according to his instructions, placed it to the credit of his account with them. The bill was refused acceptance, & while it remained unpaid in the hands of the holder A. became bkpt. In a special action of assumpsit:—Held: his assignees were entitled to recover from the co. the whole amount deposited.—HILL v. SMITH (1844), 12 M. & W. 618; 13 L. J. Ex. 243; 2 L. T. O. (c) Money received by Agent in respect of Illegal or Wagering Transactions.

1389. Stolen custom duties.—[The East India Co. sued their factor for an account of £12,000 in gold he carried hence into East India. He upon his account demanded (according to the usual custom allowance) for so much paid for customs to the King in India. It was insisted that he never paid the customs there for the gold; so the question was whether the factor or the principal merchant should have the benefit of the customs. This question was referred to merchants. Two merchants certified that, by the course of merchants, the factor should retain the benefit of non-payment of customs, for if the principal freight by his non-payment of customs had been lost, he must have answered for it to the employer, & so run the hazard wholly. In this case the factor, by the law in East India, had it been discovered he had concealed the gold & not entered it into the custom-books, would have lost his life as a felon. Two other merchants certified that the employer was to have the benefit of non-payment of customs. Upon these certificates:—Held: the factor should have the benefit of the customs, for it was a duty to be paid, & the employer could make no title to it against him who was in possession, as he who had possession had right against all but him who had the very right.—*SMITH v. 1393. —[A factor of the East India Co. carried over £1,200 in gold to India, where a custom was due for it, but saved by the factor, & never paid:—Held: (1) the factor had the benefit of it, & not the East India Co., for it was due from them & ought to have been paid; (2) they could not make a title to it against one who had the possession, for that was sufficient against all persons but against him who had the very right; (3) the non-payment was at the peril of the factor.—*BOULTON v. B. When the Right arises.

1402. Not until money received by agent.—Where an agent is employed to sell goods, & sells them on credit, he cannot be called upon to pay the money over to the principal until he has received the whole from the persons to whom he sold the goods, unless the delay in payment has been occasioned by his neglect.—VARDEN v. No action if agent has delayed but not refused to obey instructions.—Pltf., a merchant in London, consigned certain cottons to deft. & his partners, commission agents at Bombay, with directions to sell same & remit proceeds to pltf. in good bills on London. The goods were sold by deft. & his partners in Bombay in Aug., 1847, & produced 8 rupees & upwards per piece, but no remittances either in money or bills having been made to pltf., an action for money had & received was commenced against deft., who had come over to England:—Held: (1) pltf. was not prevented from recovering in an action for money had & received by reason of the proceeds having been received in foreign money; (2) no action for money had & received lay in the circumstances, as there had been no countermand by pltf. of the original directions, & deft. had never wholly refused to perform the contract, but had merely neglected to do so.—EHRENSPERGER v. C. How Agent's Duty to pay over Principal's Funds may be discharged.

(a) In General.

1408. Payment to third party for principal's use.—A., residing at X., employed B., residing at Y., to procure payment of a bill there, & to remit the produce direct to him at X. B. received payment of the bill, but remitted the produce to a third person at Z. for A.'s use, whereby the whole got into the hands of A.'s creditors:—Held: A. could not maintain an action for money had & received against B. to recover the amount of the sum received in payment of the bill.—DUNCAN v. SKIPWITH (1809), 2 Camp. 68.

1409. Payment according to principal's instructions.—An action for money had & received does not lie when the agent has paid over the money in PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 4.—C. (a).

1409 i. Payment according to principal's instructions.—Pltf. alleged that he gave a cheque for $200 to defts. to pay as a deposit on a purchase by defts. of land warrants for him, & that before the purchase he revoked the authority. Defts. proved that they entered into a contract in writing so to purchase, & on receipt of pltf.'s cheque, handed over to him the contract; & that they handed pltf.'s cheque over to the person from whom they had purchased, & that person received the money thereon:—Held: pltf. could not succeed in the action.—DART v. 1410. —.]—Pltf., by letter, desired his agent to receive a sum of money for him, & after making certain payments, transmit the surplus through defts., a mercantile firm in London, to be placed to pltf.'s credit at Calcutta. The agent paid the surplus, £419, to defts., showing them pltf.'s letter. Defts. received the sum on pltf.'s account, entered it in their books to the account of C. & Co., their correspondents at Calcutta, & wrote to C. & Co., informing them they had so done, & desiring that C. & Co. would account with pltf., at the rate of so much per rupee. Defts. charged 1 per cent. commission. Before the letter from defts. arrived at Calcutta, C. & Co. stopped payment. Defts., after placing the £419 to account, paid bills drawn on them by C. & Co. to a much larger amount; but it did not appear whether or not the general balance between the two firms was altered by such payments. On assumpsit brought against defts. for money had & received, & plea, as to the £419, that defts. had remitted it as desired:—Held: defts. not liable, having done all that pltf. required of them, & they contracted to do, for the purpose of remitting the £419; & having bound themselves to credit C. & Co. in that amount, if that firm did not reject the transaction.—M'CARTHY v. COLVIN (1839), 9 Ad. & El. 607; 1 Per. & Dav. 429; 8 L. J. Q. B. 158; 112 E. R. 1342.

1412. Payment by bill of exchange.—]—Pltfs., brokers in England, were in the habit of consigning to deft., a merchant & broker at Montreal, goods on sale & return, & of receiving in payment bills purchased by deft. Pltfs. having requested that undoubted bills should be sent them, deft. remitted a bill drawn by parties whose credit at the time was supposed to be good. Pltfs. on receiving the bill returned for answer that it had been refused acceptance, & requested deft. to do what was needful to procure security from the drawer, & to take all legal & necessary steps for security of pltfs. In an action by pltfs. for money had & received, to recover from deft. the proceeds of consignment to which the bill had reference, deft. pleaded delivery to pltfs. & acceptance by them of the bill in full satisfaction. The judge told the jury that if, by the course of dealing between the parties, pltfs. were bound to take the bill, that was a taking in full satisfaction:—Held: (1) it was too late for deft., on the argument on the rule, to contend that an action for money had & received would not lie; (2) the judge misdirected the jury; (3) there was evidence of an acceptance of the bill, in full satisfaction & discharge.—HARDMAN v. BELLHOUSE (1842), 9 M. & W. 596; 11 L. J. Ex. 135.

Annotation:—Dattd. Croft v. Lumley (1857-58), 6 H. L. Cas. 672.

n. Principal's money stolen from agent.—]—Pltf. sued for money advanced by him to defts. to purchase wheat for him, alleging that they had not purchased or accounted. Defts. pleaded, in substance, that the money, while kept unmixed with their own as pltf.'s money, was stolen from them by persons unknown, without any neglect on their part:—Held: the matter was a question for the jury & not for the ct.—RICKLE v. MATHEWSON (1866), 26 U. C. R. 137.—CAN.

1415 i. Evidence—When onus of proof on agent to show payment.—]—Agents who have collected money on account of an insolvent estate are severally bound to prove to the assignee or his representative that the expenditure of the several amounts charged in their accounts has been actually & properly made & the onus probandi rests on such agents. It is incumbent on such agents to offer proof in support of all the items in their accounts which are impugned, & the propriety, or the actual expenditure of 1413. Payment by transfer in common agent's books.—]—Where a mercantile firm in England borrows money of another firm, & both have a common agent abroad, if that agent credit the lending firm with sums received for the borrowing firm, in pursuance of an agreement between them, that credit is not a payment. The transfer from one account to another in an agent's books is not payment as between agent & transferee of such account, & the entry is not an acknowledgment unless the transferee is informed of the fact.—MCLARTY v. MIDDLETON (1858), 6 W. R. 379; subsequent proceedings, 4 L. T. 852; 9 W. R. 861; 1 Mar. L. C. 114.

1414. Payment by instructions of Court.—]—By a judgment in a partition action it was ordered that hereditaments should be sold by pltf. by public auction in such way as he should think fit, & the purchase-money be paid into ct. The sale took place under conditions of sale which provided for payment of purchase-money at the office of the solrs. of the vendors, & which also contained a reference to a certificate in the partition action. The required deposit was paid by purchaser to the auctioneers, who acknowledged the receipt & signed the memorandum of sale as "agents for the vendors." The auctioneers paid the balance of the deposit (after deducting for costs) to the solrs. for vendors. The vendors then sought to recover such amount in an action against the auctioneers:—Held: as the sale was under an order of ct., the auctioneers had authority to pay the deposit to the solrs. of the vendors, & were not liable to refund.—BROWN v. FAREBROTHER (1888), 58 L. J. Ch. 3; 59 L. T. 822.

1415. Evidence—When onus of proof on principal to show no payment.—]—Where a servant is in the habit of receiving sums of money for his master's use & by established course of dealing the servant pays these over to the master from time to time, without written vouchers passing between them, the presumption of law is that all sums so received by the servant are regularly paid over to the master; where there has been such a course of dealing, in an action by the master against the servant for money had & received, it is not enough for the master to prove sums have been received by the servant to his use; the onus lies upon him to prove by positive evidence the servant has not duly accounted with him.—EVANS v. BIRCH (1811), 3 Camp. 10.

1416. — Of payment.—]—In an action to recover money collected by deft. as pltf.'s agent, an acknowledgment, "Balanced up to this day, as per cash book—S. F. Nov. 19, 1845," written on the back of an unstamped receipt, not in evidence, was held admissible without a stamp, on production of the cash book.—FINNEY v. TOOTEL (1848), 5 C. to sell W. 45 hogsheads of tobacco, to be accounted for by him in part of his demand; & it was agreed that the whole should be sold by X., factor for B. The tobacco was delivered to X., & produced £2,000. X. refused to account to W., saying that B. & T. were indebted to his firm. There was evidence that X. understood the agreement between W. & B.:—Held: X. was bound to account to W. for the sum produced by the sale of the tobacco, but without interest.—WEYMOUTH v. BOYER (1792), 1 Ves. 416; 1 Hov. Suppl. 105; 30 E. R. 414.

In an action by the assignees of B. to recover the balance due upon a resale of goods made by deft. on account of B.:—Held: deft. was not entitled to set off under either 2 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 13, or 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 28, the payment made to A., as deft., who acted as broker & not as principal, could not acquire, by a voluntary payment made after expiry of the stipulated time for credit, a right of set-off or a right under the former Act. The principal must always be debtor, & that, whether he were known in the first instance or not, except where the broker had by the form of the instrument made himself liable.—*MORRIS v. 1420. Agreement to accept principal's bills against goods shipped.—It was agreed between A., in London, & B., in the West Indies, that the former should accept bills drawn upon him by B. to a specified amount, upon A. having bills of lading filled up to his order for coffee, sugar, cotton & rum, & that after deducting his (A.'s) advances, charges & commission, the balance was to be paid to C., a merchant in London, for whom B. acted as agent in the West Indies. B. shipped goods with a bill of lading filled up to A.'s order. At the time when the goods arrived C. had become bkpt. A. demanded the goods, but the captain having wrongfully refused to deliver them, he brought trover against the captain. Before any assignees were chosen under C.'s commission the cause was referred to arbitrators, but they not having made any award the cause was tried, & A. recovered the proceeds of the goods. The assignees of C. having brought assumpsit for money had & received to recover the proceeds:—Held: (1) A. was authorised by the bill of lading to act for the benefit of all concerned, & to do all that was necessary to obtain possession of the goods; (2) there being nothing to show that a reference was an improper step, A. was entitled to deduct the costs of the reference as well as of the cause.—CURTIS v. BARCLAY (1826), 5 B. & C. 141; 7 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 539; 4 L. J. O. S. K. B. 82; 108 E. R. 52.

1421. Right to set-off not lost by giving principal credit in account.—In general, an agent is not warranted in paying a debt due from his principal, without previous authority, or subsequent assent. But where a person fills the character of agent to two parties, & receives from one a sum on account of the other, which sum he carries to the account:—Semble: he may make any deductions afterwards from that sum, which the person who paid it would have had a right to make, in the form of set-off.

By the articles of war, & by several royal warrants, certain regulations were made with respect to payment & assignment of allowance to colonels of regiments, called off-reckonings. A colonel died in Feb., 1822, & a few days after a successor was appointed; but no inspection or return of the state of regimental appointments or accoutrements was made until Jan., 1823, when they were reported serviceable, except in event of the regiment being ordered on a foreign station. In Apr. & Sept., 1823, other inspections & returns were made, by which it appeared that numerous articles were unfit for service, & the agents of the late colonel (who had also received a power from his exors. to assign the off-reckonings, which they had done, to two of their clerks), contrary to the direction of his exors., but in conformity with the decision of the consolidated board of general officers, paid for articles supplied to make up the deficiency:—Held: such agents might set off this payment against the off-reckonings, but not against the private account of testator.—WEMYS v. GREENWOOD, COX & HAMMERSLEY (1827), 5 L. J. O. S. K. B. 257.

1422. Set off of unsecured debt against surplus on realised securities for another debt.—P. & Co. having borrowed a large sum of the Bank of Bengal deposited the co.'s paper with the Bank to a greater amount as a collateral security, accompanied with a written agreement, authorising the Bank, in default of repayment of the loan by a given day, to sell the co.'s paper for the reimbursement of the Bank, rendering to P. & Co. any surplus." Before default was made in the repayment of the loan, P. & Co. were declared insolvents, under Indian Insolvent Act, 1828 (c. 73), s. 36, by which it was declared that where there had been mutual credit given by the insolvents, & any other person, one debt or demand might be set off against the other, & that all such debts as might be proved under a commission of bkpcy. in England might be proved in the same manner under the above Act. At the time of the adjudication of insolvency the Bank were also holders of two promissory notes of

p. Sum due for costs & fees.—Money in hands of agent quā garnishee.—Deft., threatened with action by his brother & pltf. on same debt, borrowed the amount necessary to pay it; but, in order not to be liable to pay it twice, he demanded, & it was understood, besides, between these two brothers that the money should be placed in the hands of the garnishee, awaiting the decision of the case, & that the sum should be surrendered either to the brother or to deft. himself to pay pltf. according to the judgment which might be rendered:—Held: the sum so entrusted to the garnishee had been so intrusted as a deposit, & he could not, consequently, set off what was due to him by deft. for costs & fees as an advocate in the cause.

Even if a garnishee can be considered an agent & not a depositary, he cannot invoke a set-off, seeing that it was a question of a special mandate of a sum confided by the principal for a special purpose.

The set-off has no place when the evident will of the parties is opposed to it.—DUGGAN v. GAUTHIER (1896), 1 G. I. Dig. 1892-98, pp. 84-85.—CAN.

q. Money lent or due under collateral transaction.—An agent, sued by his principal for money received, cannot deduct in the first instance from such money the amount of a claim for money lent, or for any independent transaction between himself & his principal, treating the balance as the only sum held for the use of pltf.; but he must plead his demand by way of set-off against his gross receipts.—*HAMILTON v. 1423. Death of principal—Right of agent executor.]

—A testator, at his death, was indebted to A., his attorney & general agent, in £900 & upwards; the agent, who had in his hands a sum of £900, was appointed exor. 1424. Payments made according to custom.]

Defts., wool brokers, were instructed by H. & Co. to buy a cargo of wool of R. & Co., for whom they also acted as brokers. R. & Co. objected to take the names of H. & Co., & defts. sent them a sold note, "sold to our principals, &c.," without naming H. & Co. in the note. The bought note which they sent to H. & Co. was made out "Bought for H. & Co., &c.," & H. & Co. were never informed that their names had been objected to or were not mentioned in the sold note. Evidence was given that it was the custom of the trade that brokers should either name their principals or not as they thought proper. Defts. resold the wool on H. & Co.'s instructions. H. & Co. became bkpt. when defts. paid R. & Co. for the wool. In an action by the trustees of H. & Co. under a deed of inspection for the proceeds of the wool sold by defts.:—Held: (1) defts. entitled to set off the amount they had paid to R. & Co. for the wool; (2) evidence of the custom of the trade was admissible to show they had authority to make themselves personally liable on the sold note; (3) the contract was not invalidated by the variance between the bought & sold notes.—*CROPPER v. 1425. Money in hands of agent quâ banker.]—K., an officer in the army, kept a current account with C. & Co. as his bankers. On K.'s retirement from the army the sum of £3,000, the value of his commission, was paid to C. & Co. as the army agents of his regiment, & was in due course carried to a deposit account kept by C. & Co. with the Army Purchase Comrs., there to remain till K.'s retirement was gazetted. At this time K.'s current account was overdrawn by £647. The day after K.'s retirement was gazetted C. & Co. received a notice of a deed by which K. had mtgd. the value of his commission to secure the repayment of £5,000. The mtgee. having claimed payment of the whole £3,000, C. & Co. claimed to deduct out of it the £647:—Held: (1) as soon as the retirement of K. was gazetted, the £3,000 became in the hands of C. & Co. money received to the use of K.; (2) independently of the question whether C. & Co. had a banker's lien, they had at common law the right to set off against such moneys the debt due to them.—*ROXBURGHE v. 1427. Agent cannot dispute his principal's title.]

Deft. received the effects of an intestate under an administration granted to him in Bengal as the attorney of pltf., a bond creditor of intestate. Administration was afterwards granted in this country, & notice was given by the English administrators to deft. not to pay over the effects in his hands to pltf.:—Held: (1) deft. could not deny pltf.'s title; (2) he was bound to pay over to him the effects of intestate in his hands.—FARRINGTON v. CLARKE (CLERK) (1782), 2 Chit. 429; 3 Doug. K. B. 124; 99 E. R. 572.

1429. —.]—A. deposited goods with B. as security for money advanced by B., with a promise to deliver the bill of lading, on its arrival, indorsed to B. C. was employed as broker to dispose of the goods for B.'s benefit. Before the bill of lading arrived, the goods were attached in the mayor's ct. in the hands of C. by a creditor of A.:—Held: (1) the transfer of the property to B. was complete, though the bill of lading had never been indorsed:

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 4.—D.

1427 i. Agent cannot dispute his principal's title.]—A factor for sale cannot, in an action by the consignee for not accounting, set up, as a defence, that the goods were not the property of the consignee, but of a third person, he having received no notice to that effect.—MCLELAND v. WHITE (1831), Hayes, 240.—IR.

1427 ii. —. Agent & principal both creditors.]—A principal is entitled to recover money paid to his agent by his debtor, the agent also being a creditor. V. at the expiration of a hire-purchase agreement was indebted to pltf. in respect thereof, & desiring to renew the contract, gave deft., a law agent, instructions to that effect. V. paid deft. £20 on pltf.'s account. Pltf. verbally arranged terms with deft., & authorised deft. to recover the arrears instalments from V., to enter into a fresh contract with him, to take possession if arrears were not paid by a certain day & to telegraph his acceptance of these instructions. Deft. did not reply & without informing pltf. thereof, renewed the contract with V. V. paid deft. a further £10, leaving it to him to appropriate it either to pltf.'s or his own account with V. Pltf. sued deft. for £30. Deft. contended that he was authorised by V. to purchase from pltf. & that the £20 was credited to V. in a running account between him & V.; that he was never pltf.'s agent, & acted for V. only:—Held: as deft. was acting for pltf. when he received the £20 & as a fact received it on pltf.'s account, he could not appropriate it to his own account.—DAVEY v. SACHS (1911), C. P. D. 992.—S. AF.

(2) the foreign attachment was no answer to an action by B. against C. for the proceeds.—GILES v. NATHAN (1814), 1 Marsh. 226.

1430. —.]—A ship originally belonged to one of two partners, & had been conveyed to deft. for securing a debt, & he became sole registered owner & afterwards, as agent for both partners, insured the ship & freight, & charged them with the premiums, etc., & on a loss happening, received the money from the underwriters:—Held: he was accountable to the assignees of the surviving partner for the surplus, after payment of his own debt, & not to the exors. of deceased partner, to whom the ship originally belonged.

The right of plffs. to recover here depends on a settled rule of law, that an agent shall not be allowed to dispute the title of his principal, & that he shall not, after accounting with his principal & receiving the money in that capacity, afterwards say that he did not do so, & did not receive it for the benefit of his principal, but for that of some other person. Here deft. has received the money as agent for the partnership, & he cannot now be permitted to say that he received it for the benefit of [the original owner] alone (ABBOTT, C.J.).—*DIXON v. 1431. —.]—A broker who has received the proceeds of a policy of insurance cannot, as agent, dispute the claim of his only known principal on the ground that other persons are interested in the subject-matter of the insurance.

Where the letters between the parties showed the broker had considered himself as dealing with one of the owners only of the ship, & as having insured for him alone:—Held: they were conclusive against the broker as fixing him with an agency for his correspondent solely.—ROBERTS v. OGILBY (1821), 9 Price, 269; 147 E. R. 89.

1432. —.]—Under an arrangement between A., a merchant at M., & C., a merchant at L., A. bought goods for C. in A.'s name & consigned them for sale in A.'s name to houses in L., the correspondents of B. At the time of the arrangement & of the shipment of the goods C. was the factor of B. at L. (which fact was known to A.), & advised B. of the shipments, & as to the advances B. might make thereon to A. B. had from time to time accounted with A. & handed over to him the balance of the proceeds of each shipment after deducting commission, etc. C. having become bkpt., B. refused to pay over to A. the balance in his hands, claiming a lien thereon in respect of the debt due to him from C. on the ground that the goods were the property of C. & not of A., & alleging that the course of dealing between A. & C. was a fraud upon B. A. having brought an action for money had & received against B., the judge left it to the jury at the trial to say: (1) whether, as between A. & B., the goods were the property of A.; (2) whether the transaction between A. & C. amounted to a fraud on B., which was productive of injury to the latter. The jury having found a verdict for A. for the amount of the balance in the hands of B., the ct. refused to grant a rule nisi for a new trial.—SCOTT v. CRAWFORD (1842), 4 Man. & G. 1031; 5 Scott, N. R. 781; 134 E. R. 1031.

to depart from his duty & deliver them to another person; & a person taking from the consignor with notice of the circumstances is subject to the rights of the correspondent.—GREEN v. MAITLAND (1842), 4 Beav. 524; 49 E. R. 442.

1434. — Where he has agreed to account.]—Where A. agreed to remit certain consignments to B., & B. agreed to account with A. for the proceeds of such consignments:—Held: it was not competent at any time afterwards for B. to assert a paramount title to the proceeds of such consignments.—ZULUETA v. VINCENT (1852), 1 De G. M. & G. 315; 19 L. T. O. S. 330; 42 E. R. 573.

1435. — By disputing the authority under which he acted.]—A party who has under an authority from the assignee acted upon a bill of sale by selling the goods cannot, in an action by the assignee for the proceeds, impeach its validity. Neither can he, if the authority to sell is in general terms to sell all the effects at a certain place, & he has afterwards admitted "a balance" in his hands on the sale, set up in such an action that part of the goods sold were not comprised within the bill of sale, & that the proceeds of the goods which were so have been exhausted by expenses or payments in pursuance of the authority.—BAKER v. DALE (1858), 1 P. & F. 271.

1436. — Notice of title of principal's husband.]—A married woman sued deft., whom she had before marriage appointed her agent, for moneys received by him as her agent since marriage in respect of property to which she was before her marriage entitled, as to part absolutely & as to part as trustee:—Held: (1) she could recover in respect of both; (2) deft. could not set up a mere notice of the title of the husband as a defence unless such notice amounted to a claim for him.—KINGSMAN v. KINGSMAN (1880), 6 Q. B. D. 122; 50 L. J. Q. B. 81; 44 L. T. 124; 45 J. P. 357; 29 W. R. 207, C. A.

1437. — By requiring concurrence of third parties.]—E. having died in Ireland intestate, letters of administration were granted in Ireland to pltf. Part of his assets being in India, pltf. sent out a power of attorney to P. & Co. in India, who procured letters of administration to be granted to them in India for the use & benefit of pltf., received the Indian assets, paid the Indian debts, & remitted the surplus to their agents in England. The Irish letters of administration were sealed in England:—Held: the agents in England were bound to hand over the fund to pltf., & could not require the concurrence of the next of kin, they not having taken any legal proceedings to prevent pltf. from receiving the assets.—EAMES v. HADON (1881), 18 Ch. D. 347; 50 L. J. Ch. 740; 45 L. T. 196; 29 W. R. 877, C. A.

1438. — By pleading he acted as principal.]—In an action by pltf. to recover the amount of bets executed for him by deft. on commission, the defence was that the bets had been made between the parties as principals & were void. The accounts & letters treated the bets as made with third parties:—Held: deft. was estopped from denying that he had acted as pltf.'s agent.—MOORE v. PEACHEY (1891), 7 T. L. R. 748.

1441. — Father acting for infant son.—H. & his wife were entitled to gavelkind land in equal moieties, as tenants in common in fee. The wife died in 1870, leaving two sons, S. & J., then an infant. J. attained 21 in 1877. By the custom of gavelkind, on the mother's death her moiety descended on her two sons in equal moieties, as tenants in common, subject to the right of H. to receive one moiety of the rent so long as he remained a widower. Upon her death H. entered into receipt of the entirety of the rent, & continued in such receipt, without accounting to either of his sons, or acknowledging their title in writing, for more than 12 years:—Held: (1) as to that moiety of the one-fourth to which J. became entitled in possession on the death of his mother, H. must be taken to have entered into possession as bailiff for his infant son; (2) the possession taken in that capacity could not change its character on the infant attaining 21; (3) the title of J. to that one-eighth was not barred by Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (c. 27), s. 12; (4) as to that moiety of the one-fourth to which S. became entitled in possession on his mother's death, the same presumption did not arise; (5) there being no evidence that H. had entered into receipt of the rent as his agent, the title of S. to that one-eighth was barred by the stat.—*Re HOBBS, HOBBS v. 1456. Agent not liable when not in default.—In 1827, the administratrix of an intestate, who had carried on business at Calcutta, sent out letters of attorney to C. & Co. to collect assets in India. C. & Co. collected the assets & remitted the proceeds in 1829 to B. & Co., their correspondents in London, with directions to pay same to the administratrix upon having a proper discharge. The letters of administration being insufficient, B. & Co. refused to pay over the money. On a bill filed by the next of kin against the administratrix & B. & Co., an injunction was obtained restraining the administratrix from collecting the assets & B. & Co. from paying over the fund. B. & Co. by their answer admitted possession of the fund, & offered to pay it upon being indemnified. No further steps were taken in the suit until 1841, when a bill of revivor & supplement was filed; & under an order in the cause, the fund, minus expenses, was paid into ct. without prejudice to the question of interest. Since 1829 the fund had been lying at the bankers' of B. & Co. mixed up with other moneys of the firm:—Held: (1) B. & Co. were merely agents of C. & Co.; (2) no demand having been made by a person competent to give a discharge, B. & Co. were not liable to pay interest on the fund in their hands; (3) B. & Co. were in no default in not themselves applying to pay the fund in ct., there being no personal representative properly constituted before the ct.—WOLFE v. 1457. Interest payable though not claimed.—To a bill against an agent for an account & payment of balance due, deft. answered he had paid over more than he had received, & claimed a balance due to him. The bill did not pray interest, & it being proved the balance was against him:—Held: (1) he must pay, in addition to the balance due from him, the costs of suit; (2) deft. was chargeable with interest at 45 per cent. from the filing of the bill.—FRY v. FRY (1864), 10 Jur. N. S. 983.

1458. Interest not chargeable until account settled.—An agent had entire management of his principal's affairs for several years, during which he was never called upon to account; errors were then discovered in some accounts furnished by him, & he paid a small sum admitted to be due, alleging that this was a final settlement, & that only a small sum, if anything more, was due. On a bill being filed & accounts taken, a large sum was found due from him:—Held: in the circumstances, there having been no wilful withholding of accounts, or any fraudulent falsification of them, he was not chargeable with interest on the balances in his hands until the date of the certificate.—TURNER v. BURKINSHAW (1867), 2 Ch. App. 488; 17 L. T. 83; 15 W. R. 753.

certain moneys for investment, which he paid into his own account at his bank. The principal died in 1859; his widow took out administration in 1867, & in 1868 filed a bill for an account against the agent. There was no proof the agent had made any interest or profit by the money in his hands:—Held: (1) compound interest was only allowed where the accounting party had used the money in business; (2) mixing the money with the ordinary account of a firm of solrs. at a bank was not such employment in business as would render a member of the firm liable to compound interest; (3) the agent was chargeable with simple interest at the rate of 5 per cent.—BURDICK v. PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 7. — A.

1464 i. Agent purchasing for himself—Agent held trustee for principal.]—W. & H., being in fact agents for undisclosed principals, agreed with R. to join equally in the purchase of land & paid to R. £1,024, being one-fifth of the purchase-money. This was wholly the money of their principals, but R. had no notice that W. & H. were agents only. R. with the money subscribed by W. & H. & others selected land at Glips Land & signed a memorandum in writing dated May 13, 1841, that he would, when the Crown grant issued, stand seised of that land in trust for W. & H. & the other co-contributors. R. obtained the Crown grant for the land & dealt with it as his own. The representatives of some of the undisclosed principals of W. & H. on behalf of themselves & other undisclosed principals sued R. in equity to establish a trust against one-fifth of the land:—Held: (1) R. held one-fifth of the land on an express trust within Stat. Limitations for W. & H. or their principals; (2) pltf. suing sufficiently affirmed the investment on behalf of all the undisclosed principals.—HUNTER v. RUTLEDGE (1869), 6 W. W. & A. B. 331.—AUS.

1464 ii. —[—W. was manager of a squatting station on which lands were opened for selection under Land Act, 1862. W. selected large positions, the purchase-money & rents for which were in the first place paid out of the estate of the principal, but were subsequently repaid to that estate by W. by means of money borrowed by him from a bank on the security of the Crown grants of the land selected:—Held: W. should be deemed to have purchased as a trustee for the personal estate of the principal.—LEMPRIERE v. WARE (1871), 2 V. R. 1.—AUS.

1464 iii. —[—An agent for the purchase of property purchased in his own name & with his own money:—Held: the agent was trustee for his principal.—ARCHIBALD v. GOLDSTEIN (1884), 1 M. R. 45, 146.—CAN.

1464 iv. —[—Where an employee, standing in a fiduciary relation to his absent principal, purchases land with the principal's money for his principal, but takes the deed in his own name, putting it with the title deeds of his principal after registry, & that land is so intimately connected with other land of his principal that its independent ownership would be prejudicial to the ownership of his principal, he cannot retain such land for his own benefit,

1465. ———.]—A.'s interest in leasehold lands having been set up for public sale, under writs of fi. fa., C., his attorney, being the real pltf. in one of the writs, but not pressing the sale, attended, & having made the largest bidding, he was declared purchaser, & paid the purchase-money, which was not more than sufficient to satisfy the writs prior to his own, & the expenses. A. claimed the benefit of the purchase, alleging that C. bid as his agent, & purchased in trust for him, which C. denied, but offered to give up the purchase if A. would pay him the purchase-money & other demands he had on him. A. was not then able to raise the money, but after 10 years, during which C. dealt with the lands as his own, he filed his bill, charging that C. bid for & purchased the lands as his agent in trust for him; that C. said so at & after the sale in conversation with friends of A., & they on that understanding did not bid; all which C. positively denied in his answer:—Held: (1) the material question being whether C. was acting on behalf of A. in bidding for & purchasing his property, C. might take an issue to try that question, but if he declined, he should be declared a trustee for A.; (2) A.'s equity against C., if C. was acting on his behalf, was not affected by the lapse of 10 years, there being no acquiescence by A., & C. being aware of his rights; (3) if an attorney was not acting as attorney for his client on a particular occasion, he might throw off that character & exercise his independent rights.—AUSTIN v. CHAMBERS (1837-8), 6 Cl. & Fin. 1; 7 E. R. 508.

trust funds in freeholds or copyholds of inheritance with consent of the husband & wife, authorised the husband to purchase a certain estate, as an investment of part of the trust funds; afterwards they sold out a sufficient part of those funds to pay for the estate, & the husband received the proceeds. The estate was copyhold for lives, & the purchase was made without the wife's consent:—Held: as between the husband & trustees, he must be considered to have purchased the estate for them.—TRENCH v. HARRISON (1849), 17 Sim. 111; 60 E. R. 1070.

1467. ———.]—Pltf. & deft., being both desirous of purchasing the same estate, agreed that deft. should purchase the whole estate & cede to pltf. certain specified fields. Deft. purchased the estate, throughout the negotiations treating the matter as a joint affair. Subsequently he wrote to pltf. that he intended to keep the whole estate, alleging that in their agreement he had reserved the right to deal with the property as he liked in case he purchased the whole. In an action for specific performance:—Held: deft. had purchased partly as agent of pltf., & there would be a reference to ascertain what portion pltf. was entitled to.—CHATTOCK v. MULLER (1878), 8 Ch. D. 177.

1468. ———.]—Property in Germany, belonging to a limited co., was vested in certain persons as trustees for securing payment of debentures. The trustees, professing to act under a power of sale in the trust instrument, caused certain proceedings to be instituted in a German ct.: the result was the trust property was sold at an undervalue by 1464 v. ———.]—An agent employed to purchase land for his principal purchased it for himself in his own name, in fraud of his principal:—Held: a constructive trust arose which was not within Stat. Frauds, s. 7, & which might therefore be established by parol evidence. In such case an agent who has taken a conveyance of the land in his own name would stand in the position of a purchaser with notice of an equity:—*Bartlett v. 1464 vii. ———.]—Questions for jury.—A bill was filed charging deft. with having purchased certain lands as pltf.'s agent & with his money, & praying to have deft. declared trustee of the land for pltf. Issues were directed to be tried as to the agency, & as to the payment of the amount of purchase-money having been made out of moneys belonging to pltf., or having been charged against him in account by deft.—MACAULAY v. PROCTOR (1851), 2 Gr. 330.—CAN.

1464 viii. ———.]—Ejectment of other agents by agent purchaser.—K., registered owner of land subject to a mtge. to C. Co. who took abortive sale proceedings, authorised pltf. to sell the land. Pltf., without the knowledge of K., purchased the land from C. Co., & entered into possession of it, but subsequently removed to another place, when the wife of K., & D., an agent of K., entered on the land & refused to deliver up possession. Pltf. having brought an action of ejectment:—Held: the rule that an agent cannot buy his principal's property without the latter's consent gave a remedy to the principal but was not available as a defence to an agent of ejectment brought by such agent against other agents of the principal.—PALMASON v. KJERNSTED (1917), 3 W. W. R. 312; 36 D. L. R. 448.—CAN.

v. Agent taking conveyance in own name—Principal not estopped by evidence in other action.—Pltf. & their father had been in possession of lands about twenty or thirty years, the title, however, being all the while in another person. Pltf. employed one of deft. F. to obtain a conveyance, which he took in his own name for the avowed purpose of defeating the claim of P., & in a suit by P. against pltf. to establish his right to the land one of them swore that the deed to deft. (the agent) was bona fide & for his own benefit;

& subsequent to the dismissal of the bill in that suit pltf. took a lease of the premises from F.—Held: pltf. were not precluded from establishing the agency of F., & afterwards showing themselves entitled to the land as owners.—WASHBURN v. FENRIS (1861), 14 Gr. 516; affd. 16 Gr. 76.—CAN.

w. Agent obtaining land as security for advances Made with principal's funds without authority.—Deft. had acted gratuitously as agent of pltf., transmitting to her the interest of charges to which she was entitled. One charge was paid to deft., which pltf. directed him to invest on a specified real security. He was unable so to do; but without her authority lent it to L., for whom he was also agent, & who was indebted to him on the security of a bond, with warrant of attorney to enter judgment. He inclosed the bond & warrant to her in a letter, stating, contrary to the fact, that the money had been applied to pay off a charge on his estate:—Held: deft. was a trustee for pltf. as to so much of his security as would be sufficient to pay her claim, & must execute a deed declaring the trust.—O'BRIENE v. COHNWALL (1852), 3 L. Ch. R. 130; 5 Ir. Jur. 13.—IR.

x. Person purporting to purchase as agent—Admissibility of evidence.—Where deft. in buying certain land for the purchase of which pltf., his brother, had been negotiating with an agent of the vendors, deceived the agent by spoken words & by a course of conduct, & induced him to believe, contrary to the fact, that deft. was so buying with pltf.'s concurrence, & where pltf. within a reasonable time ratified the contract of sale:—Held: pltf. entitled to a declaration that in the purchase of the land deft. acted as pltf.'s agent.

At the trial the agent's manager was asked: "If you had known that deft. was negotiating for himself that day, & without the knowledge of his brother, would you have negotiated with him?" & after objection, the question was allowed as admissible.—JOHNSON v. JOHNSON, [1916] S. R. Q. 1.—AUS.

the officer of the ct., part of the property being purchased by a person who was agent of the co. & held a fiduciary position. The trustees took no steps to get in any of the purchase-moneys:—Held: (1) the breach of trust thus committed justified the removal of the trustees from office; (2) the purchase by the agent must be declared to be for the benefit of the trust for the debenture-holders.—REID v. HADLEY (1885), 2 T. L. R. 12.

1469. Lease—Agent held trustee for principal.]—The lease of three contiguous houses occupied by A., B., & C. being about to expire, A. & B., for the purpose of continuing their tenancy & of securing a good neighbour in place of C., who was quitting, agreed that one or other of them should apply for a new lease for their mutual benefit. B., having applied for & being granted a new lease, claimed to hold it for his own benefit:—Held: (1) B. was a trustee of the lease for A.; (2) Stat. Frauds no defence.—ATKINS v. ROWE (1728), Mos. 39; 25 E. R. 257.

1470. — Specific performance granted.]—A decree was granted for specific performance of a lease to plffs. according to the terms of an agreement entered into with two defts., it appearing that one deft., who resisted the decree & claimed the benefit of the agreement for himself, acted as plffs.' agent in negotiating the lease from his co-deft., so that his own intention was immaterial, & the ct. being satisfied, upon the evidence, that the real object & understanding of the contracting parties was an agreement for a lease for the benefit of plffs.—TAYLOR v. 1471. Agent appointed by parol—Specific performance granted.]—In a bill filed by a purchaser for specific performance of a contract it was alleged that the contract was made by one of defts. as agent for plff., but that the agent claimed the benefit of the contract for himself. It appeared by the statements in the bill that the agent was appointed merely by parol. Demurrers by defts., the agent & vendor, were overruled.—HEARD v. PILLEY (1869), 4 Ch. App. 548; 38 L. J. C. then took possession of the land, & had kept it ever since without opposition, & paid each year's rent as it fell due, taking the receipts in A.'s name. A. entered into a contract for purchase of the land in his own name, & then assigned the benefit of the contract to B. for valuable consideration. In an action by plffs. against A. & B. to establish the agency, the vendor not being a party:—Held: (1) the appointment of A. was an agency within Stat. Frauds, s. 4, & not a trust or confidence within s. 7, & was not required to be evidenced by writing; (2) the plea of purchase for value without notice raised by B. was of no avail, inasmuch as the prior equitable title vested in plffs. by force of the contract.—CAVE v. Having paid the price at the request of his prininsolvent, were their property, which property was simply on storage with L. & deliverable on demand without charge:—Held: L. was the agent of R. & Co. to buy for them with their money at a fixed commission, & the curator could not exercise anything in the nature of a "pauliana" recourse against the goods, even though L. bought in his own name. Re LEMELIN, LEMOINE & PARADIS (1902), Q. a. Acquisition of timber—Agent held trustee for principal.]—Dft., as general principal, A. drew upon him for the amount, & the bill was duly paid. B. afterwards came to London, saw the contract, & ratified all that A. had done. It turned out that the cargo had been fraudulently disposed of by the captain prior to the date of the contract of sale by C. to A.:—Held: B. could not maintain an action against A. to recover back the money paid, as upon a failure of consideration; but his only remedy, whether in his own name or in that of A., was against C., the seller.—*RISBOURG v. B. & Co. requested A. to remit them a bill on Portugal, which A. did, & indorsed it. The bill was dishonoured by non-acceptance:—Held: (1) A. was bound by his unqualified indorsement; (2) evidence to show that A. was acting merely as B. & Co.'s agent was not admissible.—*GOUPY v. Ct. will restrain an action commenced against him on such indorsement, whether brought by the indorsee (the principal agent) or by a banker with whom the bill has been deposited, for the purposes of being presented for acceptance & payment by the drawee, although the banker may have given credit for the amount, if the latter can be shown to have had any knowledge or information of the circumstances attending the transaction, & of the relative situation of the parties.—*KIDSON v. A. Breach of Covenant not to engage in similar Business, etc.

1482. Injunction—Where no express negative covenant.—An agreement entered into by H. to act as manager to the W. Chemical Co. for a term of years provided that he should "give the whole of his time to the co.'s business," but contained no negative covenant by him. H. intimated to the co. his intention of forming & becoming director of a rival co. in the immediate neighbourhood, though still willing to act as manager of the original co., which now applied for an injunction to restrain H. from committing any breach of his agreement to give the whole of his time to them:—Held: the contract being one for personal service, of which specific performance would not have been granted, & there being no express negative covenant by deft., no injunction could be granted.—*WHITWOOD CHEMICAL CO. v. 1483. — — —.]—By an agreement containing no express negative stipulations, deft. agreed to serve pltf. as manager for a term of years. In breach of the agreement deft. left pltf.'s service & engaged in a similar business:—Held: (1) the ct. had jurisdiction to grant an injunction; (2) in the circumstances an injunction ought not to be granted.—JACKSON v. ASTLEY (1883), Cab. & El. 181.

1484. — — — Negative covenant affirmative in substance.—A stipulation by an agent that he will not give notice to leave his principal's service within a specified period is, though negative in form, affirmative in substance, & ought not to be enforced by injunction.—*KIRCHNER & Co. v. 1485. — — — No sufficient negative covenant ascertainable.—A., who had agreed with pltf. "to act exclusively for them as their supervisor," agreed to enter another employment as manager. Covenant amounting to restraint of trade & unreasonable.—See TRADE & TRADE UNIONS.

B. Where Agent describes himself as such without Authority.

1488. Use of term "agent," how far permissible.—When articles of a particular kind have become generally known in commerce under the name of the original manufacturer, or patentee, any person has a right, after expiration of the patent, to manufacture such articles & sell them under that name; but he may not, by inscribing the name as a proper name on his shop-front, or otherwise, lead the public to believe he is selling as agent for the original manufacturer. Qu.: whether apart from circumstances showing a fraudulent intention, a person has a right to advertise himself as "agent for the sale of" a particular article without authority from any definite principal.—WHEELER & WILSON MANUFACTURING CO. v. SHAKESPEAR (1869), 39 L. J. Ch. 36.

For full anns., see TRADE MARKS, TRADE NAMES & DESIGNS.

1489. — — — Agent acting bona fide.—Pltf., who had appointed defts. sole agents for the sale of his goods in the United Kingdom, alleged that he had determined their agency, but defts. asserted that their agency continued & issued notices & advertisements representing that they were his sole agents. Pltf. claimed an interim injunction to restrain defts. from circulating or publishing such notices or advertisements:—Held: in absence of malice or bad faith on the part of defts., the injunction must be refused.—HIRSCHLER v. HERTZ & COLLINGWOOD (1895), 11 T. L. R. 466; 39 Sol. Jo. 623.

1490. — — — Reasonable probability of injury to principal.—An injunction will be granted to restrain a person untruly representing another as his principal, when there is reasonable probability of injury arising to that other from the misrepresentation.

Deft., by circulars, advertisements, & general conduct of his business as a dealer in cycles, was held by the ct. to have intended the public to believe that the proprietors of a newspaper were either his principals or responsibly connected with him in the sale of his cycles. There was a reasonable probability of the proprietors of the newspaper being exposed to litigation, & perhaps made responsible, if they had not taken steps to disconnect themselves from deft.:—Held: the proprietors were entitled to an interim injunction to restrain deft. until the trial or further order from holding himself out in this manner.—WALTER v. ASHTON, [1902] 2 Ch. 282; 71 L. J. Ch. 839; 87 L. T. 196; 51 W. R. 131; 18 T. L. R. 445.

C. When Agent discloses confidential information or seeks to prejudice Principal's Business.

1491. General rule.—Good faith underlies the whole of an agent's obligation to his principal; & an agent has no right to employ as against his principal materials which he has obtained only for his principal & in the course of his agency (LINDLEY, L.J.).—LAMB v. EVANS, [1893] 1 Ch. 218; 62

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 8.—A.

1496 i. Injunction — Remedy where liquidated damages provided for.—Under contract between a London tailor & his agent in Edinburgh the latter was not to carry on his trade in Edinburgh for twelve months after the agency should cease, & covenanted punctually to perform all conditions on his part, binding himself in £200, to be considered as liquidated damages, & not by way of penalty.

The agent openly exercised his trade within the twelve months:—Held: interdict should be granted, though it was insisted damages only could be claimed.—CURTIS v. SANDISON (1831), 10 S. 72.—SCOT.

b. No breach where agreement to enter similar business not acted upon.—Pltf. contracted with deft. to act as his agent & not to sell or canvass for any threshing machines except those manufactured by deft. He then entered into an agency agreement with a rival manufacturer, but before acting for the latter, deft. refused to pay commission to him on a sale:—Held: the agreement was no violation of the agreement with deft., & commission must be allowed.—*GRAHAM v. 1493. — Information acquired in confidence—Knowledge of patent.—Though a rival manufacturer is entitled to avail himself of any flaw in a patent, or of any distinction between his own invention & the patent in question, an agent of the patentee is in a different position. Information which he has acquired he has acquired in confidence; & there is a prima facie presumption that he is not competing fairly with the patentee.—WILKINSON v. WILDE (1861), Griffin's Patent Cases (1887), 247.

1494. — Materials collected in course of agency.—Canvassers who had been employed by the proprietor of a trades' directory under agreements which bound them to devote themselves to a particular district exclusively to the obtaining from traders advertisements to be inserted in the directory, & to supply blocks & materials necessary for producing such advertisements, proposed at expiration of their agreements to assist a rival publication in procuring similar advertisements:—Held: they were not entitled to use for the purposes of any other publication materials which, while in pltf.'s employment, they had obtained for the purpose of his publication.—*LAMB v. 1495. — Making copies of documents not permissible.—No man who is in the employment of another is entitled to use or even take a copy, for his own private purposes, of any document of his employer which comes to his hands or to which he has access in the course of his employment. The director of a co. was ordered to deliver up lists of customers of that co. or copies thereof which were in his possession or under his control.—*MEASURES BROTHERS v. The parties quarrelled, & one of defts. came to England to carry on an independent telegraph business with his partner in Australia, & sent circulars to pltfs.' customers, mentioning he had their cyphers. On motion to restrain him from using the cyphers:—Held: (1) there was nothing confidential in the cyphers; (2) he was entitled to use them.—REUTER'S TELEGRAM CO. v. BYRON (1874), 43 L. J. Defts., on learning of this, dismissed pltf., entered his office, & took away or destroyed the mailing list, card index, & ledger above referred to, & also a list pltf. had prepared of likely buyers all over Canada outside of pltf.'s territory:—Held: (1) pltf. was entitled to damages for the trespass committed by defts. in entering his office, & for the destruction of the list of likely buyers; (2) defts. were entitled to damages on their counterclaim against pltf. on account of his conduct, as above stated; (3) the mailing list, card index, & ledger were the property of defts., & pltf. could not recover anything in respect of them. *Robb v. other person or persons that L. was about to stop payment, or was in difficulties or insolvent, & from in any manner slandering L. or injuring his reputation or business, & from giving notice to the post office to forward to B.'s residence letters addressed to him at L.'s office, & also asking that he might be ordered to withdraw the notice already given to the post office:—Held: (1) the ct. had jurisdiction to restrain a person from making slanderous statements calculated to injure the business of another person; (2) this jurisdiction extended to oral as well as written statements, though it required to be exercised with great caution as regards oral statements; (3) in the present case an injunction ought to be granted; (4) deft. had no right to give a notice to the post office the effect of which would be to hand over to him letters of which it was probable that the greater part related only to L.'s business; (5) the case was one in which a mandatory injunction compelling deft. to withdraw his notice could properly be made, pltf. being put under an undertaking only to open the letters at certain specified times, with liberty for deft. to be present at the opening.—LOOG (HERMANN) v. 1499. Agent disabling himself from carrying out agency.]—Pltfs. entered into a contract with defts., who carried on business in partnership, whereby the latter were appointed sole buying agents for pltfs. for a certain district in England, the intention being that the whole district should be represented by defts. for a period of 5 years. Pltfs. agreed that defts. should retain the agency so long as they met their engagements & kept strictly to the terms of the engagement for 5 years, & in consideration defts. agreed to act as buying agents for the district on the terms stated in the agreement, & to accept delivery & pay for a minimum quantity of pltfs.' products during each year of the term. Defts. had the option of renewing the agreement at its termination. During the 5 years defts. dissolved partnership & pltfs. sued for damages for breaches of the contract committed after the dissolution:—Held: (1) there was no implied term in the contract that defts. would not dissolve partnership during the term & thus disable themselves from carrying out the contract; (2) defts. were not liable.—BOVINE, LTD. v. W., colluding with deft. R., had assigned same to R. as security for money advanced; & that R. threatened & intended to sell same. At the trial pltf. proved that within 6 years deft. acknowledged the security to be bad & promised pltf. should be paid:—Held: (1) there was no antecedent debt to which the subsequent promise could apply, that being a promise to pay a debt with which deft. was not originally chargeable, whilst the declaration alleged an undertaking as to the validity of the security; (2) deft. was not liable on account stated, as there was no existing antecedent debt between him & pltf.; (3) deft. was not liable for money had & received, as the money had been paid over to the grantor.—WHITEHEAD v. 1509. ——. —An action by a principal against his agent, whether brought in the Q. B. Div. or in the Ch. Div., is one of those to which Stat. Limitations is applicable, unless the agent is something more than a mere agent to conduct business for his principal & remit to him goods or money received on his account. But the duties of an agent are often much wider; he is often more than an agent, & in such case an action against him is not barred by Stat. Limitations (LINDLEY, L.J.).—Re SHARPE, Re BENNETT, MASONIC & GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE Co. v. SHARPE, [1892] 1 Ch. 154; 61 L. J. Ch. 103; 65 L. T. 806; 40 W. R. 241; 8 T. L. R. 194; 36 Sol. 1511. Confidential clerk collecting fees.—B., confidential clerk of plff., a barrister, having defrauded his employer of a considerable amount of fees he had received on his behalf, absconded in 1846, & was not heard of till after his death. B. died intestate, & his widow in 1854 instituted a suit for administration of his estate, under which the common decree was made. Plff. put in his claim as a creditor for the amount due to him, which was disallowed by the chief clerk, on the ground that it was barred by Stat. Limitations. Plff. afterwards filed a bill against the next of kin of B. to recover the amount of the fees of which he had been defrauded out of her distributive share of the assets

it was found the relation of agency existed between the parties. The evidence adduced made it impossible to decide how much of the principal's money was unaccounted for.—Held: (1) such suit was essentially one for an account, & a final decree ought not to be made, but an order that an account should be taken; (2) limitation ran from the date on which the agency ceased.—HURRIONATH ROY v. KRISHNA COMAR BUKSHI (1886), L. R. 13 Ind. App. 123; 1 L. R. 14 Calc. 147.—IND.

c. Acknowledgment by agent more than year after termination of agency.—Notwithstanding Limitation Act, 1877, s. 19, a suit cannot be brought upon an acknowledgment or account stated, signed by a person who has been an agent to collect rents, if his signature was not procured till more than a year after the determination of his agency.—*PARHATTINATH ROY v. d. What statutory provisions applicable.—A suit by a principal against his agent for an account is a suit for movable property received by the agent on behalf of the principal & not accounted for, & is governed by Limitation Act (XV. of 1877), Sched. f. Agent collecting movable property.—Limitation Act, Sched. II., art. 89, applies to suits by a principal against an agent for movable property received by the latter & not accounted for, & time begins to run when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded & refused, or, when no such demand is made, when the agency terminates, i.e., when the agent ceases to represent the principal, though his liability in respect of acts done by him as agent may continue.—*VENKATACHALAM v. g. Period over which accounts to be taken.—Plffs. & defts. agreed that defts. were to be sole agents of plffs. carriers in the Dominion, & defts. were to manufacture the carriers at a stated price. There were further provisions as to the burden of expenses & as to quarterly reporting & accounting, & plffs. were to appoint an auditor.—Held: the agreement did not constitute a partnership nor a fiduciary agency so as to prevent the operation of Stat. Limitations, & accounts should be taken for six years only before action. The Pongola (1895), 73 L. T. 512, distd.; Knox v. Dye (1871-2), 1 L. R. 5 H. L. 656, consd.; *Noyes v. h. Agent to settle claims.—A ry. co., at various times in 1851 & 1852, deposited with C., their solr. & confidential agent, sums of money, with directions to apply them respectively in payment of each of several claims for compensation for lands taken by the co. A separate account was opened in C.'s books for each sum, showing the amount received by C. from the co., & the amount paid by him, on foot of each claim. The entire sum received by C. was not in all cases applied by him as directed, & in Jan., 1855, his books showed a balance of £128 8s. 5d. in favour of the co. on foot of balances unapplied. C. died in 1861 intestate, & his administrator settled an account with the co. whereby a sum of £6,213 8s. 6d. was admitted to be due to C. This account included a judgment recovered against the co. by C. in 1856; but there was no evidence that it included the sum of £128 8s. 5d. A petition for administration of C.'s personal estate having been filed, the co. filed a charge on April 23, 1866, claiming this sum.—Held: (1) C. was not a trustee of the sums deposited with him; (2) Stat. Limitations was a bar to the claim.—CRAWFORD v. CRAWFORD (1867), 16 W. R. 411.—IR.

i. Agent investing money.—P. acted as general agent for M., & furnished her with accounts of his receipts & disbursements. While so acting P. invested £1,500 on mtge. to H. upon security which proved to be valueless. There was no evidence that P. was authorised to lend upon this or on any special security. Proceedings were taken & expenses were incurred by M. in endeavouring to realise the security which proved to be fruitless. P. having died, M. claimed as creditor the £1,500 & arrears of interest thereon, & the costs of the proceedings to realise the security.—Held: there was a fiduciary relation between P. & M., which precluded the personal representative of P. from relying on Stat. Limitations as an answer to M.'s claim, & M. was entitled to have an account taken of the dealings between herself & P. as between principal & agent.—POWER v. POWER, MULCAHY'S CLAIM (1884), 13 L. R. Ir. 281.—IR.

of the intestate:—Held: (1) in consequence of the confidential relation which existed between B. & pltf. the debt was not barred by Stat. Limitations; (2) pltf. was not precluded from enforcing his claim in a suit instituted by him for that purpose, by reason of the certificate of the chief clerk disallowing the claim made under the former suit.

The money was money of the employer in the hands of his confidential agent. There was possession by the agent; there was no adverse possession, & the bar arising from adverse possession could not occur (per Cur.).—TEED v. BEERE (1859), 28 L. J. Ch. 782; 33 L. T. O. 1512. Agents as quasi-trustees.—A. & B., agents of a co., conspired to conceal the true state of its affairs, whereby A., one of them, was enabled, in 1817, to buy shares of C. at a price much below their real value. The fraud was not discovered till 1860, soon after which C.'s representative filed one bill against the representatives of A. & B., praying a retransfer of the shares, & payment of the intermediate dividends. It was not pretended that B. derived any pecuniary benefit from the sale to A.:—Held: A. & B. being quasi-trustees the lapse of time was not material.—WALSHAM v. STANTON (1863), 1 De G. J. & Sm. 678; 3 New Rep. 56; 33 L. J. Ch. 68; 9 L. T. 357; 9 Jur. N. S. 1261; 12 W. R. 63; 46 E. R. 268, L.J.J.

Agent to collect & invest proceeds of sale.—A., resident in America, by power of attorney authorised B. & C. in England, B. being a solr., to get in & sell his property here & reinvest the proceeds, & generally deal with it for his benefit. A. died intestate in 1859, whereupon B. & C. paid the moneys they had then received under the power, & which had not been reinvested, into a bank to the account of B.'s firm. In 1867 letters of administration were taken out to A. by his widow, who filed a bill against the agents for an account:—Held: the agents were trustees for their principal, & could not set up Stat. Limitations against his personal representative.—BURDICK v. GARRICK No. 1459, ante.

the balance & in some circumstances a plea of Stat. Limitations would have been perfectly good; if, however, the case was rested upon the ground of fiduciary relation, according to the old law, the Ct. of Ch. would not have allowed Stat. Limitations to be pleaded as a defence (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.). Beld. Re Bell, Lake v. Bell (1886), 34 Ch. D. 462; *Re Sharpe, Re Bennett, Masonic & General Life Assoc. Co. v. 1514. Agent with full & unrestricted powers of management.—Deft. B. had acted for testator during the latter's life, with full & unrestricted powers of management; the other deft., B.'s wife, was testator's daughter & sole extrix. Pltf., testator's widow, was entitled to a legacy of £1,500 under her husband's will, & also to the effects, etc., of testator. Testator's & informal, & pltf. on that ground filed her bill for administration of testator's estate, praying the usual account. Defts., in answer to an interrogatory of pltf., furnished an account of all dealings with testator's property up to the date of suit from a date 6 years prior to his death, & claimed the benefit of Stat. Limitations as to the period antecedent to these 6 years:—Held: deft. was a trustee, & could not avail himself of Stat. Limitations.—GRAY v. BATEMAN (1872) 21 W. R. 137.

1515. Agent receiving surplus of sale of mortgaged property.—In 1868 after the death of mtgor., who had died intestate & without leaving next of kin, the mtgd. property was sold by A., the mtgee., under power of sale contained in the mtge. deed. The balance of the proceeds of sale after payment of the mtge. debt was retained by B., who had acted as solr. for both parties in effecting the mtge., & for mtgee. in the sale of the mtgd. property. The mtge. deed contained the usual provision that the surplus, if any, arising from a sale of the mtgd. property should be paid to mtgor. A. died in 1877, leaving all his property to his widow, who died in 1878, having appointed exors. of whom B. was one. B. afterwards died, & in an action to administer his estate, a claim for the balance of the proceeds of sale retained by him was raised by the surviving exor. of A.'s widow. B.'s exor. opposed the claim on the ground that it was barred by Stat. Limitations. Administration had not been taken out to mtgor.'s estate:—Held: (1) B. received the balance of the proceeds of sale in a fiduciary character & with the knowledge from his position that A. was an express trustee of such balance for mtgor. & liable to a claim by the Crown; (2) Stat. Limitations could not be set up as a bar to the claim.—RE BELL, LAKE v. BELL (1886), 34 Ch. D. 462; 56 L. J. Ch. 307; 55 L. T. 757; 35 W. R. 212.

k. Gomasta.—The representatives of a gomasta, who had for the last four years of his life taken the moneys of his employers in advance for the purpose of the business, were sued for the balance of account of such moneys after giving credit for the amount of the gomasta's annual salary:—Held: the cause of action arose at the date of the gomasta's death, & the suit, having been brought within the period of limitation from that date, was not barred.—*KALIKRISHNA PAUL CHOWDHRY v. l. Mooktear.—An account having been demanded from a mooktear, he wrote a letter in which he promised to render full accounts during the ensuing vacation. This he neglected, though he did not refuse, to do:—Held: limitation for a suit to compel an adjustment of account ran from the time when deft.'s promise to render accounts was broken, & was governed by Act IX. of 1871, Sched. persons he was acting on behalf of the heir, whoever he might be. After expiration of 12 years from the owner's death, pltf., a purchaser from the heir, brought an action against deft. to recover the land & for an account of rents & profits:—Held: (1) deft. having assumed a fiduciary character & received rents in that capacity, Stat. Limitations did not run in his favour as against the true owner; (2) pltf. was entitled to ratify his acts as agent, & to recover the land & all accumulations of rent.—*LYELL v. KENNEDY, KENNEDY v. 1519. —. —. —. Pltf. was surviving partner of a firm who carried on the business of average adjusters in Paris. In 1883 a vessel called the International became a total wreck near Ramsgate. The bill of lading was sent by pltf.'s firm, who were acting for the insurers, to deft., a shipping agent, with instructions to sell the cargo on behalf of the firm. It was sold by deft., & after deducting salvage claims & other expenses, there remained in his hands a sum of £96 which appeared for several years in his books as owing in respect of the vessel. The entry ceased to appear after 1888, but the amount was not paid over to pltf.'s firm. In an action brought by pltf. in 1912 to recover the sum of £96, deft. pleaded that the claim was barred by Stat. Limitations:—Held: (1) as deft. had been employed to sell the cargo in the ordinary course of his business, he was not bound to keep the proceeds of sale as a separate fund to be paid over to pltf.'s firm; (2) deft. was not an express trustee of the amount, but only a debtor to pltf. in respect of the ultimate balance of account as between them;

(3) the claim was barred by Stat. Limitations.—HENRY v. HAMMOND, [1913] 2 K. B. 515; 82 L. J. K. B. 575; 108 L. T. 729; 29 T. L. R. 340; 57 Sol. Jo. 358; 12 Asp. M. L. C. 332.

1520. Stockbroker selling his own shares to principal.—Pltf. claimed to set aside certain transactions between himself & deft., relating to the purchase of shares in a mining co., & to recover moneys paid by him to deft. in respect thereof. The ground of the claim was the fraud of deft. in pretending to act as pltf.'s stockbroker while in fact selling to pltf. deft.'s own shares. The transactions took place in & before Aug., 1906. Pltf. did not discover the fraud until July, 1912. The action was commenced in Nov., 1912. Deft. used no means to conceal the cause of action. Pltf. was guilty of no laches or other default in failing to discover the fraud earlier:—Held: Stat. Limitations was no bar to the action.—OELKERS v. ELLIS, [1914] 2 K. B. 139; 83 L. J. K. B. 658; 110 L. T. 332.

Limitations is no bar to an action by a principal against his agent in respect of moneys remitted to the agent for an express purpose & retained by him, where such agent is either in the position of an express trustee or guilty of fraudulent concealment in his accounts.—*NORTH AMERICAN LAND & TIMBER CO. v. 1524. —. —. —. An agent was employed to purchase a yacht for his principal:—Held: he was not entitled to purchase the yacht himself & resell it to his principal at a profit, but could only charge each taking three acres, & R. then exchanged his three acres for a motor-car before it was disclosed to him that W. held the property for Z. when they made their joint purchase:—Held: the relationship of principal & agent was established, & the difference in the prices paid for the land in the two sales could be recovered by W. as secret profit.—*RITCHES v. 1526. ———. —[Fairness of transaction immaterial.]—A director of a ry. co., also a member of a mercantile firm, entered into a contract quâ director with the firm for the supply of certain iron chairs at a fixed price:—Held: (1) such a contract, although it might be enforced at law, was illegal in equity upon general equitable principles, & would be set aside; (2) no question could be raised as to the fairness or unfairness of a contract so entered into. In such a case the law of Scotland differs in no respect from the law of England.—ABERDEEN RY. Co. v. BLAICKIE BROTHERS (1854), 2 Eq. Rep. 1281; 23 L. T. O. S. 315; 1 Macq. 461, H. L.

The co. purchased the coal areas, at the outside price named, from A., who was trustee for B. & others for some years prior to the formation of the co. B. was one of the directors of the co. & was assumed by the ct. to have taken part in the resolution of the board to purchase at the outside price, but the co. was not aware that he was beneficially interested in the property. The co. was afterwards wound up, & the majority of shareholders, with full knowledge of the above circumstances, passed a resolution (confirmed by the ct.) to sell the property. 1534. ————*Equity treats all transactions between an agent & his principal, in matters in which it is the agent's duty to advise his principal, as voidable unless & until the principal, with full knowledge of the material facts & in circumstances which rebut any presumption of undue influence, ratifies & confirms the same. In such cases the interest of the agent is in conflict with his duty, & there can be no real bargain at all. If the transaction be one of sale by the agent to the principal the latter must, in order to avoid it, be able to restore the agent to his original condition. If he has resold the property, or cannot restore it in its original condition, the right to avoid the transaction will, as a general rule, have been lost. 1539. ————*In equity an agent cannot without the consent of his principal, given with full knowledge of the material facts & in circumstances which rebut any presumption of undue influence, retain any profit acquired by him in transactions within the scope of the agency. The principal can always in such a case treat the profit as acquired on his own behalf, & insist on its being accounted for to him. Thus an agent whose duty it is to acquire property on behalf of his principal cannot, without the like consent, acquire it on his own behalf & subsequently resell it to his principal at an enhanced price. In such a case the principal can treat the property as originally acquired for him & the resale as nugatory, & may recover from the agent the money paid on such resale less the original price & the expenses incurred by the agent in acquiring the property. This only applies where the relationship of principal & agent existed at the time when the agent acquired the property. If it did not then exist, the property acquired was, at the outset, the agent's own property for all purposes, & the subsequent constitution of the relationship of principal & agent cannot deprive him of property already his own (LORD PARKER).—MARLER ESTATES v. 1540 i. ————Transaction set aside.—Pltf. approached deft. supposing that he was a real estate agent, & on his recommendation agreed to buy a lot of land for $2,500, & paid him a deposit. Deft. went to the owner of the land & bought it in his own name for $2,000, less $100 commission. Pltf. on discovering the facts sued to recover the profit made by deft., or alternatively for rescission of the agreement & return of his money:—Held: pltf. was entitled to a return of the money & a rescission of the agreement.—STEVENSON v. SANDARS (1912), 20 W. L. R. 787; 3 D. L. R. 790; 17 B. C. R. 158, C. A.—CAN.

1540 iii. ————Position of assignee.—Defts. having authorised S., member of a firm of estate agents, to sell land, & reinvest proceeds in the purchase of other land which S. had recommended as a good investment, S. sold land belonging to the firm of which he was a member to defts. In the agreement for sale the firm appeared as vendors, but defts. believed this was merely a measure of convenience & were unaware that the firm were the real owners. Before all the instalments of the purchase-money were paid the firm assigned their rights under the contract to pltf.s:—Held: (1) as the agents occupied a position of trust towards defts., their failure to disclose their interest gave defts. the right, notwithstanding the subsequent assignment to pltf.s, to have the contract rescinded; (2) as defts. did not become aware of all the facts till after the action was brought, their failure to repudiate the contract earlier did not operate as a waiver of their right to do so.—*Lagunas Nitrate Co. v. Upon the death of D., a year afterwards, his wife, who was his residuary devisee, filed a bill to set aside the sale. It was proved that the annuity was an inadequate price for the fee in possession, & that deft. had taken undue advantage of his position as agent:—Held: (1) on these grounds, the sale could not have stood if the vendor had had the whole fee; (2) deft. might have taken the reversion, subject to pltf.'s life interest, on payment of the annuity in full; (3) the ct. would not apportion or allow a deduction from the consideration, & deft. declining to take the reversion on these terms, the sale was set aside in toto.—*DALLY v. The uncle deputed deft., his nephew, to see T. on the subject. Deft. met T., by appointment, & at this interview T. refused to allow any attempt to compromise the debts, & said he would sell his moiety of the estate, upon which deft. offered him £7,000 for it, payable by instalments. T. next day accepted the offer. Before an agreement had been signed, deft. obtained a valuation by a surveyor estimating the value of the mines under the entirety at £20,000. The sale was completed without this valuation having ever been communicated to T. T.'s heir filed a bill to impeach the sale:—Held: (1) deft. had stood in a fiduciary relation to T., which made it his duty to communicate to T. all material information which he acquired affecting the value of the property; (2) as he had not communicated the valuation to T., the transaction must be set aside.—*TATE v. employed to purchase foreign stock & bonds for his customer, according to his, the agent's, recommendation, he transmitted accounts of the transactions to his employer, with broker's notes, etc., as if he had purchased the stock of third persons. In fact, no stock or bonds were purchased; no transfers were made; no broker's notes passed, but the sales were nominal of stock & bonds remaining in the hands of the agent & his partners, & not set apart nor appropriated to the customer. In order to effect these purchases, loans of money were made by the agent to the customers, upon agreement that the stock & bonds should remain as a deposit in the hands of the agent, to secure repayment of money advanced. The stock & bonds were afterwards sold at a loss under the agent's advice. In 1819 an account of these transactions was rendered & settled between customer & agent, & great loss having been incurred upon the transactions, a large balance was paid by the customer to the agent:—Held: (1) all the transactions must be set aside; (2) an account must be decreed against the agent.—*ROTHSCHILD v. 1559 vii. ———.—[Defts., agents of pltf. in the purchase of land, were found not to have made a proper disclosure to pltf. of the value of the land, & to have induced him to relinquish his share for a small sum, & then sold at a large profit:—Held: pltf. entitled to a share of profit made by defts.—SIMPSON v. DAVIS (1914), 27 W. L. R. 632.—CAN.

1559 i. ———.—Agent reselling at profit.—[Defts., land agents employed by pltf. to sell his land to the Crown, during the course of their employment acquired the knowledge that the Crown would in all probability give £5 per acre for the land. Before the agency was terminated one of defts. purchased the land on his own account for about £2 10s. per acre without disclosing to pltf. the fact that there was such a probability, & shortly afterwards sold it to the Crown for £5 per acre:—Held: such non-disclosure was a breach of defts.' duty, & pltf. was entitled to recover from them the difference between the price received by him & that paid by the Crown.—BLACKHAM v. HAYTHORPE (1917), 23 C. L. R. 156.—AUS.

1559 ii. ———.—[Pltf.'s agent, by a devious course of conduct, took from pltf. an agreement of sale to himself, resold it to G. at a price higher than that at which he represented to pltf. that he had sold it, paid over to pltf. a smaller sum, less the agreed commission, & divided the balance with his partner in the transaction:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover, not only the profits made by the agent himself, including the commission, but the amount paid to his partner. *MORISON v. 1559 iii. ———.—[B., being authorised by pltf. to sell land on commission, entered into an agreement for sale with C., which was confirmed by pltf. Before the final execution of this agreement B. entered into a contract with

C. whereby he was to have a half-interest with C. in the land in question, & he also entered into an agreement with M. under which M. was to be entitled to a half-share in the interest obtained by B. as a result of the arrangement with C. B., C., & M. contributed towards the price in proportion to their respective shares in the land, & they all derived the benefit arising through the deduction from the price of the commission to which B. was entitled as pltf.'s agent. The land was subsequently sold to V. Pltf. then discovered the facts & sued B., C. & M. for the profits derived from this sale:—Held: (1) B. & C. were in fact partners, & C. was liable equally with B. to account to pltf. for the profits; (2) nothing was brought home to M. which should make him liable to pltf. *Lamb v. SUB-SECT. 12.—WHERE AGENT TAKES GIFTS FROM PRINCIPAL.

1570. Gift by principal to agent—Conditions of valid gift.]—To support a gift made by an employer to an agent, equity requires (1) the employer should not only know he is making a gift but should be acquainted with the full measure & extent of it; (2) if there are any pecuniary transactions between employer & agent in respect of which the employer may consider himself indebted to his agent, it is of absolute necessity that the agent, before he accepts a gift, should make his principal acquainted with the state of accounts between them.—WINCHILSEA (EARL) v. GARETTY (1833), 1 My. & K. 253; 39 E. R. 677.

1571. ———.]—A testator bequeathed all his property to his widow, the chief portion of which consisted of certain leasehold premises & the business carried on there. Their son H. had for some time been manager of the business, & after his father's death he continued so to act on behalf of his mother. She assigned the lease of the premises, with the goodwill of the business, to H. by way of gift. She died, having by her will appointed H. & another son A. her exors. & trustees, & left all her real & personal property upon trust, after payment of certain legacies, to be divided between her three children, H., A., & a daughter, in equal shares. A. sought to set aside the assignment & claimed the lease & business as part of the residuary estate of his mother:—Held: the assignment was valid.—Re COOMBER, SUB-SECT. 13.—WHERE AGENT ACQUIRES SECRET PROFITS NOT BEING BRIBES.

1572. Agent may not acquire secret profit.]—A covenanted servant of the East India Co., a senior merchant, acting as agent of the co. (as resident or chief at one of their factories), was incapable of forming any contract in which the co. was interested, so as to derive profit to himself, or any otherwise than for the profit & advantage of the co. If any such contract were actually made between him, as a merchant dealing for himself, & the co.'s board of trade in India, in which contract undue advantage was taken by him, by means of his knowledge & influence as resident at the factory, he could not, to a bill in Ch. by the co. for discovery & relief, demur generally on the ground of want of equity.—HENCHMAN v. EAST INDIA CO. (1797), 8 Bro. Parl. Cas. 85; 3 E. R. 459.

1573. ———.]—Where a person receives commission money as agent he shall not be allowed to charge the principal any more than the sum actually paid for the article furnished.—A.-G. v. COCHRANE (1810), Wight. 10; 145 E. R. 1151.

1574. ——— Evidence of overcharging.]—It is the duty of a sworn broker of London to charge his principal only the cost price of articles purchased for him, in addition to his commission, & the prin-

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 12.

1570 i. Gift by principal to agent.]—Grants in reversion obtained by an agent from his employers by fraud & misrepresentation were afterwards assigned for valuable consideration to a purchaser having notice of the facts & nature of the title:—Held: (1) the grants must be set aside; (2) a conveyance taken after such grants, the fiduciary relations still existing & the grantor ignorant of his rights, was a continuation of the fraud, & not a confirmation.

It is doubtful whether equity ought to allow, in any circumstances, a dealing between an agent & his principal, there being such a conflict between interest & duty.—DUNBAR v. TREDENNICK (1813), 2 Ball & B. 304.—IR.

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 13.

1572 i. Agent may not acquire secret profit.]—The husband of A. left her by will a house he had contracted to purchase, & she appointed resp. her agent. In the bkpy. of the vendor of the house, A. having been objected to as assignee, resp., according to the law of Jersey, subrogated S. as assignee on the terms he & S. should share the profit, if any, on the estate, & the house should be secured to A. There was a profit:—Held: resp. was only agent of A., & any profit he made as such belonged to A.—WILLIAMS v. STEVENS (1866), 12 Jur. N. S. 952, P. C.—JERSEY.

a. — Agent purchasing at lower price than stated to principal.]—Appl., real estate broker, undertook to buy two lots for resp., commission to be payable by the vendors, at a quoted price. He purchased one lot from the vendors at a lower price, but received the full stipulated price from resp. He further falsely represented to resp. that another party had bought the second lot & he would have to buy it at an advance on the quoted price, & resp. paid this advance price, applt. purchasing it at the original price & retaining the difference:—Held: applt. liable to account for the secret profits & not entitled to any commission or brokerage in respect of the lots pur-

b. — Agent purchasing charge on principal's property.]—An agent purchased at an undervalue a charge on the estate of his principal, & while in receipt of the rents charged his principal with interest on the face-value of the charge:—Held: as trustee for his principal, the extra interest retained should be applied towards the extinguishment of the charge; & lapse of time, even though it might possibly have caused the loss of material evidence, would not shift the burden of proof, originally resting on the agent, to the principal.—PATTEN v. HAMILTON, [1911] 1 L. R. 46.—IR.

c. — Agent receiving return commission from sub-agent—Profit from special arrangement with bank.] Pftfs. entered into an agreement with defts. that all consignments of produce, which defts. might make to Europe should be made through pftfs.' firm; that pftfs. should receive a commission of 1 per cent. for themselves & 2½ per cent. for their agents at the port of consignment; that pftfs. should make certain advances to defts. against the produce; & that the sums advanced should be repaid with interest "at such rates as may be fixed at the various dates of such loans, it being agreed that such interest is to be regulated by the then prevailing rate at the office of the Bank of Madras at Tellicherry." Defts. became indebted to pftfs., & pftfs., having furnished them with an account of the transactions between them, sued to recover the balance due. Defts. admitted the correctness of the debit side of the account, but denied in general terms that of the credit side. It appeared that in the account defts. were charged on account of local exchange at a rate higher than that actually paid to the bank, with which pftfs. had made a special arrangement without reference to the contract with defts. It also appeared that pftfs., under an arrangement made with their agents at the ports of consignment, had received from them about 1 per cent. on the various consignments by way of return commission, & that this arrangement had not been communicated to defts.:—Held: (1) defts. were not entitled to the benefit of the special arrangement between pftfs. & the bank; (2) pftfs. were liable to defts. for the amount received by them as return commission.—MAYEN v. ALSTON (1892), 1 L. R. 16 Mad. 238.—IND.

d. — Agent to procure loan lending his own money.] Under an agreement, whereby an agent agrees to find a lender of so much money on mgle. it is not competent for the agent to lend his own money.—GREEN v. DALGETY & CO., LTD. (1916), 21 C. L. R. 509.—AUS.

e. — Agent taking lease of principal's property.] A lease obtained by an agent from his principal, who was strict tenant for life, with a limited power of leasing, at an under-value, & for a term longer than the power of the tenant for life authorised him to grant:—Held: fraudulent & void as against the successor of the grantor.—KIR v. DUNNAN (1841), 1 Dr. & War. 541; 1 Con. & L. 335.—IR.

f. ———.]—Valuable leases & agreements for leases obtained by an agent from his principal, the principal reposing confidence in his agent, & the agent availing himself of the inexperience, negligence, & extravagance of the principal, will be set aside, or held as securities only for money advanced.—WATT v. GROVE (1805), 2 Sch. & L. 492.—IR.

g. ———.]—An agent may take a lease from his principal, but must always be prepared to prove that full information was imparted to the principal, & that the contract was entered into with perfect good faith.—MOLONY v. KERNAN (1842), 2 Dr. & War. 31.—IR.

principal having averred in an action of assumpsit that the broker had charged him more than cost price, which pltf. had paid:—Held: it was sufficient proof of such averment to produce a running unsettled account between the parties, by which it appeared the principal had paid more than the amount of the overcharges, although on the whole account, & when the balance at a subsequent period was struck, the principal was indebted to the broker in a sum far exceeding such overcharges.—PROCTOR v. BRAIN (1828), 3 C. & P. 536; 2 Moo. & P. 284; 7 L. J. O. S. C. P. 66.

This premium belonged to the owner & not to the captain. If a contrary usage has prevailed, it is a usage of fraud & plunder. What pretence can there be for an agent to make a profit by a bill upon his principal? (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—DIPLOCK v. BLACKBURN (1811), 3 Camp. 43.

1577. — — — — —.] A ship had, by agreement between the owners & master, gone several voyages to intermediate ports; the generality of these voyages were unprofitable. The master informed his owners that he should ship a cargo at Sydney to China on his own account, but this was not assented to by the owners:—Held: (1) the master not entitled to use the ship on his own account; (2) he stood in the position of trustee for the owners, & was bound to account for all profit made by the ship whilst under his command.—SHALLCROSS v. ORDHAM (1862), 2 John. & H. 609; 5 L. T. 821; 10 W. R. 291; 70 E. R. 1202.

1578. — — — — —.] Agent to obtain lease.—In an action for deceit, pltf. declared he had employed deft. to obtain a lease for him; that deft. fraudulently represented that a premium of £150 was to be paid for it, whereas only £100 was to be paid, by means of which fraudulent representation deft. obtained from him £50, & converted it to his own use:—Held: these allegations were sufficient without further stating that the £50 so obtained was over & above the £100 to be paid for the lease.—FEWTRESS v. AUSTIN (1816), 2 Marsh. 217.

co-owner of a ship, supplied stores to it as ship's husband:—Held: he was only entitled to charge his co-owners, on a bill for account of ship's profits, the cost price of supplies.—RITCHIE v. COUPER (1860), 28 Beav. 344; 54 E. R. 398.

1581. — — — — —.] Transaction outside agency.—Pltf., a merchant at Manchester, from time to time consigned, for shipment & sale abroad, goods to defts., a firm of traders at Manchester, who, with another person, were merchants in India. Defts. shipped their own & pltf.'s goods to India, where they were sold by the member of the firm there, who purchased with the proceeds of sale other goods, which he remitted to defts. at Manchester. He also sent defts. an account in which pltf.'s goods sold in India were placed to his credit, & certain bills of exchange for the amount of proceeds of sale, less commission, were debited. These bills in fact never existed, but defts. in their statements of account with pltf. placed the amount of the imaginary bills to his credit, debiting him with the cash advances on the goods & paying him the balance:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to an account of profits on the goods purchased in India with the proceeds of pltf.'s goods, defts. being commission agents only.—KIRKHAM v. PEEL (1880), 44 L. T. 195, C. A.

1582. — — — — —.] Shipowner acting as shipbroker.—A shipbroker, who is also managing owner of a ship & receiving a fixed sum as remuneration for his service as such, is not entitled to make an extra profit for himself by commission or brokerage for procuring charters & freights, it being one of the duties of a "managing owner" to procure charters & freights.—*WILLIAMSON v. The land was then leased to II., & taxes having fallen into arrear, was assessed & sold by the municipality, the land being purchased by deft. acting secretly through an agent:—Held: the conduct of deft. in purchasing secretly for himself, though dishonourable, was not such as to give pltf. any remedy, there having been no fiduciary relationship between the parties at the time of sale.—FLEMING v. McNAB (1883), 8 A. R. 656. — CAN.

1581 II. — — — — —.]—H., an agent for sale, offered a property to M. at the price fixed by the principal, E., with an alternative offer that if he advanced the purchase-money M. should pay a higher price; the latter offer was accepted & a transfer made to the agent with the owner's consent at the price fixed by him & a lease made to M. with a compulsory purchasing clause at the higher price. The owner claiming the profit from the agent:—Held: the arrangement was an advance by the agent to M. & not a purchase by M. from the agent, who was not accountable for the profit.—*ELL v. And it does not make any difference that the firm receives commission or trade discount from the manufacturer, either with or without the knowledge of the merchant.—BEIER v. CHOTALAL (1904), I. L. by defts. from one settling day to another, pltf. paying or receiving the difference. No arrangement was made with regard to defts.' remuneration. The accounts rendered to pltf. from time to time indicated, among other things, a certain percentage chargeable to him, followed by the word "net"; & it appeared from the evidence that, according to Stock Exchange usage, this "net" charge represented the "contango" payable on each carrying-over transaction to the jobbers with defts.' commission; but Neville, J. held on the evidence that pltf. was not in fact aware that commission was included in this charge. Pltf. also deposited with the brokers by way of cover a certificate for a block of 390 shares in a certain co. with a blank transfer of the whole block signed by him. At the end of 1905 & in Jan., 1906, the brokers gave notice to pltf. that they would sell the cover unless he at once paid the balance due from him, & eventually on Jan. 17, 1906, they closed the account with a balance of over £60 against him, & on the same day sold the whole block of shares deposited with them as cover for £162. In an action by pltf. claiming repayment of the commission alleged to have been improperly retained by the brokers under the net charge:—Held: (1) in absence of fraud or breach of duty the brokers were entitled to charge pltf. with reasonable remuneration in the nature of a quantum meruit for their services in carrying over the shares; (2) as the commission actually charged by them did not exceed such reasonable remuneration pltf. could not claim return of it as a secret charge made by an agent against his principal.—*STUBBS v. 1585. — Usual charges within principal's knowledge. [—Pltfs., fruit-brokers, who had acted as agents for the sale of defts.' fruit, rendered them accounts from time to time, which showed deductions, inter alia, for wharfage, portage & warehouse rent. Defts. objected to these deductions on the ground that they were not disbursements, but profit charges. It appeared that, in accordance with practice in the fruit trade, pltfs. employed their own men at the wharf to handle the goods & warehoused the goods in their own warehouse, that the charges were the usual & customary charges made by fruit-brokers, & that defts. had been in the trade for many years & were fully aware of the nature of the charges:—Held: pltfs. entitled to make the deductions on the ground of defts.' knowledge.—*ISAACS & SONS, LTD. v. 1586. — Or benefit. [—The right of certain native chiefs in W. Africa to grant concessions to pltfs. being in dispute, deft. acted as confidential agent of pltfs. at the Govt. inquiry. As soon as the decision in favour of pltfs. was announced, deft. secured a concession from the native chiefs of lands adjoining pltfs.' concessions:—Held: (1) deft. had been enabled to obtain the concession by reason of his confidential position; (2) deft. held it upon trust for pltfs.; (3) deft. was entitled to be repaid the amount expended with interest & to be indemnified against all liabilities.—*TARKWA MAIN REEF, LTD. v. 1590 ii. — [—] An agent for sale of property obtained his principal's consent to sell for $75 a foot. He was subsequently introduced to a purchaser, to whom he represented that the owner wanted $90 a foot, which price was obtained:—Held: he acted as the purchaser's agent in the matter & the purchaser could recover the difference as secret profit.—FRY v. YATES (1914), 19 B. C. R. 355; 28 W. L. R. 23.—CAN.

Sect. 2.—Principal's rights against agent: Sub-sects. 13 & 14.]

1592. ———. Notwithstanding transaction illegal.—A principal is not estopped from obtaining relief in equity against his agent on the ground that he has a remedy at law. The illegality of a transaction between a principal & agent is not necessarily a bar to a suit in equity seeking an account of such transactions.

If a person employs an agent who in the course of his employment gains a personal advantage which is not included in the contract between them, the ct. would order its repayment although no action at law would lie (ROMILLY, M.R.).—WILLIAMS v. TRYE (1854), 18 Beav. 306; 2 Eq. Rep. 766; 23 L. J. Ch. 860; 18 Jur. 442; 2 W. R. 314; 52 E. R. 145.

1593. ———. ]—An agent entered into an agreement with his principal to sell only the manufactured goods of the latter. In some cases he in fact sold these goods honestly; in others he made a fraudulent secret profit; in others he sold similar goods of rival manufacturers:—Held: in taking an account of the moneys due to the principal from the agent as a result of the agency, the agent was bound to account for the profits made by him in selling the goods of the rival manufacturers, as these sales had been made by him within scope of his agency.—NITEDALS TAENDSTIK-FABRIK v. BRUSTER, [1906] 2 Ch. 671; 75 L. J. Ch. 798; 22 T. L. R. 724.

SUB-SECT. 14.—AGENT'S DUTY TO DISCLOSE.

See, also, Nos. 1555-1558, ante.

1594. Agent's interest & duty must not conflict.]—An agent employed to settle a debt, which his principal is liable to discharge, must settle it on the best terms he can obtain, & he is precluded from taking the benefit of purchasing the debt, for this would be a violation of his duty to his principal, or at least would hold out a temptation to violate that duty (per LORD COTTENHAM, C.).—REED v. NORRIS (1837), 2 My. & Cr. 361, at p. 374; 40 E. R. 678.

1595. ———. ]—In 1804, A., tenant for life under a settlement with a power to grant leases for 21 years, concurred with B., the next tenant for life, in an agreement to grant to the steward & solr. of A. a lease of part of the lands, etc., in settlement for 21 years absolute at a rent fixed upon a valuation, which omitted to estimate certain rights of common annexed to the lands, on the alleged ground that those rights were disputed by copyholders of the manor. In 1809, B. having become tenant for life on the death of A., executed a lease, according to agreement. In 1810, under an Act for inclosure of waste lands, a large allotment of the waste was made in respect of the lands leased, the rights of common having been admitted. B. died in 1816, when the reversion of the lands, subject to the lease, vested in C., who accepted the rent reserved till 1821, when he filed a bill to set aside the lease:—Held: the relief was barred by acts of confirmation & acquiescence. Semble: considering the facts & relation of the parties, the lease might have been avoided on the ground of fraud (or mistake), if the persons interested had questioned the lease recently after the transaction.—SELSEY (LORD) v. RHOADES (1827), 1 Bli. N. S. 1; 4 E. R. 774.

1596. Agent taking bottomry bond.]—It is not universally true that an agent cannot, in any circumstances, take a bottomry bond from the master of a vessel consigned to his charge, though it does not follow that in all cases he has the same right to take a bond as a person wholly unconnected with the ship. An agent must not take advantage of his character of agent to take a bond which by discharge of his duty as agent would have been avoided.

PART VIII. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 14.

1594 i. Agent's interest & duty must not conflict.]—Pltf. went abroad in 1838, having appointed M. his agent, & returned in 1842, gave a confession of judgment to B., then went abroad again & did not return until 1855. M. obtained an assignment of the judgment & in 1852 issued execution. Under that execution the sheriff sold the land to M. Deft. had gone into possession under an agreement made by M. in 1846 to sell the land to deft. After a special verdict, a new trial was ordered to see if M. had, whilst acting as pltf.'s agent, purchased pltf.'s land.—SUTHERLAND v. WHIDDEN (1856), 2 Thom. 410.—CAN.

1594 ii. ———. ] Unless in exceptional cases, where both parties are aware that a double commission is charged & agree to it, an agent is not entitled to commission from both vendor & purchaser, as he must not place himself in a position causing a conflict between duty & interest; & this principle applies to an exchange of lands. A custom by which a land broker would be entitled to commission from both parties to an exchange, such custom being in contravention of the general law, is bad.—BRADLEY v. COAFFEE (1914), 28 W. L. R. 530.—CAN.

k. ———. Landlord's agent taking conveyance from tenant.]—A landlord's agent procured from a tenant a conveyance of his farm in suspicious circumstances. The ct., not being satisfied with the evidence, after a lapse of five years directed an issue to inquire whether the deed had been obtained by fraud, duress, or undue influence.—SMITH v. WARD (1831), Hayes & Jo. 705.—IR.

l. ———. Agent acting for both parties.]—Defts., other than H., were engaged in a real estate brokerage business, & were acting for H. in connection with the sale of a farm belonging to him. Pltfs. approached deft. with a view to purchasing a property, & defts. introduced the farm belonging to H., but did not disclose the fact that they were authorised by H. to sell & that they were to receive a commission:—Held: (1) pltfs. were entitled to repayment of all moneys paid under the agreement; (2) evidence that it was a custom of the real estate brokerage business for the vendor to pay commission, or that pltfs. in previous transactions had bought property but paid their agents no commission, was not sufficient to charge pltfs. with knowledge of defts.' relationship with H., or their interest in the sale.—CLARK v. HEWORTH (1915), 33 W. L. R. 175; 9 W. W. R. 802.—CAN.

m. ———. ]—In an action to set aside a sale of land made by pltf. through O. Co., land agents, to defts.:—Held: O. Co. led pltf. to confide in them as his agents to get the best price & to allow them to close the bargain on his behalf, without disclosing to him that they were simultaneously acting for & advising deft. in the purchase, & this was a fraud on pltf.: McPherson v. Watt, 3 App. Cas. 254, & Dunne v. English, L. R. 18 Eq. 524, apld. & folld.—WOLFSON v. OAKFIELD (1911), 18 W. L. R. 449; 2 D. L. R. 110; affd. 20 W. L. R. 484.—CAN.

n. ———. Agent to sell subsequently becoming also agent of purchaser—Sole duty to seller.]—The same person cannot be agent for both parties & act in one sense as an arbitrator between them, unless he acts as the common agent with the full knowledge & approval of the parties. If a party, being employed as agent of one party, undertakes, without the most complete knowledge & approval of that party, to act in any way for the other party in the same matter, that person is in no sense acting as agent for both parties. He is, at the instance of one party, betraying or neglecting the interest of the other party, to whom alone his full & complete duty is owing.

G. appointed H., the managing director of B., his agent to purchase deft.'s farm. The authority was "to offer on my behalf to the owners thereof, & if accepted, to purchase for me at the sum of £12 per acre, or as much under as you can get the owners to accept," certain land. Prior to obtaining this authority H. had obtained from deft. an authority to sell the land at £12 an acre, but upon receipt of G.'s authority he approached deft. again & ultimately obtained from him a reduction of 10s. an acre in the price, & better terms as to the deposit & cash payment on completion. He did not acquaint deft. with the fact that G. would have given £12 an acre. Deft., on ascertaining the facts, refused to complete, & pltf. sued for specific performance should be refused. H. having acted inconsistently with & in breach of his duty as agent of deft.—GALLOWAY v. PEDERSEN (1915), 34 N. Z. 513.—N. Z.

A British ship, the owner of which resided at New Brunswick, on leaving the harbour of New York for England, got upon the bar & was forced to return to New York to repair, & the master, being without funds to defray the charges, advertised for a loan on bottomry & gave a bond for the amount required to a party at New York who had acted for several years as agent for the owner, though not regularly appointed, & had refused to make advances on personal credit:—Held: although such party had the character of agent, he was not thereby in the circumstances prohibited from tendering & taking a bond.—THE ORIENTAL (1850), 3 Wm. Rob. 243; 7 Notes of Cases, 476; 14 Jur. 336.

1597. Agent carrying on separate business.—A manager of a bank is not entitled to grant himself the same accommodation in respect of his separate trade which he might obtain from an independent banker; it would be necessary for him, in order to sustain any such transaction, to show that he had brought the whole circumstances fully & fairly before the directors. It is not enough to show merely he had not concealed anything. If he could show he had so brought the circumstances to their knowledge, or that the directors had sanctioned the proceeding subsequently, such a proceeding might be permitted to stand.

C. was appointed manager of a bank, with permission to carry on his separate trade as a merchant. In that character he dealt with the bank of which he was manager on the terms usual between banker & customer. Upon one transaction in his separate trading, being possessed of certain bills for his own benefit, drawn & accepted by two firms reputed to be in good credit, he deposited them with the bank (not indorsing them), & obtained an advance upon them. The transaction was not a discount, but a loan. The drawers & acceptors of the bills became bkpt.:—Held: C. liable to make good the loss.—GWATKIN v. CAMPBELL (1854), 1 Jur. N. S. 131.

1598. Broker underwriter.—A broker employed to place an insurance cannot himself underwrite part of the risk unless he makes full disclosure to the principal who employs him.—GLASGOW ASSURANCE CORPN., LTD. v. SYMONDSON & Co. (1911), 101 L. T. 251; 27 T. L. R. 215; 11 Asp. M. L. C. 583; 16 Com. Cas. 109.

1599. Joint adventurers.—In English law it is one of the clearest incidents of a joint adventure that one of the adventurers cannot supply his own goods to the adventure without making full disclosure of his interest to his co-adventurer. Any partner, co-adventurer, agent, or other person in any position of trust, must make no profit out of his position without his principal's knowledge; & in particular cannot sell his own goods to his principal without fully disclosing his own personal interest. This does not turn on knowledge or bad faith, or how soon the truth is discovered, or what has happened, or commercial damage to the principal.

Pltf., an Austrian merchant, & defts., English coal exporters, entered into an agreement to sell on joint account English coal to the Austrian Govt., & in 1910 they secured a contract to supply that Govt. with 20,000 tons of coal of certain named qualities, deliverable in 1911. During 1911 the price of coal rose considerably; pltf. & defts. foresaw a heavy loss in carrying out the Austrian contract; & they agreed in July, 1911, that completion of the contract should be left entirely in the hands of defts., who could act as they thought best, without taking pltf. into account in any way, & that pltf. should pay defts. £1,000 as his share of the loss, that sum to be reduced by any reductions in loss in the event of permission being received from the Austrian Govt. to supply coals of an inferior quality. In completing the Austrian contract permission was obtained to supply P. coal, which was not one of the named coals, but of somewhat inferior quality, & defts. supplied a certain quantity of that coal which they had purchased in 1910 at 14s. 6d. per ton; this was put by them into the joint account between them & pltf. at 17s. 3d. per ton, the current market price when the coal was shipped to Austria; they had, however, to purchase other coal at the market price to maintain their deliverable stocks. In a claim by pltf. for an account:—Held: (1) defts., although they acted in good faith, were not entitled without the fullest disclosure to pltf. to sell their own coal to the adventure; (2) they could not bring into the joint account the P. coal at a larger price than that at which they purchased it.—KUHLERZ v. LAMBERT BROTHERS, LTD. (1913), 108 L. T. 565; 18 Com. Cas. 217.

1600. — Transaction in ordinary course of business.—In 1879 pltf., timber merchants, purchased through defts., timber brokers, timber to the value of about £70,000 & placed it in the hands of defts. for sale on a del credere commission & received £2,000 as the net profit on the whole transaction. Defts. had sold the timber to M., their debtor for large sums, & pltf. alleged M. was insolvent & the sale was made under an arrangement that he should purchase the timber, but that defts. should again sell the timber as for M., & receive all the proceeds thereof, & out of the profits realised by the transaction should repay themselves the debt due to them from M., & that defts. thereby recouped themselves to the amount of about £15,000. That sum pltf. claimed as profit due to them under the agency contract existing between them & defts. M.'s name, as purchaser of the timber, was not disclosed by defts. Defts. alleged they had acted in the ordinary way of business; that pltf. & M. both happened to be customers of theirs, & the comparatively large profit made on behalf of M. was due to accidental causes; that the £15,000 was, in the ordinary course of business, placed to the credit account of M., & subsequently, at his request, placed against his debit account, & they had never concealed M.'s name from pltf., but (as they proved) that it was not according to the usual course of business to state the buyer's name in the sold note supplied to the purchaser. Pltf. contended that the circumstance of M.'s indebtedness was calculated to bias defts.' judgment in fixing the price at which M. should buy; that the question in all such cases was whether the agent had a personal interest in the purchase being carried out, in which case the agent was bound, in discharge of his duty, to disclose such personal interest to his principal:—Held: (1) defts. had acted honestly throughout these transactions, & in good faith, & had given pltf. the best advice in their power; (2) a mere expectation on the part of defts. that the timber would be dealt with according to the course of business with M. in former transactions was not such dealing on the part of defts. as the ct. considered unfair to pltf.—GUY v. CHURCHILL (1889), 62 L. T. 132, C. A.

Where a sum of £12,000 was paid in pursuance of such a stipulation, the party receiving it was declared to hold it in trust for the partnership.—FAWCETT v. WHITEHOUSE (1829), 1 Russ. & M. 132; 8 L. Pltf. at the time of such contract being made was in a position of trust in relation to the co., having been employed by them as engineer to advise as to repairs, & the contract between defts. & pltf. was made in part in consideration of a promise that pltf. would use his influence with the co. to induce them to accept defts.' tender for repairs of the ships. The jury found the contract, though calculated to bias the mind of pltf., had not, in fact, done so, & he had not in consequence thereof given less beneficial advice to the co. as to defts.' tender than he would otherwise have done:—Held: pltf. could not maintain an action for commission under the contract, on the ground that, even although pltf. had not been induced to act corruptly, the consideration for the contract was corrupt.—*HARRINGTON v. The purchase was completed & the solr. sued vendor for the commission, who paid £210 into ct., which the solr. accepted. On a summons to tax the solr.'s bill by purchaser's exors., the latter sought to surcharge the solr. with the £210:—Held: though in the circumstances vendor could have resisted payment of the commission, the solr., having received it with full knowledge on purchaser's part, was not bound to account to him for it.—Re HASLAM & HIER EVANS, [1902] 1 Ch. 765; 71 L. MOLYNEUX* (1847), 8 L. T. O. S. 318.

1612. — Insurance.—The rule that an agent must account to his principal for any secret profit made in the course of his agency does not apply where the principal is aware that the agent is remunerated by some allowance from other parties, but is under a misapprehension (not misinformed) as to its actual extent.

A marine insurance co. in New York employed merchants in this country as its agents to settle claims & grant insurances & to effect reinsurances. A percentage was paid by the co. on the first two classes of business, but the agents were remunerated as to the reinsurances by brokerage allowed to them by the underwriters. They charged the co. the full amount of the premiums, but were allowed by the underwriters (1) 5 per cent. on the premiums, & (2) 12 per cent. on the balance (if any) payable by them to the underwriters on the account for the year, crediting the underwriters with the premiums (less the 5 per cent.), & debiting losses. This was according to the usual custom on the credit system as between brokers & underwriters, but the 12 per cent. allowance was for some time unknown to the co.:—Held: the agents entitled to both percentages.—*GREAT WESTERN INSURANCE CO. A close examination of the judgment in Great Western Insce. Co. of New York v. Cunliffe will show that James, L.J., laid stress upon the fact that for nearly three years after what was complained of was brought to their knowledge no objection was raised by the parties; where there is knowledge, where there is conduct from which the receipt of profit of whatever kind may be taken to be known to the principal & acquiesced in by him, then of course there is neither immorality nor can there be in point of law a right to recover (KENNEDY, J.).

ment that a policy should be effected on her life & premiums be secured on the mtged. property. In an action for redemption the chief clerk found that £173 19s. 1d., "premiums paid on policies," was due from pltf. to defts. L., a solr. & agent to all the parties, paid the premiums to the insurance offices, receiving from them 5 per cent. commission. On a summons to vary the chief clerk's certificate by the amount of the commission, on the ground the "premiums paid on policies" only amounted to £165 5s.:—Held: (1) after the premiums had been paid to the insurance offices, the mtgor. had no interest in them; (2) the insurance offices received the premiums, & paid the commission out of them to their own agent; (3) the variation must be refused.—LEETE v. WALLACE (1888), 58 L. T. 577.

1615. — — — — ——Def't. acted as agent for pltf. in procuring a loan upon a reversionary interest, being paid by pltf. a commission on the amount of the loan. It was obtained from an insurance co., & part of the transaction was that pltf.'s life should be insured with the co. The co. paid def't. commission for introducing the insurance:—Held: pltf. not entitled to recover the commission on the policy from def't. on the ground that it was in respect of a separate transaction & pltf. was aware def't. would be paid commission by the co.—NORREYS (LORD) v. HODGSON (1897), 13 T. L. R. 421.

B. Trade Discounts.

1616. Auctioneer Incidental duty to account.—Pltf. employed defts., auctioneers, to sell goods for him by auction upon the terms that they were to be paid a lump sum by way of commission, & were further to be paid "all out-of-pocket expenses," including the expenses of printing & advertising. Defts. in due course sold pltf.'s goods. In rendering their account of the out-of-pocket expenses to pltf. they debited him with the gross amounts of the printer's bill & cost of advertising in the newspapers, they having in fact received discounts both from the printers & newspaper proprietors—a fact of which pltf. had no knowledge. There was evidence of a general custom for printers & newspaper proprietors to deal with auctioneers as principals, & to allow them a trade discount off their retail charges, which they would not allow to the auctioneers' customers if they dealt with them directly; & defts. in omitting to disclose the fact of the discounts to pltf. did so in the honest belief that they were lawfully entitled under the custom to receive the discounts & retain them to their own use:—Held: (1) defts. not entitled to debit pltf. with the gross amounts of printing & advertising bills, as by the terms of employment they were only to be paid their actual out-of-pocket expenses; (2) as they received the discounts without fraud, & as the duty to account correctly for out-of-pocket expenses was merely incidental to & separable from their main duty connected with sale of goods, the omission to disclose receipt of the discounts to pltf. did not disentitle them to retain their commission.—HIPPISLEY (HIPPESELEY) v. KNEEBROTHERS, [1905] 1 K. B. 1; 74 L. J. K. B. 68; 92 L. T. 20; 21 T. L. R. 5; 40 Sol. Jo. 15.

C. Principal's Remedies against Agent.

(a) Recovery of Amount.

1620. Agent liable for amount of bribe.]—Dft. having been authorised by pltf. to purchase on his behalf a particular ship as cheaply as possible, made an arrangement, without pltf.'s knowledge, with vendor's broker, who had a right to retain the excess purchase-money over £8,500, by which deft. purchased the ship for £9,250 & retained for his own use £225, part of the excess:—Held: (1) pltf. was entitled to the amount so retained by deft. as it was a profit acquired by an agent in connection

The board concluded that the case was not made out. In 1879 the co. sued H. to recover the alleged bribe:—Held: (1) the claim was stat.-barred, as time ran from the first notice to the co. of the fraud; (2) the money sought to be recovered was not money of the co.—METROPOLITAN BANK v. 1627. Sub-agent liable to principal for amount of bribe.—A firm of shipowners employed stockbrokers as their agents to obtain an advance for them upon the security of certain vessels. The stockbrokers employed a sub-agent to negotiate the advance. The sub-agent knew that in so acting he was procuring the advance for the shipowners & for their benefit, & was acting in their interests. The sub-agent, without knowledge of either the shipowners or their agents, the stockbrokers, arranged with persons whom he procured to make the advance for payment to him of a commission upon the amount of the advance. Part of such secret commission was paid to the sub-agent:—Held: (1) a fiduciary relation existed between the shipowners & sub-agent which entitled them to recover from him so much of the secret commission as had actually been received by him; (2) as regards so much of the secret commission as remained unpaid, the persons making the advance not being parties to the action, the shipowners were entitled to no further declaration than that the sub-agent should become indebted to them for any further sums as & when he should receive same.—*POWELL & THOMAS v. 1628. Agent liable to dismissal—Ship's husband.—A., B., & C., joint owners in a vessel, agreed A. should act as ship's husband & broker, & be entitled to commission on "gross freight," & in case of gross negligence or fraud on A.'s part B. & C. might put an end to the agreement by notice & purchase of A.'s shares. A. effected a charterparty of the vessel, the charterer paying all expenses, & £130 per week for the ship, & £4 a week to A., who in the accounts rendered to B. & C. represented the amount paid as £130 a week only:—Held: (1) concealment of the receipt of the £4 a week was such a fraud on B. & C. that it entitled them to put an end to the agreement; (2) the fraud could not be justified on the ground that, had the charterparty been effected on the usual terms of the owners of the vessel paying the usual expenses of the ship, A. would have been entitled to as large a sum by way of commission on gross freight.—THE PHOEBE (1853), 9 L. As part of his duty he was consulted by defts., & advised them as to insurance of their premises. Without defts.' knowledge he accepted an agency from an insurance co. & received commissions from it in respect of insurances effected by defts. through pltf. upon their premises with the insurance co. The agreement expired, & he entered into a fresh agreement with defts. upon the same terms as to giving his whole time & attention to the business & advising defts. as to insurances upon their premises. At expiration of this agreement he remained in defts.' service without any fresh agreement. He continued during the whole time he acted as defts.' manager without their knowledge to act as agent for the insurance co. & to receive commissions from it upon insurances effected through him upon defts.' premises.—Held: the acceptance by pltf. of the agency & receipt by him of the secret commissions was misconduct which entitled defts. to dismiss pltf. without notice, although under his contract of service he would otherwise have been entitled to 6 months' notice of determination of his employment.—SWALE v. By articles of assocn. it was provided deft. should be managing director for 5 years at the yearly salary mentioned in the agreement, payable quarterly. Afterwards the co. by a written instrument adopted the agreement between the promoter & deft. Dft., on behalf of the co., contracted for construction of certain fishing-smacks, & unknown to the co. took a commission from the shipbuilders on the contract. Several months afterwards pltf. co. at an extraordinary meeting passed a resolution dismissing deft. from his office on the ground of other alleged acts of misconduct, which they were not able to substantiate in the action, being at that time ignorant of his receipt of commission from the shipbuilders. Dft. was a shareholder in an ice co., & a fish-carrying co. which paid, in addition to the ordinary dividends, bonuses to shareholders who were owners of fishing smacks & who employed the cos. in supplying ice & carrying for them. Dft. employed these cos. in respect of pltf. co.'s smacks, & received bonuses as if the smacks were his own. Pltf. co. brought an action against deft. for an account of commissions & bonuses received by him, & for damages for alleged breaches of duty; & deft. counter-claimed for wrongful dismissal & the salary for the quarter which expired before his dismissal:—Held: (1) the receipt of a commission from the shipbuilding co. was good ground for dismissal, although not discovered till after dismissal had taken place, & although it happened several months previously & might have been an isolated act; (2) deft. must account to pltf. co. for bonuses received from the ice & carrying cos. as they had been paid in respect of pltf. co.'s smacks, although pltf. co. could not itself have received the bonuses, not being a shareholder of the cos.; (3) the salary was payable yearly, & not quarterly, & deft. having been dismissed for misconduct, was not entitled to any part of the unpaid salary for the current year of service.—BOSTON DEEP SEA FISHING & ICE CO. v. 1633. — Though principal had means of ascertaining bribe.—Pltf. was employed by defts. as an architect to supervise erection of a building. Pltf. invited tenders for sub-contracts, asking for a commission from the persons tendering on the amount of the tender. After the tenders were accepted, defts. discovered that pltf. was to receive these commissions & at once dismissed him:—Held: (1) the dismissal was justifiable; (2) it was immaterial that existence of the commissions was not fraudulently concealed, & that officers of the co. had had the opportunity of discovering their existence.—TEMPERLEY v. BLACKROD MANUFACTURING CO., LTD. (1907), 71 J. P. Jo. 341.

1634. Conspiracy to defraud.—X., a member of a syndicate, was instructed to get the best charter he could of a steamer. He obtained from Y. (chairman) & Z. (director of the ss. co.) two contracts for the steamer dated the same day, one of which gave Y. a secret commission either as a bribe or for forcing the business through:—Held: X., Y. & Z. were guilty of conspiracy to defraud the syndicate.—R. v. Shortly afterwards the engineer, who was engaged to lay other cables for the works co., agreed with them to lay this cable also for a sum of money to be paid to him by instalments payable by the works co. when they received instalments from the cable co.:—Held: in the circumstances, the agreement between the engineer & the works co. was a fraud, which entitled the cable co. to have their contract rescinded, & to receive back money which they had paid under that contract.

1636. —.—]—Deft.'s agent entered into contract with pltf. to supply 50 wagons for deft.'s use for 5 years, the hire to be paid in money or coals at the then rate of 6s. a ton. Pltf. then paid deft.'s agent a secret commission on the wagons. Before this contract came into operation the agent agreed with pltf. to alter the terms. The supply of wagons was transferred to a co., & deft.'s agent entered into a distinct & independent contract for deft. to supply pltf. with 12,000 tons of coals at 6s. 6d. a ton. When coal was £1 a ton pltf. called on deft. to supply coals at 6s. 6d. under the second contract. Deft. repudiated the contract on the ground that the secret commission was given to the agent to influence his mind in favour of pltf. & to the prejudice of deft. & that it did so influence the agent:—Held: if a party with whom an agent is negotiating on the part of another agrees to give, or does give, the agent a secret gratuity, & that gratuity does influence the mind of the agent directly or indirectly in assenting to anything prejudicial to his employer in making the contract, the contract is vitiated.—SMITH v. SORBY (1875), 3 Q. B. D. 552 n.; 30 J. P. 100, 100.

1637. —.—]—Purchaser's agent received a secret commission of 10 per cent. from the seller, & this was added to the price to be paid by purchaser:—Held: (1) a surreptitious bargain between the seller & purchaser's agent to enhance the price is a fraud on purchaser; (2) if the seller gave a bribe to purchaser's agent that was in law a fraud that defeated the contract.—HOUGH v. BOLTON (1885), 1 T. L. R. 606.

provided they were passed as sound by B.'s veterinary surgeon. They were so certified, & B. sent a cheque to S. for the price. Subsequently the horses were found unsound & were returned & the cheque stopped. In the course of an action on the cheque it was found that B.'s veterinary surgeon had accepted a bribe from S.:—Held: (1) it was immaterial to inquire what effect the bribe had on deft.'s agent; (2) the offer & acceptance invalidated the certificate, & pltf. could not recover under the contract which depended on the validity of the certificate.—SHIPWAY v. BROADWOOD, [1899] 1 Q. B. 309; 68 L. J. Q. B. 360; 80 L. T. 11; 15 T. L. R. 145, C. A.

1639. —.—]—Unless agent's duty & interest not in conflict.]—The rule that a purchaser can rescind a contract of sale entered into by his agent on his behalf, on the ground that the agent has received a secret commission from the vendor, only applies where the agent has by reason of the receipt of the commission an interest conflicting with his duty to his principal.

Where one of the purchasers of land, who acted as agent for all the purchasers in negotiating the purchase, received a commission on the amount of the purchase-money from vendor, but his interest was to obtain the land as cheaply as possible:—Held: purchasers not entitled to rescind.—ROWLAND v. CHAPMAN, ROWLAND v. CORRIE, ROWLAND v. BRANDRETH (1901), 17 T. L. R. 669.

1640. —.—]—Unless confirmation with full knowledge.]—Deft., through his agent, entered into a contract with pltf.s, shipbuilders, for the building of a ship. Before the contract was arranged pltf.s secretly agreed to give a commission to deft.'s agent. At an interview which afterwards took place between pltf.s & deft. as to the payment by him of money due under this contract, pltf.s informed him they had agreed to pay commission to the agent, & deft., after being so informed, paid them a small sum on account. Pltf.s afterwards brought an action to recover the balance due to them:—Held: (1) pltf.s had not shown that there had been a full disclosure to deft. of all the circumstances in connection with pltf.s' agreement to pay commission to the agent; (2) there had been no such confirmation by deft. of his contract as debarr'd him from repudiating it.—BARTHAM v. LLOYD, No. 1007, ante.

1641. Principal may recover bribe.]—H. employed certain persons to buy cigars at best trade rates. They bought large quantities from M., who paid them a secret commission of 2½ per cent. at Christmas & Midsummer each year. When H. found this out he sued M. for the total amount of the bribes:—Held: the ascertained amount of bribes given by a vendor to the buying agent of purchaser could be recovered by purchaser from vendor as money had & received. Semble: as 1638 i. —.—]—Although bribe only discovered in course of action.]—Deft. was induced by his agent to agree to buy pltf.'s farm for $1,850, although pltf.'s price for it was only $1,800. On discovering a shortage of acreage he asked to have the agreement cancelled & his money returned, but this was refused. He then, on the advice of same agent, raised a crop on the farm & remained in possession for over a year, but refused to make the further payments agreed on. Pltf. then brought an action to have the agreement cancelled & the money he had received forfeited. At the trial it came out that pltf. had paid the agent $50 out of the money paid by deft., who asked to have the agreement cancelled & his money refunded to him:—Held: on account of the newly discovered secret payment by pltf. to deft.'s confidential agent, deft. had the right to ask for cancellation of the sale & repayment of the $250, with costs of action. *Panama, etc. Co. v. to him, agreed that B. was to have a commission on the transaction from C. In a suit by C. for specific performance:—Held: the agreement between B. & C. as to commission being before B. was constituted A.'s agent did not avoid the contract & C. was entitled to a decree. *Hussey v. 1642. —Amount recoverable.]—Pltf., owner of a mine, agreed with a person who was, though pltf. did not then know it, a director of & agent for defts., a co., that the director should have an option of finding a purchaser for the property, & should, if successful, be paid as commission 10 per cent. of the price obtained. The director arranged a sale to defts.; before the contract was entered into, or the commission had become payable, pltf. became aware of the director's position with regard to defts.:—Held: pltf. having completed the contract without disclosing to defts., as purchasers, the agreement to pay commission to their agent, any part of the agreed commission remaining in pltf.'s hands could be recovered from him by defts. as money had & received to their use.

By a second agreement between pltf. & the director, made before commission became due, an immediate payment of a sum less than that originally agreed on was substituted. Defts. discovered the existence of the two agreements as to commission & payment to the director, & they demanded of & received from him, in satisfaction of all claims against him, the amount he had received from pltf.:—Held: (1) defts. were not bound by the agreement as to the reduction of amount of commission; (2) notwithstanding their receipt from the director of the reduced amount of commission, they were entitled to recover balance from pltf.—GRANT v. GOLD EXPLORATION & DEVELOPMENT SYNDICATE, LTD., [1900] 1 Q. B. 233; 69 L. J. Q. B. 150; 82 L. T. 5; 48 W. R. 280; 16 T. L. R. 86; 44 Sol. Jo. 100, C. A.

1643. —& damages for loss.]—A gas co., S., employed a manager, H., to examine tenders for coal & advise them thereon. H. arranged with contractors, L., to pay him 1s. a ton commission on all contracts recommended by H. to S., & for L. to increase the prices of their tenders by 1s. a ton in order to pay the 1s. a ton secret commission to H. When S. discovered the fraud they agreed with H. that he should give them information & evidence that would help them in actions they would take against L. & others to recover damages for loss sustained in consequence of the frauds, that H. should guarantee that S. should recover £10,000 in the actions, & that H. should deposit securities for £10,000 against this guarantee. S. sued L., who pleaded that this agreement between S. & H. made them joint tortfeasors & that the action was barred thereby:—Held: this was not so, & the facts relied on afforded no defence to the action.—SALFORD CORPN. v. LEVER, No. 1626, ante.

1644. —What facts principal must prove.]—Deft. agreed to buy an estate for £16,000. On the following day A. offered to sell the estate within a week for £22,000 if deft. would give A. half the profit, & A. sold the estate for that sum to pltf. co. without disclosing the arrangement that had been made, & received £3,000 from deft. Deft. was not a director of & was in no fiduciary position with regard to the co., but knew that A. was a director. In an action against deft. to recover £6,000 or in the alternative £3,000:—Held: the action failed, as on the evidence the ct. could not find (1) that the agreement with A. was made in the expectation that he would be induced to persuade the co. to buy at an improper price; (2) that when deft. found that the co. was to be purchaser, or when the contract with the co. was entered into, or before it was carried out, deft. had reason to believe A. had concealed the arrangement with deft. from the co. & had thereby induced the co. to enter into an improper bargain.—LANDS ALLOTMENT CO. v. BROAD (1895), 2 Mans. 470; 13 R. 699.

Annotation:—Distd. Grant v. Gold Exploration & Development Syndicate, [1900] 1 Q. B. 233, C. A. The case of Lands Allotment Co. v. Broad is rather obscurely reported on the facts, & it seems possible that the learned judge may have inferred that the fact that their managing director was receiving a commission was known to pltf. co.; but if it does decide that a vendor, who pays a bonus to a person, whom he knows to be the agent of a purchaser, with a view to influence the sale & does not disclose the fact to the principal, can defend the transaction when impeached by averring that he thought the agent was so respectable a person that he would disclose it himself, I think it is contrary to principle (COLLINS, L.J.).

The value of rupee paper afterwards became considerably less, but L. held for many months what deft. had sold to him, & ultimately re-sold it at a loss of £43,000.—Held: the measure of damages was not the amount of the loss ultimately sustained by L., but the difference between the price which he paid for the rupee paper & that which he would have received if he had resold it in the market forthwith after purchasing it.—*WADDELL v. 1655. Agent making incorrect statements to principal.—Dft., acting as agent, induced pltf. to purchase of C. the goodwill of a public-house upon a misrepresentation as to the daily "takings" of the house. Pltf., finding he had been deceived, sued C. for the deceit, without communicating with deft., but failed in his action, because he could not show C. had made, or authorised any one else to make, misrepresentation upon the subject. He then sued deft. & obtained a verdict, including the sum he had lost by resale of the goodwill, a sum for personal loss & inconvenience, & a further sum of £181, costs of the action against C. which failed.—Held: (1) he was not entitled to recover the money paid as costs of the action against C., the damage not being the natural & proximate result of deft.'s act; (2) the damages must be reduced by that amount.—RICHARDSON v. DUNN (1860), 8 C. B. N. S. 655; 30 L. J. C. P. 44; 2 L. T. 430; 8 W. R. 582; 141 E. R. 1223.

1656. — [Where an agent employed to conduct negotiations for his principals makes an incorrect statement to them that he has concluded a contract on their behalf, the measure of damages for his breach of duty is the loss actually sustained by the principals in consequence of the misrepresentation, & does not include profits the principals might have made had it been true.]

Resps. employed applts. to find freight at a certain rate per ton for one of resps.' ships. Applts. reported they had concluded a bargain for the charter of the vessel. In fact, no bargain had been concluded; differences applts. had hoped to get rid of existed & proved invincible. Three days after the report of the transaction resps. learned that the proposed charterers had refused to proceed with the charter. On receiving this information resps. made no effort to look for an equally advantageous freight, but used their ship under a current contract at a much lower rate per ton. Resps. brought an action against the alleged charterers, & then against applts., claiming in effect the difference between the two rates of freight as damages.—Held: (1) the main part of the claim was untenable; (2) resps. were entitled to damages for trouble they had incurred, outlays on telegrams, etc.; (3) they were also entitled to expenses of their action against the alleged charterers down to the closing of the record.—*SALVESEN & Co. v. 1657. — [A principal who is induced by an agent's negligence to enter into an adventure from which loss ensues is entitled to recover from the agent the amount he has actually lost, together with compensation for his loss of time. But the principal cannot add to that loss the profits he might have made if he had his time or money at his disposal instead of having embarked in the adventure which has miscarried.]

Defts., theatrical agents, obtained an engagement for pltf. at a music hall, negligently misrepresenting to her the amount of the weekly takings upon which her remuneration was based. The City Ct. Judge awarded pltf. (inter alia) a sum of £20 as damages. The defts. appealed to the Div. Ct., contending that that sum had been awarded for loss of profits & not for loss of time, & was bad in law. The Div. Ct. dismissed the appeal:—Held: there was evidence upon which the City Ct. Judge could award pltf. the £20 for her loss of time.—JOHNSTON v. BRAHAM & CAMPBELL, [1917] 1 K. B. 586; 86 L. J. K. B. 613; 116 L. T. 188; 61 Sol. Jo. 233, C. A.; aff. [1916] 2 K. B. 529.

1658. Agent to take charge of yacht—Negligence.]—Defts., agents at Southampton, where pltf.'s yacht lay, had written to pltf. inclosing their terms for taking charge of the yacht, viz., "1d. per ton per week, as the charge for taking entire charge of the vessel." Defts. also said they would undertake the duty of sending a man to look after the moorings, etc. A storm came on, in which the yacht broke from its moorings, & ran against another vessel, doing it damage. The yacht was libelled in the Admiralty Ct. & condemned, on the ground that it had not been properly secured. In an action to recover the amount which pltf. had been compelled to pay, the jury found defts. had been negligent:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover.—HOLMES v. 1659. Agent wrongfully transferring principal's shares to himself in payment of debt due by principal.]—Deft., the London agent of pltf., a merchant at Bombay, having a claim against him, partly for a debt, not disputed, & partly for a liquidated demand on a guarantee, which was disputed, wrongfully transferred to himself certain shares of pltf.'s, under a power of attorney, in satisfaction of his supposed claim. Pltf. sued him for the improper transfer:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover the full value of the shares.—DANTRA v. STIEHEL (1863), 3 F. & F. 951.

1660. Agent to sell—Failure to collect price.]—Defts. being employed as agents for pltf.s, a foreign co., to negotiate sales of candles for them in this country, conveyed to them an order from S. for 2,500 cases, to be delivered in London "f.o.b. export ship: 2½ per cent. discount against bill at 3 days' sight; goods, invoice, & draft for acceptance to be sent to us." Pltf.s did not in terms accept this proposal, but wrote to defts. instructing them not to part with the goods out of their posses- sion or control until they had received the price thereof from S. Defts. informed S. that pltf.s accepted the order on condition that he handed them (defts.) a cheque in exchange for the bill of lading, & to this S. assented. On the arrival of the goods in London, defts. caused them to be transhipped on board a vessel called the Laurel (named by S.), bound for Melbourne, taking the mate's receipt in their own names. They afterwards tendered that document to S. & demanded payment, which he promised to make on the following Saturday. S. failed to pay according to his promise, & the Laurel sailed to Melbourne with the goods on board:—Held: the proper measure of damages was the value of the goods.—STEARINE KAARSEN FABRIEK GOUDA Co. v. 1661. Agent to distrain—Excessive distress.]—Deft. was employed by pltf. to levy a distress for rent on the goods of pltf.'s tenant for £15. Deft. realised £20 11s. & deducted £6 1s. for costs & charges of the distress, which was more than was allowed by Distress (Costs) Act, 1813 (c. 93). The tenant claimed damages from pltf. for excessive distress, & pltf. paid him £6 1s.:—Held: pltf. was entitled to recover from deft. the amount pltf. had paid the tenant in satisfaction of his claim for excessive distress.—MEGSON v. Deft. failed to sell more than about two hundred of the lots, & pltf. sued for damages:—Held: the measure of damages was the amount which M. would have realised out of the lots unsold or out of sales not carried out, if these had all been sold, less the actual value of the lots remaining on M.'s hands.—INLAND INVESTMENT Co. v. Defts.' manager, in evidence, stated that K. had instructed him to offer £4 5s. per acre, & only to offer £4 7s. 6d. if business could not be effected at the lower price. In pursuance of these instructions defts.' manager submitted an offer of £4 5s. to pltf., withholding the offer of £4 7s. 6d., & pltf. accepted the offer. Pltf. sued defts. for damages for the loss sustained owing to defts.' breach of duty:—Held: (1) the conclusion to be drawn from the authority was that K. was ready to pay £4 7s. 6d. for the property, & that if defts.' manager had not accepted & acted on instructions from K. he would have agreed to give that price; (2) pltf. was therefore entitled to succeed.—CHOLMONDELEY v. Opposite the signature of M. appeared the signature of pltf., apparently as a witness to M.'s signature, although not so stated in the memorandum:—Held: pltf.'s signature was only as witness; & there was no memorandum, to satisfy the stat., of a contract to pay him a commission, the person to whom "the 1676. — — — — — Even though work not done.]—Pltf. was employed by deft. to let a farm. The tenant agreed to purchase the farm stock upon deft.'s valuation. Pltf. claimed, inter alia, commission on the price of the stock, but deft. refused to pay it on the ground that he had made no valuation:—Held: (1) the charge was the customary charge, whether or not the valuation was done by the agent; (2) it was a reasonable charge, seeing pltf. might have been required to make the valuation.—TURNER v. REEVE (1901), 17 T. L. R. 592.

1677. — — — — — From agent acting on principal's instructions.]—A., a supercargo, sailed to C. in charge of a ship called the M., his commission being 5 per cent. Some time after his departure his principals despatched another ship called the W. to C., with instructions to A. to find a cargo for her & to consider her "in one turn" with the M., & offering him in respect of this second ship a commission of 2½ per cent. A. wrote his principals entitled to such commission by the custom of trade on the Clyde:—Held: by the custom of trade the broker was entitled, in the absence of special arrangement, to commission at the rate of 1 per cent., & defender had failed to prove that this right had been waived by pursuer.—WALKER, DONALD & Co. v. BIRRELL, STENHOUSE & Co. (1883), 21 Sc. L. R. 252.—SCOT.

1671 vii. — — — — —.]—By a contract in writing for the sale of a hotel it was provided that, in case the transfer of the licence should be refused by the licensing bench owing to objections to purchaser, vendor should be entitled to deduct the agent's commission from the moneys paid under the contract, & that the balance should be refunded to purchaser by vendor. £500 was paid as part purchase-money. The sale having gone off owing to objections of purchaser he brought an action to recover the £500, & vendor paid £450 into ct., claiming to be entitled to retain £50 as agent's commission. Evidence was given on behalf of the purchaser by hotel brokers, who said their charge in such cases was £5 5s. or £10 10s.:—Held: there was evidence from which the jury might find what was a reasonable sum to be deducted as agent's commission.—RESCHE, LTD. v. ALLAN (1911), 13 C. L. R. 194.—AUS.

rejecting the 2½ per cent. commission, but notwithstanding this proceeded to load the W., that course being in his view the best for his principals:—Held: as he had acted on the instructions of his principals in loading the W. he was bound by their offer as to commission & could not recover more than 2½ per cent. in respect of the cargo of that ship.—MOORE v. MAXWELL (1843), 2 Car. & Kir. 554.

1678. — Broker employed by court—Broker acting as trustee.—A broker, having taken an assignment of several cargoes in trust to sell them on their arrival, & out of the proceeds to repay himself the amount of his advances, took possession of some of the cargoes, & sold them under the power in the deed, while the rest were sold under an order made in a suit instituted by him to enforce his security, by which it was directed that they should be sold by him in such manner & at such time as he & the receiver in the cause should agree, & in the event of their differing, then as the master should direct:—Held: in the latter sales, he was entitled to the usual commission allowed to brokers employed by the ct.; but in the former, he was not entitled to any commission, having sold as trustee.—ARNOLD v. GARNER (1847), 2 Ph. 231; 16 L. J. Ch. 329; 9 L. T. O. S. 289; 11 Jur. 339; 41 E. R. 931.

1680. ——A contract between a principal & an agent for sale of goods by the latter under which the agent is not only entitled to a commission, but also to retain any profits on the sales beyond an agreed price, requires the clearest possible evidence to support it, being inconsistent with the ordinary relation of principal & agent.—*Re SIMPSON, Ex p. 1681. — Share of profits.—An agreement between A., a merchant, & B., a broker, that B. should purchase goods for A., & in lieu of brokerage, should receive a certain proportion of profits arising from sale, & bear a proportion of losses, does not vest in B. any share in the property so purchased, or in proceeds of it, although it may render him liable as a partner to third persons.—SMITH v. WATSON (1824), 2 B. & C. 401; 3 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 751; 2 L. J. O. S. K. B. 63; 107 E. R. 434.

1682. — Right to enforce sale to determine same.—A. & B., for whom land had been purchased by C. with a view to its being resold in building lots, on the land being conveyed to them signed a writing purporting to be a memorandum of an agreement between them relative to the land, by which it was agreed "that they should each advance half the purchase-money & receive interest on the same at 5 per cent., & that they were to have each one-third interest in the purchase & to reserve one-third of the profits arising therefrom for C., in lieu of his commission for purchasing, selling, surveying, valuing, & laying out the land in lots, or any other services that might be required of him; but it was clearly & distinctly understood that C. should have no power or authority whatsoever over the land, & he should not be entitled to receive any compensation therefrom until the whole was sold & paid for." The land having afterwards greatly increased in value, A. & B. refused to recognise C.'s interest in the speculation, & offered him a money compensation for his services. Thereupon C., who had objected from the first to the clause in the memorandum which excluded him from all control, as inconsistent with the original terms for which he had verbally stipulated, filed his bill for an immediate sale of the land:—Held: (1) defts., by repudiating the trust as to C.'s share, had devolved upon the ct. the discretion which they had by the memorandum reserved exclusively to themselves as to the time of sale; (2) C. was entitled to one-third; (3) it must be referred to the master to inquire whether it would be for the benefit of all parties that the land should be sold.—DALE v. HAMILTON (1847), 2 Ph. 266; 16 L. J. Ch. 397; 9 L. T. O. S. 309; 11 Jur. 574; 41 E. R. 945.

1683. — Percentage on net profits — How calculated — Excess profits duty.—Pltf. was engaged as manager of four of the numerous branches of defts.' business, his remuneration being a commission of 15 per cent. of the net profits of those four branches treated as a whole. In computing the net profits of the four branches for the purpose of ascertaining the sum due to factures, A.'s remuneration being fixed at "a total commission of 7½ per cent. on the amount of such sales." On sales by A. purchasers were allowed (in addition to a trade discount) a discount which A. alleged was generally given on prompt payment. From 1891 to 1908, owing, as A. alleged, to a mistake in making up the accounts, these allowances to purchasers were deducted from the commission payable to A. In 1908, a further agreement was entered into whereby the prior agreement between A. & B. was continued & confirmed. After this agreement A. ceased to deduct from his commission any allowances for prompt payment made to purchasers. In 1909, A. brought an action claiming a declaration that, on the true construction of the agreement, he was not bound to deduct discount allowed to purchasers, & also an account & payment of what should be found due under this construction on the sales between 1891 & 1908. B. contended that A. was so bound to deduct, & pleaded the above stat., & claimed an account & payment of the amount payable by A. since 1908:—Held: (1) A. was not bound to deduct the allowances made to purchasers from the commission payable to him under the agreement; (2) A. was entitled to an account & payment of the amount found due on sales during the period of six years prior to the issue of the writ of summons.—*KITCHEN & SONS, LTD. v. 1679 iii. — Principal conducting part of negotiations.—An agent is usually entitled to commission upon the whole of the purchase-money, whether paid in cash or secured by mtge.; but where the owner himself conducted part of the negotiations, a verdict calculated on the cash payment was not disturbed.—*WOLF v. 1685. ———.—[On Mar. 11, 1911, applts. agreed to give resps. an option to purchase on specified terms the properties in suit, & also agreed to pay them a commission on sale & to close the sale by deed & mtge. Resps. duly exercised this option in favour of S., to whom the deed & mtge. were executed. In a suit by applts. to set aside the transaction & recover the property sold on the ground that they had subsequently discovered that S. was a clerk in the office of resps., the latter being the real purchasers, but disqualified as being agents for sale:—Held: resps. were not merely agents to sell. An option to purchase was given to them in plain & unequivocal terms, & the subsequent clause as to a commission was not inconsistent therewith.—KELLY v. ENDERTON, [1913] A. C. 191; 82 L. J. P. C. 57; 107 L. T. 781, P. C.

1686. Agency continued after agreed period.—B., a shipbroker in Liverpool, & C., a shipbroker in London, entered into a contract "exclusively to correspond" with each other in the ports of Liverpool & London respectively in the matter of freight-vessels with iron for the American market, denoting by the term "exclusive correspondence" that each party should have a reciprocal right of refusal of all ships to be engaged by either of them. The commissions received were to be divided in equal moieties between them. In Feb., 1851, B. & C. appointed D. their agent at Havre for chartering American ships in that port to carry cargoes of iron from South Wales to America. This agreement was to continue in force till Jan. 1, 1852, D. to receive half the usual commission, the other half to be divided between B. & C. This business was carried on till 1855, when the question arose as to the terms upon which it was carried on after Jan., 1852, B. contending that the old agreement still continued, in which case he was entitled to a moiety of the net commission, C. insisting that the agreement was at an end, & the usual mode must be adopted, & each receive the commission according to the number of ships he had influenced. B. also claimed, under an agreement dated Jan., 1852, half the net amount of commissions on all vessels chartered by C. to America from London or any other port in England:—Held: (1) the agreement entered into had been continued to be acted on by both parties; (2) B. was entitled to half the net amount of all commissions earned since Jan. 1, 1852.—PEARCE v. LINDSAY (1860), 1 L. T. 456, C. A.

1687 ii. ———.—[An agent employed to buy land for his principal, to attend solely to that principal's interests, & to obtain for him the best bargain he can, is entitled to look to his principal for commission. 1687 iii. ———.—[Pltf., a real estate agent, was charged with the duty of selling certain lands. Deft. promised him that if pltf. put him in communication with the owner, deft. would make it worth a good deal more to pltf. than a mere commission. Pltf. accordingly brought the parties together when it was agreed that at the price named the vendor was not to be responsible for the agent's commission which deft. must take care of. Deft. & pltf. then agreed for payment to the latter of 24 per cent. on the optional price:—Held: deft.'s liability had been accepted in place of that of the vendor & deft. was liable.—*CHAPMAN v. A sale was effected, but H. declined to allow pltf. anything, & defts. refused to pay him anything for his services:—Held: the acceptance by pltf. constituted an agreement by him to abide by the decision of H. to the exclusion of any right of action for the subsequent services upon a quantum meruit.—*CROSBY v. 1684 iii. ———.—[In an action by brokers for commission on the sale by defts. of mining properties (in which they had only an interest) to a purchaser introduced by pltf.:—Held: upon the proper construction of the agreement made in regard to pltf.'s remuneration, they were not entitled to the full sum mentioned therein, but only to 10 per cent. upon the part of the purchase-money representing defts.' interest in the properties sold.—WUTHRAUFF v. BLACK (1911), 19 W. L. R. 437.—CAN.

1684 iv. ———.—[Deft. gave to pltf. a signed memorandum "that in the event of your selling the property described on the opposite side of this card, I agree to pay a commission of 5 per cent." & also "in consideration of your advertising & pushing the sale I agree to list exclusively with you for a period of one month." The property was described as a section & a half, but only one section was sold. Pltf. brought the parties together, took part in the negotiations, & was the direct cause of the sale, & deft. consented to the sale going through for the section, leaving out the half section:—Held: the sale was a new contract in no way referable to the agreement as to commission on a sale for a price in money, & as there had been no contract regarding remuneration to the broker in respect of the transaction which took place, he could not recover either by way of commission or quantum meruit.—*Como v. 1684 v. ———.—With other documents—[Defts. agreed in writing with pltf. to sell to him a certain quantity of land. Pltf. only made one payment on account of this agreement. Defts. thereupon sought to cancel the agreement by reason of pltf.'s default in making the subsequent payments, but an arrangement was come to whereby pltf. agreed to complete the deal up to a certain number of acres, he being released from further obligations. There was evidence that pltf. in making the purchase originally acted not only for himself but for others, & as a matter of fact a letter was written to pltf. on behalf of defts. promising to pay pltf. a commission on each sale as made, the object being that pltf. should obtain something in the nature of a commission without the knowledge of the other persons interested in the purchase:—Held: the arrangement subsequently come to did not cancel the original agreement for sale, but was merely a substitution of a smaller for a larger quantity of land leaving such smaller quantity subject to the terms of the original agreement, & pltf. was entitled to his commission on selling the substituted quantity to a third party.—*WILLOUGHBY v. 1691. Right to remuneration forfeited—Agent acquiring interest in subject-matter.—A person who is employed as agent to sell land cannot, if he himself purchases it, charge his principal with commission on the sale, whether he purchases alone or jointly with others.

A. employed B. to sell building land. B., who was then one of the promoters of a building co., brought an offer from C. & D. for the purchase of the land, & the sale was completed. Subsequently B., C., & D. were registered as members of the co.:

writing, pltf. was to be paid 25 per cent. of the amount received by deft. It was a term of the agreement that no other agent should have power to act without consent of pltf. Deft. himself effected a sale, as it appeared, with the intention & design malâ fide of preventing pltf. from making a commission:—Held: (1) the agency contemplated was not limited to the particular occasion; (2) while there was nothing to prevent a principal himself selling in good faith, here deft. had committed a trick to defraud the agent & had rendered himself liable, not indeed for commission, but for damages. *Simpson v. b. — Principal using offer procured to sell to another.—Deft. employed pltf., real estate agents, to sell his property at a stated price upon a commission of 2½ per cent. Pltf. procured a purchaser able & willing to pay the price & submitted a written offer from him to deft. Deft. had given a written option to L. on the property. This was a mere offer to sell without consideration & in no way prevented deft. from selling to any one else. M., the purchaser procured by pltf., signed an offer to buy, which offer one of pltf. took to deft., who made no objection to it but said he wanted to look into the matter. Deft. desired to use M.'s offer as a lever to move L. to purchase in order to save paying commission. L. bought & deft. telephoned pltf. that he had sold the property to another:—Held: pltf. had done all they were called upon to do when they produced a purchaser able & willing to buy, & it was immaterial whether what they were entitled to was to be regarded as commission quantum meruit or damages, as however the case was put pltf. were entitled to the commission claimed by them. *Topping v. While the goods were in course of delivery, & before the balance of the commission became due, a number of orders for which pltf. received 7½ per cent. were repudiated:—Held: deft. were entitled to a set-off in respect of orders not bonâ fide.—*WAY v. 1692. Recovery of judgment for remuneration—Right to appointment of receiver.—Pltf., having recovered judgment against a co. incorporated in Germany for an account of the commission due to him as sole agent of the co. in the United Kingdom, applied for the appointment of a receiver of the debts due & to become due to the co. from its customers in England. The co. had no place of business in this country & no assets or property which could be taken by any ordinary process of execution; the only assets which it had here were the debts due & to become due from the persons to whom the co. had supplied goods; the co.'s representative had since the judgment called upon them to obtain payment of their accounts, & the co. intended to collect all the moneys due to it in England & thus prevent pltf. from obtaining the fruits of his judgment. Though pltf. knew who the customers of the co. in this country were, he did not know whether any debts were due from them, or the amounts of the debts, if any:—Held: there were special circumstances in the case which rendered it just or convenient to appoint a receiver.—*GOLDSCHMIDT v. It was not disputed that pltf. procured the actual signing of the offer. In an interpleader issue:—Held: though pltf. had acquired his knowledge of the matter while in deft. service, deft. were not entitled as against pltf. to the commission earned as above stated, though they might possibly have a right or claim to commission other than that dealt with in the issue then before the ct.—*RICE v. Right to remuneration forfeited—Agent acquiring interest in subject-matter.—An agent employed to sell certain property sold it ostensibly to B., but the agent had agreed with B. to take a half-share in the property in partnership with B. The property was sold upon terms previously fixed by the principal & the principal thereafter adopted the sale:—Held: the agent was not entitled to commission. Salomons v. Pender (1865), 3 H. & C. 639, fold.—HARGREAVES v. ANDERSON, 8 A. L. R. (1915), Appellate Division, 519.—S. AF.

fact of his having introduced the purchaser to the seller will not be sufficient; but if it appears that such introduction was the foundation on which the negotiation proceeded, the parties cannot afterwards by agreement between themselves withdraw the matter from the broker's hands, & deprive him of his commission. He will be entitled to his commission if he was, up to a certain time, the agent or middle-man between the parties, although the contract be afterwards completed without his instrumentality or interference.—WILKINSON v. MARTIN (1837), 8 C. & P. 1.

1694. —. —.]—Pltfs. being ordered to sell an estate, or to raise money upon it, & being unable to effect a sale, applied to A., by negotiation with whom money was obtained, but without any further interference on the part of pltfs.:—Held: they could not recover more than 5s. per cent. commission for procuring this money.—PRYCE v. WILKINSON (1825), 2 Bing. 470; 10 Moore, C. P. 177; 3 L. J. O. S. C. P. 103; 130 E. R. 388.

1695. —. —.]—To entitle a house agent to recover commission on the sale of a house, he must prove the house was sold through his instrumentality.—WHITE v. LUCAS (1887), 3 T. L. R. 516.

1696. —. —.]—Shipbroker introducing charterer.—If a broker mentions the name of the charterer to the shipowner, & he takes advantage of the information, & concludes the charter himself, without the further intervention of the broker, that does not deprive the broker of his right to his commission (MARTIN, B.).—(COUSINS (COUSINS) v. MITCHESON (1862), 3 F. & F. 236; 1 New Rep. 210.

1697. Entry on books.—Pltfs. were clerical agents, & on being employed to buy or sell livings charged a fee of 3 guineas for entering the particulars in their books & making inquiries, & £5 per cent. upon the purchase-money on a sale being effected. Deft. employed them to sell an advowsement, & as the value was large, they consented to forego the fee of 3 guineas. Deft. having afterwards himself sold the advowson, pltfs. brought an action, & in the first count of the declaration claimed the amount of the commission, etc., as damages for wrongful revocation of the authority to sell, & they also made a claim on a quantum meruit:—Held: they were not entitled to recover on the special count, nor upon the quantum meruit, as there was no evidence of anything done by them which was not ordinarily covered by the fee of 3 guineas.—SIMPSON v. LAMB (1856), 17 C. B. 603; 25 L. J. C. P. 113; 26 L. T. O. S. 203; 2 Jur. N. S. 91; 4 W. R. 323; 139 E. R. 1213.

Deft. placed a house in pltfs.' hands to sell or let. Pltfs. introduced a client to deft., who in the first instance took another house in the neighbourhood, but ultimately purchased deft.'s house from him direct:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to their commission upon the sale of the house.—STEERE v. SMITH (1885), 2 T. L. R. 131.

1699. Introductions made before contract between principal & agent.—In the case of a contract to pay commission on introducing business, the contract applies to introductions made subsequent to the contract & introductions made simultaneously as being part of the same transaction as the contract even though the actual introduction was made a short time before, but it does not apply to an introduction made independently of & before the contract.—SAMUEL v. SANDERS BROTHERS (1880), 3 T. L. R. 145, C. A.

1700. Previous negotiations with third party before employing agent.—Pltfs., being employed by deft. to find a purchaser for the W. estate, introduced A., who ultimately became the purchaser. Deft. refused to pay pltfs. commission on the purchase on the ground that before he had placed the matter were pressing for a close, but pltf. replied "Let them sweat; it will be easier to deal with them after a while." The intending purchasers then met deft. & closed the deal:—Held: because pltf. was not willing or not in a position to perform the entirety of his contract, deft. was not bound to abstain from dealing with a purchaser whom he himself had found, & pltf. not entitled to recover.—THOMSON v. MILLING (1908), 8 W. L. R. 622; 1 Sask. L. R. 150.—CAN.

1700 ii. —. —.]—Pltf. claimed a commission on the sale of land. The land was sold for a price satisfactory to deft., but deft. denied that the purchaser was found by pltf.:—Held: although pltf. did not obtain the purchaser, the latter having been in correspondence with deft. about the land before pltf. had anything to do with him, yet as pltf. assisted the sale, he was entitled to some remuneration for his services, especially as deft. recognised his assistance by asking him to bring the purchaser to him, & pltf. should have half the commission claimed.—MUNROE v. BEISCHL (1907), 8 W. L. R. 63; 1 Sask. L. R. 238.—CAN.

1700 iii. —. —.]—Agents for sale of land for an owner who was already in negotiation with K. to sell it, wrote to K. about the property, & K. asked them to let him know if any one else was likely to purchase. The agents, having found another probable purchaser, suggested to the owner he should let K. know of this. The owner informed K. & thereupon sold to him without communicating with the agents:—Held: the agents were not entitled to commission, the relation of buyer & seller not having been brought about by their act.—MOWLEM v. EXCELS (1898), 17 L. R. 477.—N.Z.

the causa causans of the sale. It is not required that it should be proved that the introduction by the house agent should have formed the purchaser's sole motive, but only that the agent as such materially contributed to the sale. Green v. Bartlett (1863), 32 L. J. C. P. 261; Wilkinson v. Alston (1879), 48 L. J. Q. B. 733, cited.—ROBERTSON v. BURRELL (1899), 6 S. L. T. 368.—SCOT.

1693 vi. —. —.]—In 1899 pltfs. wrote to three engineering firms in Scotland suggesting their amalgamation & offering their services as intermediary. After some negotiations a contract providing inter alia for pltfs.' commission at 2½ per cent. on the price was proposed but never executed. Early in 1900 the firms informed pltfs. the amalgamation would not be proceeded with. In 1903 these three firms were amalgamated, but pltfs. were not employed & they claimed a commission of £34,000, being 2½ per cent. on the purchase price by a co. of the businesses, & alternatively on a quantum meruit:—Held: pltfs.' averments were irrelevant, there being no concluded contract & they had no valid claim for quantum meruit.—VAN LAUN & CO. v. NEILSON, REID & CO. (1904), 41 Sc. L. R. 569.—SCOT.

1700 i. Previous negotiations with third party before employing agent.—T. & H. had had communications with deft. regarding the purchase of certain land belonging to him. About same time deft. received a letter from pltf. inquiring about same land, telling deft. that he had two purchasers in view, but admitted that T. & H. were not one of them. Eventually deft. signed a listing form for the sale, at a commission. Pltf. first heard of T. & H. as probable purchasers from deft. himself. Deft. then told pltf. that T. & H.

agreement pltf. was to procure a loan for deft. & receive a commission if the loan was obtained by him; he negotiated with W. who agreed to furnish the money on getting £10 commission. Meantime deft. borrowed elsewhere:—Held: pltf. had not earned commission in the proper sense.—HEU v. BRODEUR (1883), 6 L. N. 59.—CAN.

1693 ii. —. —.]—An agent for purchase of lumber on commission entered into negotiations with P., which failed. P. & deft. then agreed on terms, & a purchase resulted:—Held: the agent not entitled to commission, the evidence not sustaining his right to it.—BOYDELL v. SNAPE (1855), 6 C. P. 91.—CAN.

1693 iii. —. —.]—Pltf. employed to sell timber by the auteur of deft. tried to effect a sale, & obtained an offer which his principal declined; later the principal wrote to him withdrawing the specifications for the purpose of raising advances on them but telling him he should not have his trouble for nothing, & that the specifications should be returned to him. Subsequently the principal died, & defts. themselves sold:—Held: pltf. not entitled to claim brokerage as he had not effected the sale.—STURBS v. CONROY (1871), 2 Q. L. R. 53.—CAN.

1693 iv. —. —.]—On a claim by defts., as pltfs.' agents in sale of property, for commission:—Held: as defts. could not show that they had brought about a sale, the claim must be dismissed.—SAM CHONG v. LEE (1909) 11 W. L. R. 200.—CAN.

1693 v. —. —.]—A property agent is entitled to commission although the transaction has been taken out of his hands, & has been settled without his direct intervention, in regard to the final contract, if he introduced the parties as buyer & seller, & was in fact in their hands he had been negotiating with A. :—Held : (1) there was nothing in the agreement between plffs. & deft. to prevent commission being payable on the introduction of A. ; (2) the jury was, in the circumstances, justified in inferring the original negotiations with A. had fallen through, & that the property was reintroduced to A.'s attention through the instrumentality of plffs. ; (3) plffs. were entitled to recover.—THOMPSON, RIPPON & Co. v. THOMAS (1895), 11 T. L. R. 304, C. A.

1702. Agent efficient cause of transaction.—In an action by applt. to recover an agreed commission

1702 i. Agent efficient cause of transaction.—An agent to sell property of M. advertised & negotiated with several persons, one of whom, G., he sent to M., but, no sale resulting, M. notified the agent he wished to withdraw the property & occupy it himself. M. paid the agent his account for advertising & two days afterwards sold to G. :—Held : M. liable to the agent for commission claimed of 2½ per cent. on price.—THOMAS v. MERKLEY (1885), 32 L. C. J. 207.—CAN.

1702 ii. —.]—A real estate agent introduced a purchaser who paid a deposit, but afterwards purchased from the principals direct. The agent was not expected to procure, & did not procure, the purchaser to sign any written contract at the time of deposit :—Held : the agent was not entitled to the full remuneration payable on a binding contract, but only to one-half that amount.—BOUGHTON v. HAMILTON PROVIDENT SOCIETY (1895), 10 M. R. 683.—CAN.

1702 iii. —.]—Deft. listed his land with pltf. to effect a sale thereof, pltf. to receive 5 per cent. commission on sale of the land at $10 an acre or over & not to sell under that price without deft.'s consent. Pltf. introduced the agent of P. as a prospective purchaser & P. & his agent inspected the land. The sale was not effected then, but later the land was sold to P. by deft. at a price less than $10 an acre. P. gave evidence that "he was influenced to see the land by having the particulars & knowing the price from pltf." :—Held : pltf. entitled to recover what his services were reasonably worth, as the property was sold through his instrumentality. The fact that P. was aware, from other sources, that the land was for sale did not matter, as P. admitted that he approached deft. in consequence of the information from pltf. —WILKINSON v. ALSON, 48 L. J. Q. B. 133; Green v. Bartlett, 14 C. B. N. S. 681; 32 L. J. C. P. 261, fold. —Prickett v. Judger, 1 C. B. N. S. 96; Mansell v. Clements, L. R. 9 C. P. 139, cited. —FRYMON v. WALKER (1904), 7 Ter. L. R. 204.—CAN.

1702 iv. —.]—A principal employed an agent to sell property at a fixed price, no commission being mentioned. After the agent had found a purchaser, who refused to give the price plus the commission, the principal sold the property direct to the purchaser at the fixed price :—Held : the agent entitled on a quantum meruit to full commission on the fixed price. —WILKINSON v. MARTIN (1937), 8 C. & P. 1, fold. —AIKINS v. ALLAN (1904), 24 C. L. T. 154; 14 Man. L. R. 549.—CAN.

1702 v. —.]—Deft. entrusted pltf. with the sale of property at the price of $65,000, & pltf. procured a purchaser at that price. At the last moment deft. refused to sign the deed of sale, & later, with pltf.'s consent, same purchaser entered into direct negotiations with deft. & bought the property for $75,000, it being specially stipulated in the deed that $3,750 was to be paid to the agent as commission in respect of the sale :—Held : pltf. was the procuring cause of the sale & was not to be deprived of his commission because with his consent the purchaser had continued the negotiations with deft. —CRUIKSHANK v. PRUDHOMME (1897) 3 E. L. R. 23; Q. R. 31 S. C. 313.—CAN.

raunch :—Held : (1) it was not necessary that pltf. should have personally introduced the purchasers to deft. ; (2) pltf. was entitled to recover, as it was through pltf.'s instrumentality that the sale was concluded, & the information given by pltf. at the time was such as should have put deft. upon inquiry as to whether the purchasers were those to whom pltf. had referred :—Mansell v. Clements, L. R. 9 C. P. 139, cited. —INGS v. ROSS (1907), 7 Terr. L. R. 70; 6 W. L. R. 612.—CAN.

1702 vii. —.]—Plffs. claimed commission on the purchase by deft. of a block of land. He had admittedly brought deft. into negotiation with the vendors & was to have been paid a commission of 2 per cent. if the sale was effected, but subsequently pltf. was notified that deft. elected that he would not pay the amount the vendors asked & "as far as he was concerned the deal was off." Later on deft. renewed the negotiations & purchased the property at the figure he had previously refused to pay :—Held : deft.'s letter having been written bona fide, it put an end to the contractual relation which was necessary to found a legal claim for the commission, & pltf. could not recover. —Toulmin v. Millar (1887), 58 L. T. 96, fold. —PHILLIP v. BAUER (1907), 5 W. L. R. 187.—CAN.

1702 viii. —.]—Pltf. introduced some settlers to deft. as a result of which negotiations ensued, which terminated in the purchase by the settlers of several lots of land. In an action by pltf. to recover from deft. the commission which deft. had agreed to allow him :—Held : as the sales had been brought about by pltf.'s efforts he was entitled to recover.—SCHUCHARD v. DRINKIE (1908), 7 W. L. R. 844; 1 Sask. L. R. 18.—CAN.

1702 ix. —.]—Deft. listed his property with plffs., real estate agents, for sale at a price on named terms. Plffs. mentioned the property to F., who there-after negotiated with deft. & concealed from him that plffs. had sent him. Deft. then sold to F. on terms less advantageous than those in the agreement between plffs. & himself. Deft. was not put upon inquiry as to whether plffs. had sent F. to him :—Held : plffs. could recover neither a commission on sale nor anything for services by way of quantum meruit. —Mansell v. Clements (1873), L. R. 9 C. P. 139, & Green v. Bartlett (1863), 14 C. B. N. S. 681, cited. —LOCATORS v. CLOUGH (1908), 17 Man. L. R. 659.—CAN.

1702 x. —.]—Pltf. occupied a shop on property of deft., with whom he had discussed the terms & price of sale of the property, though no general agency to sell had been conferred on him. F. came into the shop & on his inquiring as to the purchase of the property, pltf. telephoned deft. that he had a prospective purchaser, & obtained from him the terms, asking whether deft. would pay him a commission : deft. said he would. Pltf. then gave F. deft.'s name & address, & a few hours later F., without mentioning pltf.'s name, arranged with deft. to purchase. Deft. said he did not connect F. with pltf.'s prospective purchaser :—Held : deft. was put on inquiry whether F. was the person referred to by pltf., & pltf. was entitled to commission at the usual rate on $14,000.—ROBERTSON v. CARSTENS (1908), 18 Man. L. R. 227; 7 W. L. R. 742; 9 W. L. R. 397.—CAN.

1702 xi. —.]—Deft. listed with plffs. for sale or exchange ten acres of land. C. opened negotiations for an exchange. While the deal was being transacted deft. telephoned plffs. asking if any disposition of his property had been effected, & was replied to in the negative. He then said that he withdrew the property, & at or about the same time consummated a deal for the property mentioned by C. to plffs., C. having opened negotiations with him direct :—Held : the relationship of vendor & purchaser had been brought about by plffs., & C. had endeavoured by approaching deft. to deprive them of their commission.—LALANDE & CLOUGH v. CARAVAN (1909), 14 B. C. R. 298; 11 W. L. R. 243.—CAN.

1702 xii. —.]—Pltf., an estate agent, employed to sell a farm belonging to deft. on the terms of "no sale, no charge," without special instructions so to do, advertised the farm as for sale, & the advertisement was seen by J. acting as a friend of S. who ultimately purchased the farm directly from deft. J. obtained certain particulars regarding the farm from pltf., but S. was not known to pltf. even by name until after the sale was completed :—Held : as pltf. was wholly ignorant of S.'s existence until after the sale & had never obtained any binding contract from the intending purchaser, he could not successfully claim commission.—WILLIS v. COLVILLE (1909), 14 O. W. R. 1019; 1 O. W. N. 212.—CAN.

1702 xiii. —.]—An agent for sale, whose principal afterwards sells to a purchaser in ignorance that such purchaser has been sent to him by the agent, will not necessarily be entitled to commission. But where a purchaser was sent by an agent & the circumstances were deemed to be such as to put his principals on inquiry, & their manager had failed to make sufficient inquiry :—Held : the agent entitled to commission on the sale.—HUGHES v. HOUGHTON LAND CO. (1909), 18 Man. L. R. 686; 9 W. L. R. 646.—CAN.

1702 xiv. —.]—Plffs. having obtained judgment for the amount claimed as commission on sale of a farm amounting to 5 per cent., the sale having been carried through by deft. :—Held : plffs. did not effect a sale or do anything of advantage to deft. & 2½ per cent. was sufficient compensation.—WADDINGTON v. HUMBERSTONE (1910), 15 O. W. R. 824.—CAN.

1702 xv. —.]—T., in 1904, having listed his property with pltf. at the selling price of $30,000, the latter introduced P., who obtained from T. a three months' option, upon which $100 was paid. This was renewed for $50, & the second option was allowed to lapse. A small portion of the property was sold to L. after the expiration of the second option, on which pltf. received a commission. In 1906 negotiations were revived between T. & P., which resulted in a sale to P. of the property for $20,000, but pltf. was unaware of either the negotiations or sale at the time. Pltf., on learning of the sale, claimed commission :—Held : pltf. entitled to recover.—LEE v. O'BRIEN & CAMERON (1910), 15 B. C. R. 326.—CAN.

1702 xvi. —.]—Plffs., agents for sale of land on commission, procured a purchaser of the land at the price & on the terms stipulated, although they did not obtain a deposit or a writing from the purchaser. The principal then ignored the agents who he was aware had pro-

cured the purchaser, & sold direct to such purchaser at the price less commission: Held: plffs. entitled to commission.—ROSS v. MATHESON (1910), 13 W. L. R. 490.—CAN.

1702 xvii. —.]—Plff. & one of defts. after a conversation arranged on the selling price of a piece of real estate at $6,000. There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether that was to be a net price, but on the occasion the parties next said "Property is gone up now, & I shall want $6,000 net." Plff. on same day, but before the change in price, brought the property to the notice of a purchaser, & told deft. about him. Plff. also clanked his advertisement to read $6,500 as the selling price. The purchaser refused to pay more than the $6,000 & eventually bought direct from the owners at that price:—Held: plff. not entitled to a commission.—HOLMES v. LEE HIO & LOU POY (1911), 16 B. C. R. 66; 15 W. L. R. 226.—CAN.

1702 xviii. —.]—An owner of land instructed an agent to sell his immovable property. The agent introduced a prospective purchaser, M., who was unable to buy himself, but who introduced two others who eventually bought the land from the owner at a reduced price:—Held: the agent was the causa causans of the sale & was entitled to a commission on the price for which the land was sold. Burchell v. Gourrie & Blochhouse Collieries, [1910] A. C. 614, folld.; Wilkinson v. Martin, 8 C. & P. 1; Green v. Bartlett, 14 C. B. N. S. 681; Barnett v. Isaacson, 4 T. L. R. 645, oldd.—STRATTON v. VACHON (1911), 41 S. C. R. 395.—CAN.

1702 xix. —.]—Deft. entered into an agreement with plffs. under which they were to sell property at a certain price within a certain time. Plffs. failed to effect a sale at the figure named within the time, & after the time had expired defts. arranged a sale, on less advantageous terms, with a purchaser introduced by plffs.:—Held: plffs. did not effect a sale, nor had a purchaser willing to purchase on the terms mentioned. Before an agent can recover on a quantum meruit, where a sale has been effected at a price less than that stipulated for by the principal, it must appear that the sale was made to a purchaser introduced by the agent, & that the contract between principal & agent was such that the agent was to be entitled to commission, although the price obtained was less than that specified to the agent. Toulmin v. Millar, 58 L. T. 96, cited.—BLACKSTOCK v. BELL (1911), 16 W. L. R. 363; 4 Sask. L. R. 458.—CAN.

1702 xx. —.]—Deft. was offering his ranch for sale; plff. first took an option, but, failing to promote a syndicate to purchase, he undertook to sell for $100,000 net with commission to himself of $5,000. He failed to sell on those terms, but introduced H., who subsequently bought at $100,000, & swore he was willing to pay $105,000 if demanded. Plff. sued for $5,000 commission, & the jury found for plff.:—Held: the jury might reasonably have inferred that deft. accepted plff.'s activity as including the ultimate transaction with H., & have come to the conclusion that he was entitled to commission.—ROWLANDS v. LANGLEY (1911), 17 W. L. R. 443; 16 B. C. R. 72; affd. 46 S. C. R. 626.—CAN.

1702 xxi. —.]—Defts. employed plff. to sell at $12,000. This he failed to do, but he procured a purchaser to whom defts. sold at a lower price:—Held: plff. entitled to commission upon a quantum meruit basis. Toulmin v. Millar (1887), 58 L. T. 96, apld.—CRONK v. CARMAN (1911), 19 O. W. R. 145; 2 O. W. N. 1027.—CAN.

1702 xxii. —.]—Deft. listed a property for sale with plffs., real estate brokers, who brought it to the notice of H., who ultimately became the purchaser. In the meantime, however, H. had got into communication with deft. through other parties & deft., when he closed the transaction was not aware that H. had been introduced to the property by plffs. In an action for commission on the sale:—Held: as it was through the action of plffs. that deft. got into communication with the purchaser, plffs. were entitled to a commission, notwithstanding the actual negotiations were subsequently conducted exclusively by the parties & the sale was made by deft. without knowing at the time that the attention of the purchaser had been brought to the property by plffs. Green v. Bartlett (1863), 14 C. B. N. S. 681; Mansell v. Clement (1871), L. R. 9 C. P. 139; Wilkinson v. Aldon (1870), 48 L. J. Q. B. 733; Street v. Smith (1885), 2 T. L. R. 131, cited.—*RICE v. 1702 xxiii. —.]—A man, who knew that a farm belonging to deft. was for sale, asked plff. to ascertain for him the price for which it could be bought. Plff. ascertained the price & at the same time obtained from deft. an authority to sell the farm. Plff. then communicated the price to the inquirer, but no other communication took place between them, & subsequently the inquirer purchased the farm from deft. without plff.'s intervention. In an action for commission:—Held: plff. could not recover, because the sale was not brought about by his efforts, the purchaser having come to plff. knowing as much about the matter as plff. did.—St. GERMAIN v. L'ORSAU (1912), 22 W. L. R. 125; 6 D. L. R. 119; 2 W. W. R. 1007.—CAN.

1702 xxiv. —.]—Plff., knowing deft.'s land was for sale but without any previous authority from the latter, took P., a prospective purchaser, to see the land, & subsequently introduced him to deft. During the interview which followed, deft. agreed to pay a commission if plff. sold the land & terms were discussed, but P. not agreeing to the price declined to buy. Plff. on a subsequent occasion endeavoured to induce P. to buy. Later P. saw deft. privately & eventually deft. sold the land to P. directly without the intervention of plff. Plff. having claimed his commission, deft. did not dispute liability but paid a sum on account. In an action by plff. for the balance:—Held: (1) the contract between the parties was that plff. would be entitled to a commission if the person introduced by him bought the land on deft.'s terms, & plff. had been an efficient cause of the sale; (2) deft. by paying a sum on account had admitted liability.—STRAYER v. HITCHCOCK (1912), 22 W. L. R. 469; 3 W. W. R. 196; 7 D. L. R. 689.—CAN.

1702 xxv. —.]—Slight services in bringing together the parties so as to result in a sale are sufficient to entitle an agent to his commission on the sale of lands. The option expired, & the property was subsequently sold under another option given to L. by the owners of the property & not by deft. Plff. had had negotiations with L. during the life of his own option, but these failed owing to L. & deft. not being able to agree upon terms:—Held: plff. was not entitled to a commission on the sale.—*HUBBARD v. 1702 xxvii. —.]—M., on behalf of plffs., real estate agents, obtained authority from deft., owner of a parcel of land, to sell part of the holding, & this part was duly sold through his agency, plffs. being paid a commission in respect of the sale. M. assumed his authority to sell extended to the remainder of the property & he had a survey made of it & a sketch prepared which he submitted to N., who made an offer to deft. which was refused. At the interview M. was present in circumstances leading to the inference that he was an agent in the business. Some time afterwards N. bought the property:—Held: M. had been instrumental in bringing about the sale although not present at it nor concerned in the actual making of the contract of purchase; & plffs. were entitled to the usual rate of commission. *Burchell v. Deft. subsequently sold through plff.'s introduction to A. for $34,000:—Held: "purchase price" meant any price at which a sale might be made, & plff. entitled to 5 per cent. commission on the reduced price, the memorandum being sufficient to satisfy Alberta Stat., c. 27. *Toulmin v. Resp. found a purchaser, W., who was willing to give £500 for the property, & W. also put a property in resp.'s hands for sale, agreeing to pay him £15 as commissn on if he sold it. W. was under the impression that applt. was only asking £500 for his property, but applt. knew that it had been offered to W. at £550. Applt., however, without informing W. that the price resp. had been authorised to sell at was £550, sold the property to W. for £500, taking W.'s property, which was in resp.'s hands for sale, in exchange:—Held: (1) resp. had been

m. Agent entitled to commission on fixed sum.—Sale effected by principal for less.—]—Deft. by a written agreement, employed plff. as agent to sell goods for $1,000 at a commission of 10 per cent. & under the agreement plff. was entitled to his commission on $1,000, even though deft. disposed of the goods without the assistance of plff. Deft. sold the goods without the assistance of plff. at a price of $350 & plff. sued for commission:—Held: plff. entitled to his commission.—PETRIE v. MACHAN (1887), 28 O. R. 612.—CAN.

n. Principal stipulating that no commission payable on lands sold by him direct.—]—Plff. accepted the agency for sale for defts. of several parcels of land, on the understanding that they might sell themselves, in which case he was to get no remuneration. Defts. sold one parcel, but did not notify plff., & he afterwards found a purchaser for it:—Held: plff. not entitled to commission, but entitled to commission on another parcel, he having found a purchaser willing to complete, & defts. not showing that they had already sold it.—*HAMMANN v. o. Sole agency.—]—Deft. gave plffs., land agents, at their solicitation, the right of exclusive sale of her land for the next thirty days at $20,000, on specified terms as to payment, commission $500. Before the expiration of that time, deft. herself sold for $19,500 cash. Plffs.

had done nothing beyond advertising the land:—Held: deft. was misled by plff. into thinking that she reserved the right of selling herself & in that case she would not be liable for commission. Semble: If that conclusion was wrong, plffs. could only recover a small sum on a quantum meruit basis.—*CALDWELL & Co. v. q. —.]—Defts. intrusted plff., a real estate agent, with the exclusive sale of their property by a written agreement for two months, undertaking to pay him in case of sale a 2½ per cent. commission. Just over a month afterwards defts. themselves sold to a party not introduced by plff. Plff. sued for 2½ per cent. commission on the agreed purchase price. He had had five interviews with a prospective purchaser who did not proceed:—Held: plff. not entitled to the stipulated commission, as he had not brought about the sale, but entitled to recover on a quantum meruit basis which should be fixed at $10, with interest & costs.—ALLARD v. MEUNIER (1913), Q. R. 46 S. C. 193; 14 D. L. R. 399.—CAN.*

r. Agreement in unusual terms.—]—Deft. agreed with plff., a real estate agent, as follows: "In consideration of your registering my real estate property for sale in your real estate register, I hereby agree to pay you a commission of 3 per cent. of the price obtained whenever a sale of the property or any part thereof takes place, such commission to be paid by me whether the real estate or property is sold either at the price mentioned above or at such other price that I may hereafter accept for the real estate or property. If, however, the property does not sell no commission will be charged." The lands were sold by deft. without the knowledge or intervention of plff.:—Held: plff. entitled to his commission, as the language used did not limit the payment of commission to a sale made by plff.—McCALLUM v. WILLIAMS (1910), 9 E. L. R. 141.—CAN.

s. Principal & agent both finding purchaser.—Onus of proof on principal to prove priority.—]—Deft. employed plff. to sell certain property at a commission, but stipulated that if he made a sale before plff. communicated a sale to him, then he would pay no commission. On Mar. 13 deft. called upon the manager of a co. & offered the property, & the manager stated that the co. would buy, but the sale would have to be approved by the directors, & that no money would be paid until such approval was obtained. On Mar. 14 the directors informally confirmed the sale, & on Mar. 18 formal consent was given at a board meeting. On Mar. 13 plff. informed deft. that he had found a purchaser. This communication reached deft. after he had made his offer to the manager:—Held: the 1703. Several agents employed to dispose of same estate.—A. & B., land agents, were severally employed to sell an estate for C. D. called on A. to inquire after another estate, & was told by A. that it was not in the market, but C.'s estate was to be sold. D. took from A. particulars of the estate, & afterwards meeting B., the other agent, negotiated with him the terms of the purchase, which was afterwards completed. A. brought an action against C. for commission on the sale, which was proved to be, according to usage, £2 per cent., & payable to the agent who found the purchaser:—Held: (1) the question for the jury was, whether they thought that in fact A. had found the purchaser; (2) if they thought he had, & gave their verdict for him, they were not bound to give him the full amount of the commission, though the fact of that commission being usually paid was some evidence to guide them in their decision.—MURRAY v. CURRIE (1836), 7 C. & P. 584.

1704. —[—]—Pltfs. had given purchaser of deft.'s leasehold house an order to view, but purchaser did not use the order until the house had been seen by purchaser's wife at the request of another agent, to whom a commission had been paid by deft.:—Held: (1) pltfs. had failed to prove they had done anything which could be considered to have materially caused purchaser to buy deft.'s house; (2) they were not entitled to commission.—LOFTS v. BOURKE (1884), 1 T. L. R. 58.

1705. —[—]—Pltf. & defts., who both carried on business as house agents, were employed by Q. to find a purchaser for his leasehold house. Pltf. introduced the house to T., who went over it on receiving an order to view from pltf. Later T. received from defts. orders to view several houses, including Q.'s house, which T. again inspected. Finally T. took another house through pltf., but had to leave it. T. then negotiated with defts. respecting Q.'s house. Certain communications also took place between pltf. & T., but these ceased, & the terms of the contract under which T. became the purchaser of Q.'s house were arranged with defts. On an interpleader issue between pltf. & defts.:—Held: defts. entitled to the commission, as pltf.'s introduction had resulted in nothing, whereas defts.' introduction had resulted in a sale.—BARNETT v. 1706. Introduction by one agent—Contract made by another agent.—A. claimed commission for letting certain houses. The evidence was that the informal acceptance of deft.'s offer, if sufficient, came too late, as pltf.'s offer had then been communicated to deft. & pltf. was entitled to judgment.—DOMINA v. GUILLEMAND (1913), 23 W. L. R. 41; 3 W. W. R. 787; 9 D. L. R. 622.—CAN.

PART VIII SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1.—B. (b).

1703 I. Several agents employed to dispose of same estate.—Deft. instructed two agents, pltf. & S., to sell land; pltf. found a purchaser & informed deft., who agreed to his offer, & asked pltf. to inform S., so as to avoid paying two commissions, which pltf. omitted to do; pltf. received a deposit from his purchaser, who was willing to complete. Meantime S. sold, & deft. elected to carry through that sale:—Held: pltf. entitled to his commission, having done everything necessary to earn it.—BELL v. ROKERY (1915), 15 Man. L. R. 327; 1 W. L. R. 124, 531.—CAN.

1703 II. —[—]—An agent for the sale or exchange of lands, whose commission was not stated, negotiated an exchange though not on the express terms named by his principals, who, though another agent appeared in the negotiations, knew that the first agent had brought the parties together:—Held: such agent entitled to remuneration quantum meruit.—BARTHEUX v. McLEOD (1911), 19 W. L. R. 138.—CAN.

1703 III. —[—]—Pltf. was for a limited time retained as exclusive agent for sale of certain property, & later on had, for limited periods, exclusive rights or options. All these rights, however, expired without a purchaser having been found. Deft. informed pltf. that his option had expired & that he was going to try & sell through other agents, & that he would entertain offers from anybody, & pltf. was willing to take his chances, same as any other agent. R., a real estate agent to whom deft. had made a similar proposition, brought an offer to deft. which he accepted. Pltf. contended that he had introduced this property to the purchaser at an earlier date than R.:—Held: under the contract, if there was one at all, the commission was not earned until an offer had been brought to deft. & accepted, & pltf.'s claim failed. Wilkinson v. Alston, 48 L. J. Q. B. 733; Prickell v. Badger, 1 C. B. N. S. 296; Barnett v. Brown, 6 T. L. R. 463, cited. Semble: there was no contract, 1703 IV. —[—]—A. desiring to let his house, entered it in the books of two agents, viz., B. & C. D. inspected the books of B., was acquainted by B. with the house of A., & thereupon entered into a negotiation with A., which ended in the letting of the house to D. During the negotiation, A. stated that C. was his house agent, & the agreement for the letting was prepared by C.:—Held: B. entitled to agency fees as against A.—McCLEAN v. FITZSIMON (1845), 3 Caw. & D. 381.—IR.

1703 V. —[—]—Pltf. claimed for payment of services for sale of land of deft. He obtained an offer to purchase from G., which deft. declined, & some time afterwards G. purchased from deft. through other agents whom deft. employed on terms different from those of the offer obtained by pltf.:—Held: the relation of buyer & seller had really been brought about by the other agents, & pltf. was not entitled to payment.—EDWARDS v. WALTON (1891), 10 L. R. 426.—N.Z.

1703 VI. —[—]—Pltf. applied to M. to sell his lands. M. replied, "I will not put it in the hands of any one agent for sale, but if any agent brings along a purchaser & effects a sale a reasonable commission will be allowed." Pltf. saw C., & agreed to divide commission with him if he found a purchaser. C. saw G. & made a similar arrangement with him. G. gave the particulars to H., & at the latter's suggestion G. saw pltf., & made a special arrangement with him as to dividing commission. H. then bought the land, but all his negotiations as to purchase & completion were made directly with M. Pltf. had no communication with M. as to the sale to H.:—Held: although pltf.'s connection was not so remote to entitle him to commission if the property had been placed in his hands on the ordinary conditions, yet, inasmuch as the terms of his employment were special, & he did not comply with those terms by personally bringing a purchaser to M. & concluding the arrangement for the purchase, he was not entitled to any commission.—WILSON v. LEARMOUTH (1898), 16 L. R. 682.—N.Z.

1703 VII. —[—]—Custom only to pay agent concluding transaction.—In an action by stock & station agents to recover commission on sale of station property defts. tendered evidence of a custom among stock & station agents in Sydney that, where several agents have been employed to sell same property, those only are entitled to commission who have concluded the contract of sale. This evidence having been rejected:—Held: the evidence rejected ought to have been received; & new trial ordered.—PITTS v. JONES (1884), 5 N. S. W. L.—AUS.

1703 VIII. —[—]—Custom to pay first agent.—In an action for commission on sale of land where the agent claimed he was the first to give particulars of the land to the person who subsequently purchased it through another agent:—Held: evidence of a local custom that the agent who first gave particulars to the purchaser was entitled to the commission was inadmissible, such custom being contrary to the rule of law that the commission is not earned unless the agent introduces the buyer so that through his agency the sale is substantially effected.—WILLIAMS & KETTLE, LTD. v. MORICE BROTHERS (1908), 29 N. Z. L. R. 154.—N.Z.

1703 IX. —[—]—Judgment recovered by one agent no bar to action by another agent.—Pltf. sued for commission on sale of land for deft., who alleged another agent had recovered judgment against him for one-half the usual commission in respect of same sale:—Held: pltf. entitled, as the fact of recovery of commission by another agent was res inter alios acta & not in itself material.—DOUGLAS v. CROSS (1899), 12 M. R. 534.—CAN.

1706 I. Introduction by one agent—Contract made by another agent.—In an action by an agent for commission on the sale of land, the sale being effected by another agent, the fact that the purchaser was originally introduced by pltf. is not by itself sufficient to entitle pltf. to recover.—MCCARTIN v. WILLIAMS (1896), 22 V. L. R. 103.—AUS.

1706 II. —[—]—Deft., agent for sale of pltf.'s machines, introduced a purchaser, whom he had canvassed on two occasions, to pltf.'s manager at a place where the machines were exhibited, & the manager then informed deft. that he would send him the necessary papers in order to have the sale completed.

1708 iii. ———.]—P. employed C. to sell his hotel at a stated price on commission. C. introduced T., who offered to buy at a lower price which was refused by P., who, seeing that C. was unsuccessful, decided to endeavour to sell the property himself & informed C. of his intention of so doing. Later D. was employed by P. as another agent, who found a purchaser, H. H. bought the hotel & within a short time sold half the property to T., his brother-in-law. C. sued P. for commission :—Held : (1) a broker is not, as a general rule, entitled to commission, where the customer produced by him fails or refuses to consummate the sale, & an owner of property desiring to sell same may employ several different brokers for that purpose, & the broker through whose instrumentality the purchaser is produced, who is the procuring cause of the sale, is entitled to the entire commission to the exclusion of all others; (2) C. was not the causa causans of the sale & was not entitled to any commission.—*CHADBURN v. Pltf. advertised the property, without stating the exact location or name of owner. G. saw the advertisement, & obtained deft.'s name & address from pltf. & ultimately purchased from deft. through H., deft. being aware before completion of pltf.'s share in introducing G., & that he claimed commission :—Held : pltf. was the effective cause of the purchase, & he was entitled to commission. *Green v. 1706 v. ———.]—Agents for sale of land at fixed price on commission, having shown the property to a prospective purchaser, introduced him to deft. & tried to effect a sale. The same person afterwards purchased the property at same price, but through another agent :—Held : the agents not entitled to full commission, & a verdict allowing half commission should not be disturbed.—GLINES v. CROSS (1899), 12 M. R. 442.—CAN.

1706 vi. ———.]—Pltf., agent for sale of a house & lot on commission, offered it to R., the tenant, who did not want to buy at the time. Deft. put the property in the hands of other agents, telling pltf. he was dissatisfied at his not selling but not withdrawing it from pltf., & that his price was $3,000, who ever sold over that to have excess as commission. Another agent sold to R. for $3,150 :—Held : pltf. not entitled to commission in respect of that sale.—JOHNSON v. APPLETON, (1905) 11 B. C. R. 128; 1 W. L. R. 14.—CAN.

1706 vii. ———.]—Deft. signed the following authority to plffs. : "In case you find a purchaser or in case you bring the property, directly or indirectly, to the attention of anyone who becomes a purchaser on any terms whatsoever, you are to be paid by me a 5 per cent. commission." Plffs. introduced D., who inspected the property & decided not to purchase, but ultimately purchased through C. :—Held : D. had not purchased through plffs.' introduction & plffs. not entitled to commission.—*HERBERT v. 1706 viii. ———.]—Pltf. procured J. to enter into a verbal agreement for sale of deft.'s house, but J. refused to complete for no sufficient reason. Subsequently J. purchased the property at the price agreed on through another agent :—Held : pltf. was not the effective cause of the sale, & he could not recover commission on the sale. *Barnett v. 1706 ix. ———.]—Deft. employed plffs., land brokers, to sell a section for $16,000, deft. to be at liberty to sell the land himself or by other agents. Plffs. negotiated with C., who ultimately bought through H. at a lower sum, at a time when plffs. were urging deft. to reduce the price :—Held : pltf. was the efficient cause of the sale & entitled to commission. *Toulmin v. 1706 x. ———.]—Plffs., land brokers, were employed by deft. to sell a section at $11 an acre net, & to retain all received over that amount for expenses & commission. Plffs. expended time & money & introduced a purchaser to whom deft. sold through another agent at $11 an acre :—Held : plffs. entitled to $350 on a quantum meruit.—*BALFOUR & BROADFOOT v. 1708. Several shipbrokers negotiating on same principal's behalf.]—The usage is that, when a broker has introduced the captain of a ship & a merchant together, & they by his means enter into some negotiations as to the intended voyage, the broker is entitled to commission if a charterparty be effected between them for that voyage, even though they may employ another broker to prepare the charterparty, or may write the charterparty themselves. If a broker be authorised by both parties, & acting as the agent of each, communicates to the merchant what the shipowner charges, &

1706 xi. ———.]—An agent to find a purchaser for deft.'s hotel introduced the property to P., who subsequently arranged to purchase through other agents, in whose hands the hotel had also been placed :—Held : (1) pltf. entitled to commission; (2) as amount was not fixed, pltf. was entitled to the rate usually paid on similar transactions in the district & could recover, although such claim was not included in the statement of claim.—RENNER v. FRASER (1911), 31 N. Z. L. R. 205.—N.Z.

1706 xii. ———.]—Certain lands were placed for sale in the hands of an agent, E., who was to get £20 commission if the land were sold at £11 an acre. E. introduced a buyer H., who agreed, after negotiations on different days, to give £11 an acre, but said that he was not just then in a position to go on with the sale, & would not sign a contract or pay a deposit. P., the vendor, thereupon said that he would take the property out of E.'s hands & place it in the hands of another agent M. M. a few days later sold to H. & obtained a deposit & H.'s signature to a sale note :—Held : (1) E. was entitled to the £20 commission, as he obtained a purchaser, induced him to offer the price asked, & was the effective cause of the sale; (2) E.'s remedy was not for damages for breach of contract for preventing him from earning commission, as, when the vendor refused to allow him to proceed further, he had done his work in obtaining a purchaser at the agreed price.

1707 i. First introducer entitled to commission.]—Where pltf. first introduced the purchaser to the vendor :—Held : pltf. entitled to his commission, although the transaction was concluded through other agents. *Burchell v. 1708 i. Several shipbrokers negotiating on same principal's behalf.]—In Aug., 1890, A. applied to B. & Co. & C. & Co. shipbrokers, asking them at what price they could get a vessel built. On Aug. 1 B. & Co. wrote to D. & Co., mentioning A. as having decided to purchase a vessel, & asking them to state the lowest cash price covering 24 per cent. commission at which they could build the vessel. On Aug. 4 D. & Co. replied stating terms & reserving B. & Co.'s commission. On Aug. 1 C. & Co. also wrote to D. & Co. asking them to state at what price they would build the vessel, but not naming the prospective purchaser. On Aug. 4 D. & Co. replied to C. & Co. stating their price. D. & Co. heard no more till Oct., 1890, when they received a letter from C. & Co. referring to their letter of Aug. 4, stating that A. was again inquiring as to their lowest quotations for building the vessel described, & asking them to send it. D. & Co. sent their quotation, & after some correspondence between A. & C. & Co., & C. & Co. & D. & Co., a contract was entered into whereby D. & Co. agreed to build a ship for A. at a certain price, which the latter bound himself to pay :—Held :

also communicates to the shipowner what the merchant will give, & he names the ship & the parties so as to identify the transaction, & a charterparty be ultimately effected for that voyage, this broker is entitled to his commission, but if he does not mention the names so as to identify the transaction, he does not get his commission to the exclusion of another broker, who afterwards introduces the parties personally to each other.

A., a broker, introduced a merchant & a shipowner together to treat for a charterparty, which they finally made through B., another broker. In an action by A. for his commission the particulars of demand were "for commission due to pltf. for procuring a charter for a vessel called the W. & C.":—Held: sufficient.—BURNETT v. BOUCH (1840), 9 C. & P. 620.

1709. ——. [—There is nothing illegal in a shipowner employing two brokers at the same time, & whoever concludes the charter is entitled to the commission.—COUSINS v. MITCHESON, No. 1696, ante.

1710. ——. [—Pltf., a shipbroker, introduced one of defts. to another broker, B. B. was also a merchant & a shipowner, & through B. defts. were introduced to a third shipbroker, C., & through C. defts.' ship was chartered by S. & Co. Pltf. sued defts. for commission in respect of that charter; the question being left to the jury, the jury found a verdict for pltf. Upon the point reserved at the trial, whether there was any evidence which the judge should have submitted to the jury on the question of commission:—Held: it was a question upon evidence in the circumstances for the jury to decide; & the judge at the trial being not dissatisfied with the verdict, the ct. refused to set it aside.—KYNASTON v. NICHOLSON (1863), 8 L. T. 671; 1 Mar. L. C. 350.

1711. ——. [—Def. agreed that, if pltf. should be the means of introducing a person who should become purchaser of a ship of deft.'s, he should receive a commission on the purchase-money. In Feb., 1876, pltf. introduced T., who had been recommended by W. to buy, & it was agreed between pltf. & deft. that, if the sale was effected with T., W. should share pltf.'s commission. No sale was effected. In Mar. W. mentioned the ship to X. Pltf. informed deft., & proposed that he should see X., but no steps were taken, & X. did not entertain W.'s proposal. Subsequently, on Mar. 13, deft. wrote to pltf. that it was no use doing any more until the ship returned home. Pltf. thereupon took no further steps. In May X. wrote, as broker, direct to deft. & introduced Z., who became purchaser. Pltf. thereupon claimed his commission. The jury having found (1) pltf. was authorised to find a purchaser; (2) X. was introduced to enter upon the negotiation by information received from W.:—Held: (1) X. being the agent of Z. & having acted upon information received from W., pltf. was entitled to receive his commission; (2) even if the letter of Mar. 13 amounted to a revocation of pltf.'s authority, it was then too late.—WILKIN-

1712. ——. Broker's services too remote. [—Pltfs., shipbrokers, were employed by defts., shipowners, to procure charterers for certain ships. Pltfs. introduced defts. to another firm of brokers, & negotiations were commenced at the office of the last-named firm with L. for the chartering of these ships. The negotiations with L. came to nothing, but L., from the knowledge thus acquired, informed M. that defts. had a ship in want of a charterer, & M. became the charterer of this ship of defts. In an action by pltfs. to recover broker's commission from defts. on the charter of this ship:—Held: (1) pltfs.' services in the transaction were too remote. Semble: any usage which would entitle them to claim commission in such circumstances would be an unreasonable usage & bad.

In order to prove such usage, it was proposed to ask a broker "What is the custom with regard to the payment of brokers' commissions when the broker introduces another broker to a shipowner, which shipowner subsequently negotiates with the broker introduced?"—Held: this question was rightly disallowed.—GIBSON v. CRICK (1862), 2 F. & F. 766; 1 H. & C. 142; 31 L. J. Ex. 304; 6 L. T. 392; 10 W. R. 525.

1713. Agent to procure loan—Introduction too remote. [—In an action to recover for commission for the procuring of a loan, it is not enough to prove that the loan has indirectly, as a remote & casual consequence, resulted from the intervention of the party who sues. It must be proved that the loan was obtained by means of his agency, or by means of some sub-agent of his, from the parties to whom he applied; & if all that appears is that the party to whom he introduced the subject, declining the proposal, mentioned it to a third party, who, not at his suggestion but of his own mere motion, knowing nothing of pltf., negotiated the loan on his own account with the party sued, the commission is not due.

Where defts., engaged in getting up a co. & requiring money to do so, were introduced by pltfs. to a bank, which declined the proposition & the money was obtained by defts. from parties who had heard of it through the bank:—Held: if they were not really agents for pltfs., the latter could not recover.—ANTHONY v. WICKENS (1865), 4 F. & F. 291.

1714. Order to view—Evidence of purchaser admitted. [—Pltfs., house agents, were instructed by defts. to offer a leasehold house for sale, for which they were to receive a commission of 2½ per cent. on the amount of premium if they found a purchaser, but 1 guinea only for their trouble if the premises were sold "without their intervention." The particulars were entered on pltfs.' books, & they gave a few cards to view. U., who had observed on passing that the house was to be disposed of, but who had not then seen over it, called at pltfs.' office & obtained a card to view the premises in question, amongst others, the terms being written by pltfs.' clerk on the back of the card. U. went to the house a few days afterwards, but thought the price asked (£2,200) too high, &

B. & Co. were not entitled to any commission from D. & Co. in connection with this transaction.—JACOBS & CO. v. MILLAN & SON, LTD. (1894), 31 Sc. L. R. 523.—SCOT.

1712 f. ——. Broker's services too remote. [—M. & Co., of London, requiring a steamer for correspondents in China, put themselves in communication with a shipbroker, who brought under their notice the E., & wrote to the owners mentioning that he had so done, & requesting that, in the event of a sale, they would reserve his commission. The E. was inspected on behalf of M. & Co., but the inspector's report proved unfavourable & the shipbroker communicated the result to the owners, saying that "his friends must decline her." Later B. arrived in England, commissioned by the persons in China, for whom M. & Co. had been acting, to buy a steamer "through the medium & with the assistance of M. & Co." B.

went to D., who recommended the A., & the result was that M. & Co. were induced by B. & D. to purchase the vessel for their correspondents in China. The shipbroker thereupon claimed commission from the sellers:—Held: the shipbroker was not entitled to commission, in respect that the sale effected was not in consequence of his introduction, or of anything done by him.—WHITE v. MUNRO (1876), 3 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 1011.—SCOT.

he went away. U. had no further communication with plffs., but he subsequently renewed his negotiation with a friend of defts., & ultimately became the purchaser of the lease for £1,700:—Held: (1) there was evidence for a jury that U. had become the purchaser of the premises "through plffs.' intervention"; (2) plffs. were entitled to the stipulated commission.

At the trial the judge put the following question to U.: "Would you, if you had not gone to plffs.' office & got the card, have purchased the house?" &, overruling an objection by defts.' counsel, received his answer, which was, "I should think not":—Seem: the answer was properly received.—MANSELL v. CLEMENTS (1874), L. R. 9 C. P. 139.

1715. Ship sold privately after being offered at auction—Auctioneer entitled to commission.—Applts. were auctioneers. Resp. put a ship into their hands for sale, & it was agreed that if it were not sold by auction, but a subsequent sale were effected to any person led to make an offer "in consequence of applts.' mention or publication for auction purposes," they were to be entitled to a commission. The ship was not sold by auction, but afterwards P., having been present at a conversation which led him to believe that S. would purchase the ship, wrote to applts., "noting that they had the ship in their hands," to inquire the price, etc. P. then communicated with S., who ultimately became the purchaser, but not through the agency of P.:—Held: (1) there was evidence to go to the jury that the sale was effected in consequence of applts.' mention or publication within the agreement; (2) they were entitled to their commission.—BAYLEY v. CHADWICK (1878), 39 L. T. 429; 4 Asp. M. L. C. 59, H. L.; reversg. S. C. 37 L. T. 593, C. A.; restg. S. C. 36 L. T. 740, D. C.

1716. Introducing agent not carrying on subsequent negotiations.—An agent to sell, in order to be entitled to recover his commission, must prove that he has been the means of bringing about the relation of buyer & seller between his principal & a third party, but he may earn it by doing nothing more than merely introducing the buyer, & though the whole of the negotiations resulting in the sale may have been carried on by another agent employed by his principal.—WHITE v. WALKER, DONALD & Co. (1885), 1 T. L. R. 603.

1717.—Where a house agent, with the consent of the vendor, introduces a purchaser, he is entitled to his commission, even though the sale be wholly effected through other agents, & it would have been brought about without his intervention.—BURTON v. HUGHES (1885), 1 T. L. R. 207.

1718. Agent introducing second agent—Agent becoming purchaser.—Deflt. agreed with plff. to pay him a commission of £5,000 in the event of his introducing a purchaser of deflt.'s business. Plff. introduced C. as an agent to find a purchaser, & deflt. agreed to pay C. £5,000 if he found a purchaser. C. subsequently purchased the business himself, deducting the £5,000 commission from the purchase-money:—Held: (1) plff. did not introduce C. as a purchaser & was not entitled to £5,000 commission; (2) nothing was done to entitle plff. to quantum meruit, as the introduction of C. did not take place in such circumstances that deflt. ought to pay for it.—BARNETT v. ISAACSON (1888), 4 T. L. R. 645.

1716 i. Introducing agent not carrying on subsequent negotiations.—Where a broker, on the instruction of the vendor, introduces a purchaser, he is entitled to his commission even though the sale is effected wholly through another agent.—OSLER v. MOORE (1901), 8 B. C. R. 115.—CAN.

1716 ii.—As a result of negotiations for the sale of certain land in Mar. 1911, deflt., the owner, agreed to accept $100,000 in case plffs. found a purchaser. No sale resulted from this arrangement, & in the month of Aug. following, plffs. brought a prospective purchaser named M. to view the property, when deflt., on account of certain improvements made in the meantime, raised the price to $105,000. M. looked over the land, but left without making any offer. In Jan., 1912, deflt. sold to another broker for $90,000. It subsequently appeared that the broker was acting for M., the actual purchaser. Deflt. denied any knowledge of M. in his dealings with the broker. Plffs. sued for their commission on the sale of the property to M.:—Held: the charges of fraud, conspiracy & collusion not having been proved conclusively, plffs. could not recover.—ERICSSON v. MARLATT (1913), 18 B. C. R. 120.—CAN.

1716 iii.—R. agreed with C. (who had influence with the Indians) that if they, working together, could bring about a sale to the Province of the rights of the Indians in their reserve, he would pay C. $20,000. Negotiations proceeded, C. arranging meetings with the Indians, at two of which R. & C. were present, but without results. After the first meeting, R., who had a meeting with the provincial representative, was induced by him to make a party to the transaction. Three days after the second meeting a third & final meeting was held with the Indians (an adjournment of the other meetings), at which R. & A. were present, but from which C. was excluded. The Indians came to terms at this meeting, & a form of option, which had been previously prepared by R. for use at the former meetings, was signed by the parties after A.'s name had been changed for R.'s:—Held: R. was bound to discharge his obligation to C. notwithstanding that A.'s influence might have been most potent in bringing about sale.—COLE v. READ (1914), 20 B. C. R. 365; aff. 52 S. C. R. 176.—CAN.

1716 iv.—Plff., an agent for sale of defts.' land at $15,000, negotiated with R., who said he would think about it. Without knowing of this D., a land agent, obtained an option in writing to purchase for $15,000 from one of defts., who knew he was a land agent. D. then, without taking a conveyance, sold to R. for $14,750, of which he paid defts. $14,250, claiming that, after the option, they had promised a rebate of 5 per cent.:—Held: (1) D. was not an agent but a purchaser, & came in contact with R. not by reason of anything plff. had done, & defts. understood D. was purchasing for himself, & the rebate was not by way of commission; (2) plff. was not entitled to a commission.—WHITE v. MAYNARD & STOCKHAM (1910), 15 W. L. R. 388; 15 B. C. R. 340.—CAN.

1716 v.—An agent for selling a business with commission only if he found a purchaser introduced N., a purchaser, to deflt., the owner, but no offer was made. Deflt. after deciding not to sell with the agent's approval consulted a friend who knew N., through whom eventually he sold to N.:—Held: deflt. not liable for commission.—BRANDON v. HANNA, (1907) 2 I. R. 212, 227.—IR.

1716 vi.—Plff. as defts.' sales agent induced H. to see a machine of defts., giving H. a letter of introduction to another sales agent of defts., & telegraphing to that agent. There was no evidence that H. presented the letter or that the other agent received the telegram. A sale was effected by the other agent to H. Plff.'s agency contract with defts. provided that the latter should not be liable for any trespass committed by one agent upon the rights of another & that the agent trespassing should make it good to the other:—Held: plff. had no right of action against deflt.; his remedy, if any, was against his fellow-agent. MASON v. REEVES & Co. (1911), 18 W. L. R. 536; 4 Sask. L. R. 205.—CAN.

1718 i. Agent introducing second agent—Transaction carried through by latter agent.—Plff. made sales of shares for deflt. at 5 cents a share. Deflt. expressed his desire to increase the sales, & plff. replied that he could not give more time to the business, but could get the assistance of M. Plff. saw M. & arranged that he should sell the shares at a commission of 3 cents a share. Deflt. was brought into contact with M., & a number of shares were sold, deflt. paying M. 3 cents commission direct. In an action by plff. for 2 cents commission on each share sold through M.:—Held: deflt. knew of the relationship between plff. & M., & as plff. had done his part in procuring M. as sub-agent, he was entitled to the 2 cents commission claimed. Wilkinson v. Aldon, 48 L. J. Q. B. 733, apld. ARONOVITCH v. LOPER (1912), 21 W. L. R. 262; 21 Man. L. R. 325; 2 W. W. R. 378; 3 D. L. R. 383.—CAN.

1718 ii.—Deflt., a land broker, being interested in two properties, mentioned them to I. & G., also land brokers, promising them a commission of 2½ per cent. if they effected a sale. I. & G. not being able themselves to bring about a sale agreed with another land broker, S., to share the commission on his finding a purchaser. S. introduced as a probable purchaser K., who was acting for a syndicate. The syndicate not being willing to purchase & K. not being able himself to purchase, K. informed deflt. that if he could get an offer he would submit it to him.

1719. — Agent forming company to purchase.]—Pltf. was employed by deft. to find a purchaser of a business upon commission. Pltf. expected to carry out the sale through S. & introduced S. to deft. Pltf. & S. then introduced deft. to certain persons, but the negotiations fell through. At a later date S. came into communication with F., & ultimately through F. a co. was formed to purchase the business:—Held: pltf. did not introduce deft. to the actual purchaser; (2) he had not earned his commission.—JEFFREY v. CRAWFORD (1891), 7 T. L. R. 618. C. A.

1720. Agent introducing subsequent purchaser by auction.]—Pltf. being instructed to sell a house for deft., failed, & the house was sold by auction to S. Prior to the auction S. had been introduced by pltf., but he did not complete. Pltf. sued for 2½ per cent. commission. The ct. judge awarded him £5 by way of quantum meruit. Judgment affirmed.—TAPLIN v. BARRETT (1889), 6 T. L. R. 30.

1721. Commission payable on purchase by one company—Purchase by different company.]—Deft. agreed to pay pltf. commission on the sale of a mine "through the formation of a co. by R. A. & Co." K. did in fact find a purchaser, & in his letter transmitting the offer to deft. he stated the bargain was subject to his being paid 2½ per cent. commission:—Held: pltf. could not succeed in their claim for a separate commission, since there was a distinct act between the introduction of K. & the sale which was the real causa causans of the purchase, a new transaction attributable to K.'s finding a purchaser & not to the original introduction, although that was the cause sine qua non which resulted in the sale. *Burchell v. 1718 iii. ——Pltf. sued deft. for commission on sale of land, alleging he had introduced the property to another broker who in fact brought about the sale, & that deft. had promised to pay a commission to each of them:—Held: pltf. upon the evidence not entitled to a commission or remuneration upon a quantum meruit basis.—SCOTT v. MOACHON (1912), 21 W. L. R. 864.—CAN.

1718 iv. ——A., employed by B. to effect an exchange of his land, found H., who was willing to effect an exchange, but was unable to make a good title. Eventually it was arranged between H. & B. that H. should find a purchaser, which H. did, & the sale was completed. 1725. a. Agent to procure subscriptions for stock—Commission payable after call—Call not paid.—The president of a projected bank employed A. to procure subscriptions of stock for a commission payable after the first call: a post scriptum to the agreement provided that this commission should be payable after the first payment. A call was made, but very few paid it:—Held: A. entitled to commission as soon as a call had been made.—HUBBERT & BARTHE (1879), 2 L. N. 227, Q. B. 1879.—CAN.

c. Sale of land—Commission payable when buyer secured.—A real estate broker to whom a proprietor confides his property to sell has but the obligation to secure a buyer at the price demanded. From that moment he has the right to receive his commission without being obliged to wait for the passing of the deeds or the payment of an instalment of the purchase price.—GIROUARD v. BEAUDOIN (1914), Q. R. 46 S. C. 57.—CAN.

d. — Commission payable out of first instalment—Sale for stock of company to be formed.—Deft. appointed pltf. his sole & exclusive agent to sell certain lands under an agreement which provided that deft. should pay to pltf. as commission 10 per cent. of the gross selling price of "all lands which are sold" during the continuance of the agreement, whether sold by pltf. or deft. or by any other person & that such payment should be due & payable & should be made "out of the first instalment of the purchase price when & as received" by deft. Pltf. sold portions of the land & claimed commission on a sale made by deft. of the remainder of the lands to a co.:—Held: a mere executory contract would come within the agreement because the commission was declared to be payable out of the first instalment of the purchase price.

Where the whole property was sold en bloc to a purchasing co., in which deft. acquired about four-fifths of the stock:—Held: (1) Pltf. could not succeed upon his claim for commission, because commission was payable "out of the first instalment of the purchase price when & as received" by deft., & when the action was begun no shares had been allotted to deft., & he had not yet received the sum of £15,000 in cash which he ultimately did receive before the trial. Qu.: whether such sale was a "sale" within the phrase "all lands which are sold."—*Cargill v. e. — Commission payable when land resold—Resale by principal direct.—Pltf. was to receive commission on the purchase price, for his services in purchasing land for deft.:—Held: commission not payable until deft. resold the land, & deft. having resold the land without the aid of pltf., pltf.'s right to the commission was complete.—MANCHESTER v. BROWN (1913) 23 W. L. R. 157.—CAN.

1726. — Amount ascertainable.]—Pltf., a surveyor, was retained by deft. to negotiate with the Commrs. of Woods & Forests for the sale to them of certain premises of deft., for which he was to receive a commission of £2 per cent. "on the sum which might be obtained, either by private treaty, arbitration, or trial by jury." The value of the property was assessed at £4,000; but there being an annuity charged upon the premises, which the Commrs. required deft. to buy off (of which annuity pltf. had had no notice), the money was placed in the hands of the Accountant-General, to await the adjustment of the difference:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to his commission until the sum was ascertained & received by deft.—BULL v. PRICE (1831), 7 Bing. 237; 5 Moo. & P. 2; 9 L. J. O. S. C. P. 78; 131 E. R. 91.

1727. Sale of advowson—Special stipulation as to date of payment.]—A., a clerical agent, was employed to sell an advowson for B., upon the terms contained in a circular in which it was stipulated that the commission should become payable upon the adjustment of terms between the contracting parties in every instance in which any information had been arrived at, or any particulars had been given by, or any communication had been made from A.'s office, how & by whom the negotiation might have been conducted, & the business might have been subsequently taken off the books, or the negotiation might have been concluded in consequence of communications previously made from other agencies, or on information otherwise derived, or the principals might have made themselves liable to pay commission to other agents; & that no accommodation that might be afforded as to time of payment or advance should retard the payment of commission. A contract of sale having been arranged through A.'s agency, & duly executed, & a deposit paid on Oct. 14, 1862, the residue of the purchase-money being payable on Dec. 31:—Held: A. was entitled to his commission at all events on Dec. 31, although the full purchase-money had not, for some unexplained reason, then been paid.—LARA v. HILL (1863), 15 C. B. N. S. 45; 143 E. R. 699.

1728. Custom in building trade.]—Pltf., an estate agent, was employed by deft. to sell a piece of land for building purposes. Pltf. introduced W. as a purchaser. W. commenced to build but never finished the houses contemplated. Pltf. claimed commission, alleging it was payable as soon as the agreement was signed. Deft. relied upon a usage that in the case of building agreements commission was payable not when the agreement was signed but when the houses had been built & leases had been granted:—Held: (1) the usage was proved; (2) pltf. was not entitled to commission.—KIRK v. EVANS (1889), 6 T. L. R. 9.

C. Originally contemplated Transaction completed and followed by a subsequent Transaction between same Parties.

(a) Subsequent Transaction completed by Principal himself.

1729. Similar transaction—Further loan.]—Deft. being in want of additional capital in his business, on June 10, 1873, wrote to pltf. (accountants in London with whom he had been in correspondence on the subject) as follows: "The premises of the B. works in this town are my property solely, but the business of it is carried on by myself & my partner. In case of your introducing a purchaser of all the premises or part of them of whom I shall approve, or in case of your introducing capital which I should accept, I could pay you a commission of 5 per cent. on the amount in either case, provided no one else is entitled to a commission in respect of the same introduction." Pltf. succeeded in introducing W. to deft., who advanced him by way of loan a sum of £10,000, upon which pltf. received the agreed commission. Some months afterwards deft. & W. entered into an agreement for a partnership, on which occasion W. made a further advance of £4,000 by way of capital to the concern. Pltf. claimed commission upon this further advance; & in an action brought to enforce their claim, admitted the advance of the £4,000 was not contemplated at the time of the advance of the £10,000, but that the £4,000 was advanced solely in consequence of the negotiation for the partnership between deft. & W.:—Held: pltf. not entitled to commission on this second advance.—TRIBE v. TAYLOR (1876), 1 C. P. D. 505.

1730. — Purchase of further ships.]—A shipbroker introduced a purchaser to a shipbuilder who purchased a ship, & the broker received a commission. Purchaser afterwards purchased other ships. The broker claimed commission on the second sale also. It was a question of fact whether the broker was employed in the second sale; he alleged a usage by which he was entitled to commission whether he was employed or not:—Held: (1) there was no evidence to go to a jury that the broker was employed; (2) the usage was not proved.—Re HUMPHRYS & PEARSON, Ex p. CHATTERIS (1874), 22 W. R. 289, C. A.

1731. — — — — —.]—Pltf., a shipbroker, was employed by defts., shipbuilders, to introduce business to them; he succeeded in finding a purchaser for two ships & received commission. A few months later defts. sold a third ship to the same purchaser without pltf.'s intervention. By the usage of the trade shipbrokers were entitled to commission on future sales resulting from the introduction, if effected within a reasonable time:—Held: (1) the jury were justified in finding that pltf. & deft. contemplated that the introduction would produce business in more than one ship; (2) pltf. was entitled to commission on the sale of the third ship.—WHITE v. BAXTER & Co. (1884), Times, July 2; revers. S. C. 1 Cab. & El. 100.

1732. — Sale of further lots.]—Pltf. were employed by deft. to sell an estate for him upon the terms that they should be paid commission on the amount of such sale. The estate was divided into lots, some of which were purchased by A., & upon completion of that purchase pltf. received their commission. Deft. withdrew his authority to sell from pltf., & A. subsequently purchased the

1729 i. Similar transaction—Exercise of option under original contract—Right to commission on future sales.]—Defts., wishing to introduce a certain ore in P., corresponded with pltf., through whose intervention a contract was made with B. & Co. for the sale of 15,000 tons with an option to order up to 30,000 tons within five years. Defts. agreed to pay pltf. 15 cents commission on the sale, & commission on sales during five years. The option was exercised & pltf. claimed commission thereon:—Held: he could not recover, as the agreement to give commission on sales during the five years referred to future sales & not to any amount ordered under the contract in question.—TAYLOR v. COBBOURG, PETERBOROUGH & MARMORA RY. & MINING Co. (1874), 24 C. P. 200.—CAN.

1729 ii. — Renewal of contract on same terms.]—M. Co. undertook in the event of B. & T. securing them a contract for asphaltic works in J. in Roumania to pay them a 5 per cent. commission on the contract price as payments were made to them. B. & T. secured a contract with the commune of J. for five years, terminating Oct. 1, 1878. The commune of J. & the M. Co. subsequently concluded a fresh contract on same terms without B. & T.'s intervention:—Held: B. & T. were entitled to commission on the new contract, which was simply a continuation of the old contract.—BAINES & TAIT v. COMPAGNIE GÉNÉRALE DES MINES D'ASPHALTE (1879), 7 R. (Ct. of Sess.) 132.—SCOT.

remainder from deft. by private contract:—Held: the jury were entitled to find that the ultimate sale was not due to any introduction of pltf., & they could not recover their commission.—LUMLEY v. NICHOLSON (1886), 34 W. R. 716; 2 T. L. R. 711.

1733. — Further theatrical engagements.—Whether re-engagements or new engagements.]—Pltf., a music-hall artist, agreed with D., a music-hall agent, who had procured him an engagement at a music-hall for the seasons 1894, 1895, to pay him commission on all re-engagements at the same music-hall. In 1895, pltf., without the assistance of D., entered into an engagement to perform at the same music-hall in 1896. In an action by pltf. against D.'s receivers for an injunction to restrain them from serving notices on managers to pay them a portion of pltf.'s salary in respect of the engagements procured by himself, defts. counter-claimed for commission on such engagements: Semble: it was a question for the jury whether the engagement of 1896 were a fresh engagement, or a re-engagement, within the contract.—ROBEY v. ARNOLD (1898), 14 T. L. R. 220, C. A.

1734. — — — — —.]—Deft. agreed to pay D., a music-hall agent, commission on all engagements obtained through him & on all re-engagements with the same halls. D. carried through contracts for deft.'s appearance at three halls. While the contracts were still existing, deft., without an agent, entered into agreements to appear subsequently at the three halls. Pltf., D.'s receivers, contended that these were re-engagements & claimed commission:—Held: (1) deft. having without D.'s instrumentality contracted to appear at the same three halls, but the salary & other terms being different, it was impossible as a matter of law to say that they were re-engagements as distinguished from fresh engagements; (2) where there were fresh terms it could not be laid down that the case in question was a re-engagement, & the proper thing to do was to give the jury instances of re-engagements & of fresh engagements, & ask them under which category they placed the case; (3) in view of the differences in the terms of the agreements the case represented a fresh engagement & not a re-engagement.—ARNOLD v. STRATTON (1898), 14 T. L. R. 537, C. A.

1735. — — — — — Proprietorship of music-hall changed.]—Deft. having secured an engagement at the O. Music-hall, agreed in 1891 to pay pltf. a commission thereon & on all future engagements at that hall. The music-hall changed hands, was pulled down & rebuilt. Deft. entered into engagements after the rebuilding of the music-hall, & pltf. claimed commission thereon. The ct. judge having held that the new building was not the establishment referred to in the agreement of 1891, & given judgment for deft.:—Held: (1) under the ordinary rule the agent must show that the engagement originally obtained was obtained through his introduction, & that subsequent engagements were so connected with the original engagement that they flowed from it; (2) the parties in this case by making an express agreement had intended to settle any question as to how far subsequent engagements were the result of the original introduction, by stipulating that all future engagements at the O. Music-hall should be treated as referable to the first engagement; (3) the new music-hall was identifiable with the old music-hall, notwithstanding the change of proprietorship & alteration in its outward form; (4) deft. was liable.—AUCKLAND & BRUNETTI v. COLLINS (1898), 14 T. L. R. 348.

1736. — — — Firm of agents dissolved.]—Deft., in Aug., 1911, gave a commission note to S. & R., who were in partnership as theatrical agents, authorising them to act as her agents & business managers for 5 years with the option of a further 5 years, & agreeing to pay a commission of 10 per cent. on all salaried work undertaken by her. S. & R. dissolved partnership in July, 1912:—Held: the commission note did not entitle them to claim commission in respect of engagements on salaries obtained by deft. after the dissolution of their partnership.—SALES v. CRISPI (1913), 29 T. L. R. 491.

1737. Transaction not similar—Assignment of lease following sale.]—Deft., being possessed of a leasehold house, & also of certain building land likewise held on lease, the former of which was subject to an annual rent of 75 guineas, & the latter to a rent of £50, & also to a covenant to lay out a certain sum in building, employed pltf., an estate agent, to dispose of the whole for him, upon the terms of commission mentioned in a printed paper, as follows: "For the sale of property by private contract—On the first £100, £5 per cent. (& in no case less than £5); from £100 to £5,000, 2½ per cent.; from £5,000 to £10,000, 1½ per cent.; on the sum exceeding £10,000, 1 per cent. For letting, or disposal of the leases of, estates or houses—Unfurnished, £5 per cent. on one year's rent, & £5 per cent. on the premium or sum obtained for fixtures, furniture, etc.; on lease, £5 per cent. on the first year's rent, & 2½ per cent. on the second year's rent, & £5 per cent. on premium or sum obtained for fixtures, etc.—Furnished, £5 per cent. on the entire rental (not exceeding 12 months), but in no case (whether furnished or unfurnished) less than one guinea.—On letting building-land—one year's standing ground-rent. For large estates, one-half year's ground-rent." Pltf. having disposed of the premises to one M. for £1,300, the two leases were assigned to M. subject to the covenants for payment of the rents, etc.:—Held: pltf. was only entitled to a commission on the £1,300 under the first branch of the printed scale, viz., 5 per cent. on the first £100, & 2½ per cent. upon the remainder, & not to a further commission on the amount of the yearly rent, under the second branch of the scale.—BIGGS v. GORDON (1860), 8 C. B. N. S. 638; 141 E. R. 1316.

1737 l. Transaction not similar—Charterparty differing from original one.]—By charterparty negotiated by a firm of shipbrokers, it was stipulated that a vessel should be hired for six months at £330 per month, with options to the charterers (1) to cancel the charter on the expiration of the first month, & (2) to continue it for a further period of six months, & that commission of two-thirds of 5 per cent. on the estimated amount of freight should be payable to the shipbrokers. About six weeks before the expiration of the first six months the charterers intimated to the owners direct that they would not continue the vessel at same rate of hire, & ultimately after negotiations between the charterers & the owners, acting without the intervention of the shipbrokers, a new charterparty was executed. This charterparty was substantially the same as the first, with the exceptions (1) that the rate of hire for the first six months was £220 per month with an option to the charterers of continuing the charter for another six months at £225 per month; (2) that there was no option to cancel at the end of the first month; & (3) that there was no brokerage clause:—Held: (1) the second charterparty was not a renewal or continuation of the first, but was a separate & independent contract, & was not a contract which was within the contemplation of the parties when the first contract was entered into; & (2) the shipbrokers were not entitled to charge any commission in respect of it.—*DAWSON BROTHERS v. wise of " an estate, " & if the same shall be sold B. shall pay to A., 2½ per cent. on the amount of such sale, such commission to cover all expenses of every description. In case the said estate shall not be sold, B. shall pay to A. £25 as a compensation for his trouble & expense." A. advertised the estate for sale by auction & put it up for sale, but it was not sold then. B. wrote to A. to withdraw the sale of the estate for the present, as he had arranged a loan on it, being at the time himself in treaty with C. for the sale of it, who shortly afterwards bought it. C. found out about its being for sale through seeing the advertisements, & he attended the auction & learnt from A. that it was not sold:—Held: A. was entitled to his commission on the purchase-money as the relation between buyer & seller had been brought about through him.—GREEN v. BARTLETT (1863), 14 C. B. N. S. 681; 2 New Rep. 279; 32 L. J. C. P. 261; 8 L. T. 503; 10 Jur. N. S. 78; 11 W. R. 834.

1739. — Sale following letting.—In order to found a legal claim for commission on a sale, there must not only be a causal, but also a contractual relation between the introduction of the purchaser & the ultimate transaction of sale.

Deft. in 1880, being tenant for life of a settled estate, applied to pltf. to let it, & received from him a scale of charges for both selling & letting estates, which contained a note that when property was let to a tenant who afterwards became the purchaser, the commission on selling would be charged, less the amount of commission paid for letting. Deft. put the paper into his pocket without reading it. A tenant was found by pltf. who took the property on lease. In 1884 deft., who had acquired power to sell the estate under Settled Land Act, 1882 (c. 38), sold the estate to the tenant without the intervention of pltf. In an action by pltf. for commission as on a sale less the previous commission paid:—Held: (1) pltf. was simply employed to let; (2) he was not entitled to commission on the subsequent sale.—TOULMIN v. MILLAR (1887), 12 App. Cas. 746; 57 L. J. Q. B. 301; 58 L. T. 96; 3 T. L. R. 836, II. L.

1740. — — — — ——Pltfs. set up an oral contract that in respect of the letting of a property they should receive 5 per cent. commission on the rent, & in case of a sale, 5 per cent. on the first £1,000, 2½ per cent. up to £5,000, & 1½ per cent. on the residue. Pltfs. introduced C. to defts. & tried to bring about a purchase. C., instead, took a 7 years' lease on which defts. paid the commission, & after being 15 months in possession he bought the property from defts.:—Held: there was no evidence to leave to a jury that pltfs. procured the sale, so as to be entitled to commission on it.

The right to commission does not arise out of the mere fact that the agents have introduced a tenant or a purchaser. It is not sufficient to show that the introduction was a causa sine qua non. It is necessary to show that the introduction was an efficient cause in bringing about the letting or the sale. Pltfs. have failed to establish what is a condition precedent to their right to commission,—viz., that they brought about the sale (COLLINS, 1741. — — — — ——In 1908 pltf., a house agent, was employed by deft. to find a tenant for a house at a rent of £120 a year, or a purchaser for £2,500. Pltf. found a tenant who took the house for a term of 3 years with the option of continuing the tenancy for 5 or 7 years at the rent of £110 a year, & he was paid commission on the letting. At the end of the 3 years the tenant, as a condition of his continuing the tenancy for a further term, required deft. to build an addition to the house. Deft. refused to do so, & thereupon the question of purchasing the house arose, & deft. agreed to sell it to the tenant's wife for £1,900. Pltf. after the original letting had nothing to do with the negotiations which led up to the sale. Pltf. sued deft. in the city. ct. to recover commission on the sale. The judge found that, though pltf. introduced the property to the tenant & his wife, that introduction was not the effective cause of the subsequent sale, & he gave judgment for deft.:—Held: the city. ct. judge had applied the proper test, & had found against pltf.'s claim upon evidence which entitled him so to find, & his decision must be affirmed.—*NIGHTINGALE v. 1742. Transaction similar.—Charter of further ships.—L., a shipbroker, informed S. & Co., shipbrokers, of two steamships belonging to the G. Co., as available for the purposes of a foreign Govt. S. & Co. communicated this information to P., the authorised agent of the foreign Govt., & P. in the first instance chartered one of the ships for his Govt. for 6 months. This charter was continued for another 6 months without communication with L., at the expiration of which time a renewed charterparty was entered into for another 6 months, S. & Co. receiving their commission on these transactions, the original charterparty containing no provision as to renewal. P. subsequently, & without communication with L., chartered the other ship also on behalf of his Govt., S. & Co. receiving their commission, & they paid to L. his commission, according to agreement between them on the charter of the first ship for the first 6 months. In an action by the assignees of L. against S. & Co. for broker's commission on the charter of both these ships, L. gave evidence, written & verbal, of an agreement between himself & S. & Co., under which he claimed to be entitled to half of the commission to be received by S. & Co. on the charter of both ships, & tendered evidence of a custom among brokers by which he as "introducing broker" would be entitled to share commission on a renewal of the charter without any special agreement to that effect:—Held: (1) there was evidence for the jury that the agreement made respecting the first ship applied to the other also, & the question whether it did so apply ought to have been left to the jury; (2) the evidence as to the alleged custom was admissible.—ALAN v. SUNDIUS (SUNDIUS) (1862), 1 H. & C. 123; 31 L. J. Ex. 307; 6 L. T. 359; 10 W. R. 648; 1 Mar. L. C. 222.

1743. — Further lease.—Pltf., a house agent, found a tenant for deft.'s furnished house, his terms being "Upon letting furnished houses on the rent for any period, £5 per cent." Deft. wrote to pltf. that he had agreed with the tenant, "From July 1, 1869, to Apr. 1, 1870, 300 guineas; or 350 guineas if taken on to May 1"; the tenant "to have the option of taking the house on from Apr. 1 for another year for 470 guineas." In the agreement afterwards drawn up by pltf. there was no mention of the option to take on for another year at all. Before the end of the 9 months' tenancy deft. & the tenant, through the intervention of another house agent, & without any communication with pltf., agreed for another year's occupation from Apr. 1 for 450 guineas. The custom of the trade was proved to be that a house agent received commission upon the rent of a furnished house from year to year so long as the tenant to whom he let occupied the house. Pltf. was paid commission upon the rent of the following year:—Held: (1) a house agent can claim commission only on rent obtained as a proximate consequence of his act; (2) this is to be generally ascertained from the agreement he has himself prepared; (3) an option to take on a house is not exercised if the tenancy be continued upon an agreement for a different rent obtained through the intervention of another house agent; (4) a trade custom to pay commission in such circumstances was irrational & bad; (5) pltf. was rightly consulted.—CURTIS v. NIXON (1871), 24 L. T. 706.

1744. — Further orders.]—Pltf. was employed to obtain orders for defts.' goods on the terms of receiving commission on all future business between defts. & the customers introduced. In 1877 pltf. obtained two orders from H., but H. gave no further orders to defts. till Nov., 1881. The later orders were given on the introduction of, & for the purpose of assisting, H.'s nephew. Pltf. claimed commission on these orders:—Held: (1) commission was only payable on future business which was the result of the introduction by pltf.; (2) the business with H., which was the result of the introduction by pltf., ceased in 1877; (3) pltf. was not entitled to commission on the later orders, which were not the result of pltf.'s prior introduction.—BOYD v. TOVIL PAPER CO., LTD. (1888), 4 T. L. R. 332, C. A.

1745. Transaction not similar—Sale following letting.]—Pltfs., who were instructed by deft. to sell or let a house, introduced T., who became tenant, & received commission on T.'s introduction. T. purchased the house through another firm of agents. T. had had some dispute with pltfs. & had refused to negotiate for the purchase of the house through them, but the price which he paid was the price at which pltfs. had been instructed to sell the house. Pltfs. claimed commission on the sale:—Held: pltfs. not entitled, as the sale had not been brought about by their introduction, but was the result of independent action on the part of T.—GILLOW & CO. v. ABERDARE (LORD) (1892), 9 T. L. R. 12, C. A.

D. Where Transaction completed differs from that contemplated.

1746. Agent to procure loan on special terms—Loan procured on different terms.]—If B. is employed to procure money for A. upon certain terms, & does not procure it upon those terms, but upon other & different terms, then A. will not be liable to him for commission. Nor can B., in such case, claim to recover a reasonable remuneration for trouble & labour, for he has not done what he was employed to do.—MASON v. CLIFTON (BART.) (1863), 3 F. & F. 899.

PART VIII. SECT. 3, SUB-SECT. 1. D.

TUTCHEN v. STUBBS (1888), 6 L. R. 322, —N.Z.

1. Agent to sell Third party taking lease with option to buy.]—Deft. employed pltf. to sell his station property to S., an adjoining owner, for £5 an acre. Pltf. for fifteen months endeavoured so to do, but S. refused to offer more than £1 10s. an acre; pltf. continued to endeavour to induce S. to purchase; deft. then told pltf. he had decided to sell the property as a going concern. S. subsequently bought deft.'s stock & agreed to lease the land with an option of purchase at £5 5s. an acre, at which price he afterwards bought:—Held: pltf. entitled to commission.—RYAN v. HORTON (1911), 12 C. L. R. 197.—AUS.

2. — — —.]—Deft. with knowledge of the fact that pltf. was a land agent placed his house & lot in pltf.'s hands. Pltf. introduced M. as a prospective purchaser & after some discussion M. took a lease of the house with an option to purchase within a year. M. elected to purchase within the year & pltf. brought an action for commission:—Held: the contractual relation between vendor & purchaser directly resulted from pltf.'s efforts & he was entitled to his commission.—Toulmin v. Millar (1888), 58 L. T. 96, apl.; Rimmer v. Knowles (1874), 30 L. T. 496; Green v. Bartlett (1863), 14 C. B. N. S. 581; Bayley v. Chadwick (1879), 39 L. T. 429; *Mansell v. 3. — — —.]—Where an agent is employed to sell land, his remuneration being a commission on the amount of purchase-money, he does not earn commission by introducing a person who does not become a purchaser, but takes a lease with a purchasing option.—

k. — Third party becoming monthly tenant.]—In an action to recover commission, it appeared that pltf., an estate agent, introduced a purchaser who agreed to the terms upon which the agent was authorised to offer the property. The purchaser entered into possession under a verbal contract, paid a deposit of £50, but refused to sign a contract, & the sale fell through on grounds which did not clearly appear. The deposit was returned & the purchaser remained in possession as a monthly tenant:—Held: there was sufficient evidence to justify the ct. in finding for pltf.—VAUGHAN v. FOSTER & SON, LTD. (1917), 17 N. S. W. St. R. 281; 34 N. S. W. W. N. 103.—AUS.

l. — Procuring exchange of land.]—Pltfs., real estate agents, listed deft.'s property for sale, & introduced to him a probable purchaser, who afterwards arranged an exchange of some of his lots for deft.'s property:—Held: pltfs. entitled to one-half the commission they would have earned if they had effected a sale of the property.—THORNTON v. JONES, THORNTON v. HEGLE (1907) 7 W. L. R. 106; 17 Man. L. R. 295.—CAN.

m. — — —.]—Deft. gave instructions to pltf. in these words: "You are hereby authorised to sell my property as described below, & should a sale be effected by you or through your instrumentality I agree to pay you a commission of 2½ per cent. on £1,000 & 1½ on the balance of the purchase money." The instructions ended, "Exchange price to be arranged." At a later date the price was thus stated, "Price, £24 per acre for exchange, cash £22 per acre":—Held: (1) the authority given was to sell & not to exchange; (2) commission was not earned by effecting an exchange, but pltf. was entitled to recover, as upon a quantum meruit, for his work & labour in connection with the exchange.—LANE v. LOVELOCK (1914), 33 N. Z. L. R. 826.—N.Z.

n. — Selling other property not listed.]—Deft. listed a coal-yard with pltf., a real estate agent, for sale. Pltf. introduced a prospective purchaser, but he declined the purchase & ultimately purchased another coal-yard from deft.:—Held: pltf. not entitled to commission.—MOODY v. KETTLE (1913), 24 O. W. R. 676; 4 O. W. N. 1410; 11 D. L. R. 844.—CAN.

o. Agent to sell by lots—Sale in bulk.]—Though a contract for sale was based upon lots, & the property was sold by the agent in bulk, the latter may recover the customary commission upon each lot.—BOUSQUET v. MICHAEL (1915), Q. R. 48 S. C. 5.—CAN.

p. Agent to sell on terms—Subsequent alteration of terms.]—Deft. placed his property in the hands of several estate agents for sale. Pltf., who was not known to deft. to be a real estate agent & had no office as such, asked the terms & subsequently brought a purchaser, to whom deft. said he would require a larger cash payment than pltf. had been told. Eventually the purchaser proposed to pay cash down half the amount required by deft. & the balance in six months, to which deft. agreed:—Held: pltf. entitled to commission.—WILKES v. MAXWELL (1901), 24 C. L. T. 150; 14 Man. L. R. 599.—CAN.

q. — — —.]—Deft. agreed with pltf. "In the event of your making a sale of the M. hotel, I will agree to sell at $50,000 net to me, $20,000 cash, balance in one & two years, 6 per cent. interest. Anything over & above you may retain as commission." Pltf. introduced F., & an agreement was drawn up on different terms, deft. assenting to the alterations:—Held: the alterations did not deprive pltf. of his right to commission nor postpone the date of payment of the commission 1747. Transaction completed substantially same as that contemplated.]—JOHNSTON v. KERSHAW, No. 1190, ante.

For full anns., see S. C. No. 1190, ante.

1748. —.]—Deft. instructed pltf., a surveyor, to sell an estate, & agreed to give him £50 if he obtained a purchaser at £2,000. Afterwards deft. raised his price to £3,000, & pltf. found for him a builder, who, in his evidence, said he & deft. agreed that he should purchase the land. He was to take it on interest at £3,000, £150 a year; & he signed a lease for 999 years, giving him occupation, & option to complete purchase during 20 years. Pltf. sued deft. in a cty. ct. for his commission, & upon evidence of these facts, the judge nonsuited him:—Held: (1) these facts substantially constituted a purchase; (2) pltf. was entitled to recover the agreed amount of commission.—RIMMER v. KNOWLES (1874), 30 L. T. 496; 22 W. R. 574.

1749. Transaction completed not within agent's authority.]—Pltfs., having been instructed to let deft.'s house on a 3 years' agreement, gave an order to view it to a person to whom deft. sold the lease. In an action brought by pltfs. to recover their commission on the purchase-money the cty. ct. judge left it to the jury to find if deft. authorised pltfs. to sell the lease, & the jury found he had not & judgment was given for deft. On a motion to set aside verdict & judgment:—Held: (1) the contract of sale was not brought about by pltfs.; (2) pltfs. set up an express authority to sell, which was found against them, & they could not insist that it should have been left to the jury to find an implied authority to sell.—GRIFFIN v. CHEESEWRIGHT (1885), 2 T. L. R. 99.

1750. Whether transaction completed was within contemplation of parties.]—Deft., being desirous of forming a syndicate to purchase certain patents, agreed with pltf. to pay him commission upon the introduction of any person willing to subscribe £1,000 at the rate of 10 per cent. in cash out of the proceeds of the syndicate as & when received, & 90 per cent. out of the proceeds of the purchase-money in shares or cash, as might be arranged after the allotment. By a subsequent agreement deft. agreed in the event of pltf. introducing anyone to complete the syndicate to hand to pltf. further shares representing £1,000. Pltf. introduced two persons, who each subscribed £500. With the object of keeping the capital of the syndicate as low as possible, the amount of individual subscriptions was limited to £500, & deft. made a supplemental agreement under which commission was to be paid as on a subscription of £1,000, but the commission payable out of the purchase-money was to be calculated pro rata to the amount eventually agreed upon & then earned, which was payable on the execution of the agreement & the payment of the cash instalment. Green v. Bartlett (1863), 14 C. B. N. S. 681; Tribe v. Taylor (1876), 1 C. P. s. —.]—Where a real estate agent undertakes the sale of land under certain conditions, which are subsequently varied with the approval of the vendor & such agent, the latter can only claim the customary commission, & not that originally agreed to. It is not necessary to be a real estate agent to have the right to recover such commission.—LANGELIER v. ROY (1915), Q. R. 24 K. B. 171; 22 R. L. N. S. 123.—CAN.

t. —.]—Deft. authorised pltfs. to sell a threshing outfit for £2,000, £200 cash & balance by instalments for four years, commission £200. L. on pltfs. introduction went down to W. where the outfit was inspected & & refused as the price was too high, & pltfs. wrote deft. urging him to see L. soon, as he was likely to buy. Deft. went to L. & concluded a bargain with him for £1,825, L. paying £100 down:—Held: pltfs. had found a purchaser, though not quite on the terms authorised, & were entitled, on a quantum meruit basis, to 10 per cent. commission on £1,825.—MILESTONE LAND & LOAN AGENCY CO. v. LUCKSINGER (1908) 7 W. L. R. 497; 1 Sask. L. R. 61.—CAN.

u. —.]—Agents to procure a purchaser of deft.'s land on commission on the terms that the purchaser should give security, if only $1,000 was paid in cash, sued to recover commission:—Held: they were not entitled as they had not procured a purchaser on the terms agreed.—MILLAR & ROSS v. NAPIER (1910), 14 W. L. R. 335.—CAN.

v. —.]—An estate agent, employed to sell land at a defined price & on defined terms is not entitled to commission by procuring an offer to

w. Agent to sell at stated price -- Sale at lower price.]—Where an agent had been engaged to find a purchaser at a certain price & having failed to do so was not entitled to a commission on the sale subsequently made to the person originally introduced by him at a lower price, & where, prima facie, the agreement was to pay a commission on a named price:—Held: it was for the agent to show in the clearest way that the intention of the parties was to pay a commission on any sum at which a sale might be effected.—BRIDGMAN v. HERNUM (1908), 42 S. C. R. 228; 13 B. C. R. 389; 8 W. L. R. 28.—CAN.

z. Shipbroker -- Variation in terms of charterparty.]—A shipbroker, who brings parties together resulting in a charterparty, is entitled to his commission even though the negotiations between the parties result in better terms for the shipowner. A change in the terms does not justify the inference that the broker was not the efficient cause of the charterparty.—BACKMAN v. RITCEY (1910), 50 N. S. R. 80.—CAN.

1749 i. Transaction completed not within agent's authority.]—Pltf. had authority to sell certain shares, but after several unsuccessful attempts to sell pltf. & defts. agreed to sell to M. & I., & pltf.'s authority thus terminated. Immediately after this agreement pltf. called on one of defts., intimating that J., with whom pltf. had previously been in treaty, wanted the refusal of the shares, & as a result, M. & I. suspended their agreement for fourteen days to enable pltf. to effect the sale, & defts. called to pltf. giving instructions as to terms of sale. Pltf. concluded a sale with J., but the arrangement was not within the terms prescribed by the cable:—Held: pltf. had not effected a sale in accordance with the terms of his authority as agent, & was not entitled to commission or remuneration for his services.—MERRITT v. CORBOULD (1913), 24 W. L. R. 68; 4 W. W. R. 148; 11 D. L. R. 143.—CAN.

1749 iii. — — — — —.]—Pltf. having agreed for a commission of $200 to find a purchaser of deft.'s farm at $6,000, $1,000 to be paid in cash, found a purchaser at $6,000, who paid only $500 cash, but deft. accepted & sold to him, & after the sale promised to pay pltf. the $200:—Held: deft. having accepted & dealt with the purchaser found by pltf., though not such purchaser as the agreement called for, pltf. was entitled to recover.—WYCOTT v. CAMPBELL (1871), 31 U. C. R. 583.—CAN.

1750 i. Whether transaction completed was within contemplation of parties.]—S. was introduced by an agent to his principal as a prospective purchaser of land. S. was endeavouring to buy on behalf of a co. in the organisation of which he was interested. Later the co. purchased, & the principal had admitted the agent's right to commission "in the event of a sale made by or through him." In an action for commission:—Held: agent entitled to his commission.—Burshell v. Gowrie & Blockhouse Collieries, [1910] A. C. 614, cited.—MCBRAYNE v. IMPERIAL LOAN CO. (1913) 28 O. R. 653; 4 O. Co. with defts., defts. contended that in order to entitle pltf. to commission, not only must the final contract order have been sent from a T. office, but the advertising must also have originated in pltf.'s territory:—Held: the final contract having been completed by E. Co. & delivered to defts. at T., pltf. entitled to commis-

the original sum intended to be asked, say £80,000. The syndicate was about to fall through when W., who was not a member of the syndicate, found capital to float a new co. which proved successful. Pltf. claimed (1) commission at the rate of 10 per cent. on £1,500, the amount of subscriptions procured by him for the syndicate; (2) shares to the value of £1,000 in the new co.; (3) £472 10s., being the pro rata calculation of the difference between £80,000 & £21,000, the price paid to deft. by the new co.:—Held: (1) the formation of the two cos. was within the contemplation of the parties; (2) plf. was entitled to recover.—WILLETT v. McLEAN (1891), 8 T. L. R. 10.

1751. Transaction amounting to new contract.]—Pltf. introduced R. to deft. as purchaser of his business. Deft. agreed to sell the business to R. for £17,000, a deposit of £5,000 was to be made, & the purchase was to be completed on Jan. 18, 1891. The agreement for purchase provided that if R. should resell to a co. R. might satisfy £3,000 of his purchase-money by giving deft. fully-paid shares in the co. to that amount. Pltf. then received a commission in the following terms: "In consideration of your having introduced to me a purchaser of the above premises for £17,000, I hereby agree to pay the sum of £750 on the completion of the purchase." No deposit was ever paid, & it was waived & the time for completion extended. After the formation of the co. it was agreed between deft. & R. that £10,000 of the purchase-money should be paid by debentures & preference shares of the co. &

that the balance should be paid in cash. Thereupon deft. conveyed his business to the co. Pltf. claimed commission under the above commission note:—Held: (1) the subsequent agreement between deft. & R. amounted to a new contract; (2) pltf. were not entitled to recover.

A particular purchase cannot be said to be completed when the vendor does not get the purchase-money agreed on (LINDLEY, L.J.).—BATTAMS v. TOMPKINS (1892), 8 T. L. R. 707, C. A.

1752. Transaction completed merely ancillary to that contemplated.]—Defts. desired to acquire some public-houses in a particular district & agreed to pay pltf. commission on all licensed property they might purchase through his introduction. Defts. abandoned that idea, & instead promoted a new co. which ultimately acquired certain licensed property originally brought to the notice of defts. by pltf.:—Held: as the new co. was merely ancillary to the old, the commission was payable by defts.—*GUNN v. 1750 iii. —.] Pltf. claimed 10 per cent. commission on the sale price of an undivided half-interest in an English land co. Deft. agreed to pay pltf. 10 per cent. on all such sales as should be effected through parties introduced to deft. by pltf. Pltf. introduced F., who obtained an option & subsequently promoted a co. in England, which purchased the property:—Held: pltf. entitled to commission, notwithstanding the sale to the co. was not the kind of sale in contemplation when the agreement was made. *Burchell v.
